I agree with everything which has been said as to the desirability of breaking down the monopoly in farm machinery, but I insist that the proper way to do it is through the enforcement of laws which are on the Federal statute books and on the statute books of nearly every State in the Union—by antitrust proceedings. I am very happy to see that under the present Assistant Attorney General in charge of such matters, Hon. Thurman Arnold, the Federal Government is finally making great progress in that regard.

However, Mr. President, the fact that a monopoly exists and the fact that somebody ought to be prosecuted under the antitrust laws of the United States are no justification for the principle that free American labor should be subjected to the competition of convict labor. Therefore, it seems to me that we must do one of two things—either we must use the control of Congress over interstate commerce to prohibit the movement in interstate commerce of the products of felon labor or we must remove any control over the matter and permit free competition.

I was one of those who received a telegram from Mr. Thatcher in which he said he was angered by the report of the conferees. I wish to say only this: Many years ago, before I came to the Senate, I read a book about Mr. Thatcher. I took the trouble to pay for the book myself. I saw it advertised. It was on a subject in which I was very much interested, namely, the welfare of agriculture, particularly in connection with the operations of the Hoover Farm Board, of odious and ill-fated memory. As I recall, I paid $3.50 for the book, which recounted the history of the operations of one of the subsidiaries of the Farm Board, a so-called grain cooperative in Minneapolis, I believe. I discovered that Mr. Thatcher had received a salary of $50,000 a year. The amount was so large that it startled me. He received a salary of $50,000 a year for practically wrecking the grain production of the Northwest. I suggest that the farmers of Missouri and of the United States will not be greatly concerned by the anger at the conferees or at Congress of a horny-handed toiler who manages to make $50,000 a year for being a professional farmer.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from West Virginia whether or not we are to have a record vote. If we are not to have a record vote, I wish the RECORD to show that I am in favor of the bill.

Mr. NEELY. I think there will be a record vote.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I think we are all agreed that goods manufactured by convict labor should not be sold generally in interstate commerce. I was interested in what the Senator from Missouri said about a book he had read some time ago, which mentioned Mr. Thatcher and others. I happen to know something about the author of that book, inasmuch as he used to live in North Dakota. I happen to know that he tried very hard to get into the cooperative association as one of its officials. He was turned down because the cooperative knew of his past record. Apparently he then got in with the grain crowd and wrote the book about the cooperatives and the Farm Board.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not know the man who wrote the book. I had never heard of him before. I saw the advertisement of the book in either The Nation or The New Republic, and sent for the book. I was particularly intrigued by the amount of salary which this horny-handed farmer, Mr. Thatcher, was said to have received, which I understand has never been denied. The salary reminds me of what my little boy said when he first saw Niagara Falls. I went up there a few years ago to make a speech. I took him along with me, thinking that he would be properly impressed with the majesty of Niagara Falls. When we arrived at the spot I said to him, "Son, what do you think of that?" He said, "Nifty." [Laughter.] I think a horny-handed farmer who makes $50,000 a year representing the subsidiary of a Government corporation is receiving a "nifty" salary.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Missouri has forgotten something about the particulars of the book. I do not think it was Mr. Thatcher who received the $50,000. As I remember, it was a Mr. Huff, who was head of the Grain Corporation at Chicago at that time. I am not by any means upholding such high salaries paid to officials in the cooperative associations. I do not give any particular credit to the book because, as I say, I happen to know the author of it. He was the same man who afterward edited the Dr. Townsend papers. I understand that he got into trouble because he could not keep his accounts straight and was let out of that position.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me say to the Senator from North Dakota that I did not know the man who wrote the book. I was simply impressed by some facts which were easily subject to verification, about the salaries which were paid, and about the effect of the operations of the corporation on the grain market. I took the trouble to verify the statements in the book as to the fall in the price of grain following the establishment of the corporation. The situation was very striking.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the question of the sale in interstate commerce of goods manufactured by convict labor has been discussed many times. As the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] stated, we thought it was pretty well taken care of by a law passed by Congress a few years ago, which prevented contracts being made between prison authorities and certain manufacturers or companies which wanted to handle the goods and make money out of them. The law gave the States the authority to forbid prison-manufactured products from coming into the States if the States so desired. I think that law took care of the situation fairly well.

In some States convicts work on the roads. Of course, in so doing, they come into direct competition with free labor. As has been stated by one or two Members of the Senate, some of the States, especially in the South, have large farms, on which are located sugar factories or cotton-processing plants for the manufacture of goods from farm products. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] made the statement that he thought sugar would be included as a farm product, and exempted. If sugar is to be exempted, why not cotton shirts and woolen blankets, because they too are made from farm products? I do not know whether or not the Senator's interpretation is correct; but if we are to exempt farm products or products manufactured from farm products, it seems to me we should also exempt binder twine and farm machinery, because they are sold for the benefit of farmers. In North Dakota our binder twine factory in the penitentiary has saved us thousands of dollars in the price of our twine. The factory has not only furnished a fairly good grade of twine at a cheap price, but it has had the effect of regulating the price. We know that the Government, the States, and the municipalities have regulated the price of electricity by means of municipally owned, State-owned, and federally owned plants; and we think great good has been accomplished in regulating the price of electricity.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator does not understand that there is anything in the bill which prohibits the State of North Dakota from maintaining in its penitentiary a factory for the manufacture of binder twine for sale in the State of North Dakota, does he?

Mr. FRAZIER. No.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator says that the factory has saved the people of North Dakota thousands of dollars in the price of binder twine, by setting up a local yardstick. The Senator used the power question as an analogy. That yardstick may still exist. The only thing which is prohibited is the sale of such products in interstate commerce. The bill would prohibit the State of North Dakota from entering into commercial business, and selling its binder twine across the boundaries of North Dakota. Does not the Senator so understand the conference report?

Mr. FRAZIER. It is true that in North Dakota we have only a small population; and we have only a small population in our State penitentiary. We do not manufacture enough binder twine to meet the needs of our farmers. We buy some outside the State, of course. We have not the money to put in a farm-machinery factory. We buy some of the farm machinery manufactured in the State penitentiary in Minnesota. That factory has the effect of stabilizing prices to a great extent. I am satisfied in my own mind that farm machinery in general would now be selling at much higher prices if it were not for factories such as that in the Minnesota State Penitentiary. It has had a wholesome effect in that way.

The same thing applies to other products. Personally I think that, if farm products are to be exempted in the bill, binder twine and farm machinery should also be exempted. We have no Government-owned plant manufacturing farm machinery to fix the price. Sometimes I think such a plant would be a good thing; but if anything of that kind were even advocated, it would immediately be called communism, or something worse. It seems to me something must be done either to regulate the prices of the products which the farmer must buy or to regulate the prices of the products which the farmer has to sell in order to give him a purchasing power. We need lower prices for the products that we have to buy unless we can get better prices for the products we have to sell.

As stated by the Senator from Minnesota, 40 or 50 years ago farmers could buy binders for $90 or $100, but now they cost nearly three times that amount. The prices of farm products are practically the same today as they were 40 or 50 years ago, and in some cases prices are even lower, although it costs more to produce them.

Little things in the States in the Middle West, such as the manufacture of binder twine and farming machinery in the penitentiaries, have helped our farmers a good deal while they are getting lower prices for their farm products, just as in the South, undoubtedly, the opportunity to sell the farm commodities produced on prison farms has helped to take care of and support penitentiaries. It has had that effect in my State also. The binder-twine factory has made a little money for the penitentiary. I am aware it has not paid the prison workers much—50 or 60 cents a day I think the amount is—but it has given them labor, something to do, something to occupy their minds; it has been a good thing for them. We do not allow men in our prisons to go out on the road; that has not been popular in North Dakota; but when one drives through the Southern States in a number of those States he can see men in striped suits on the roads, sometimes accompanied by a guard with a rifle on his shoulder watching them.

There are so many angles to this situation that it seems to me, if we are going to pass the bill at all with the exemptions it contains, we should at least include the amendments which were put in by the House of Representatives to exempt binder twine and farm machinery; and I hope some Senator will make a motion to send the conference report back to conference with instructions to put in those amendments which were adopted by the House and stricken out by the Senate committee.

As I understand from the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], he was one of the conferees who did not sign the report; and I notice from the report that only three of the five conferees on the part of the House signed it, so it is not a unanimous report by any means, but was agreed to merely by a bare majority. It has been stated that this bill was on the Senate Calendar for several months or weeks and was finally passed unanimously. I do not recall how long after it was placed on the calendar it was passed, but it was objected to repeatedly, because there was opposition to it, and it was finally passed when those who were interested did not happen to be present.

The House put in the amendments which were wanted here by those who objected to the bill as it was reported from the committee. So we hope that it will go back to conference and that those particular amendments which were put in by the House will be included in the conference report.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I very much regret that I cannot support the conference report. I think my record in the Senate will demonstrate that I have been an ardent supporter of labor legislation; but it seems to me very unfortunate that a majority of the conferees who prepared the report should have been able to provide for the situation confronting the southern prison industries that produce processed agricultural commodities, but did not find themselves in a position to accept the amendment contained in the House bill with regard to the manufacture of binder twine and farm machinery.

In order to understand the reaction of farmers with regard to this proposed legislation, it is necessary to bear in mind that these State prison manufacturing plants for binder twine and farm machinery were established primarily in order to provide a check against the extortionate prices charged by the manufacturers of binder twine and of farm machinery. Those who have made any study of the prices of binder twine and of farm machinery know that they are what the economists call "sticky" prices. Farm machinery has remained comparatively upon a very high level so far as the price structure is concerned, despite the economic depression through which the country has been passing since 1929. It is estimated that the price saving to Wisconsin farmers in the 25 years the binder-twine plant has been operating at the State prison amounts to $100,000 a year, or $2,500,000 during that period of time.

Mr. President, there is a similar situation so far as farm machinery is concerned. As has already been pointed out in the debate, the price of farm machinery has been at a very high level. But the minute percentage of production at the Minnesota plant has had a very helpful effect in that area in tending to check and to reduce those prices. Therefore, I hope some motion will be presented to return the bill to conference with instructions to the Senate conferees to accept the House amendments.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator, of course, is familiar with the fact that the House has already acted on the conference report, and therefore a motion to recommit is not in order. It would be simply a question of voting down the conference report, which would be a vote to kill the legislation.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if that is the parliamentary situation, I do not agree that the rejection of the conference report would kill the legislation, because it is always in order to request a further conference. After the motion for a further conference is carried, and before the appointment of conferees, it would be in order to instruct the Senate conferees to accept the House amendments as to binder twine and farm machinery. Certainly it would not take the conferees very long to get together if they were instructed to accept the House amendment. As we well know, when a similar situation occurred in the case of the conscription bill, it took the conferees but a very brief space of time to come together when they were instructed to agree.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator, of course, is familiar with the fact that in that case the Senate acted first on the conference report, and therefore a motion to recommit with instructions was in order. The motion made by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] was to recommit with instructions to accept the amendments of the other body. In this case a motion to recommit is clearly not in order. Therefore no instructions are possible, and rejection of the report would throw the bill back into the general channel of legislation, in which it has been struggling along now for a year and a half.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not for one moment agree with the Senator from Missouri that if the conference report were rejected, and if the Senate asked for a further conference, it could not be arranged before the week end is concluded, because it is obvious that if the report should be rejected, the Senate would instruct its conferees to accept the House amendment so far as these two particular products are concerned, and the legislation could be passed by early next week.

In connection with this matter, since the debate has practically covered the field, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks a memorandum in connection with this legislation sent to me by Col. John J. Hannan, who for a number of years was chairman of the Wisconsin State Board of Control, and numerous telegrams and communications which I have received from persons in Wisconsin who are vitally interested in this proposed legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In conclusion, I wish to say that I think one of the unfortunate effects of the failure of the conferees to take this particular situation into consideration is that it further tends to separate the farmers and the wage earners of the country.

MEMORANDUM—S. 3550, H. R. 10101

The title of each of these bills is "To make unlawful the transportation of convict-made goods in interstate commerce."

Their purpose would be more accurately described under a title "To soak the farmers for the benefit of the cordage and the farm-machinery manufacturers."

These bills originated with a group of binder-twine manufacturers, members of the cordage institute, but have been paraded before Congress behind a labor mask. The real beneficiaries of this proposed legislation are not workers but are binder-twine manufacturers.

The interstate transportation of convict-made goods in every line except twine and farm machinery has ceased because of legislation adopted by most of the States under authority of the Ashurst-Sumners Act in order to give effect to the Hawes-Cooper Act.

Eight State prisons manufacture binder twine, and only one farm machinery. These eight States are Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Wisconsin, Michigan, Missouri, Kansas, and Oklahoma. Minnesota is the only State prison manufacturing farm machinery.

Under the drive to make effective State inhibitions against open-market sales of convict-made goods, nearly all of the States have adopted legislation to prohibit transportation of prison-made goods into each such State. The law in a few States exempts binder twine and farm machinery from such inhibitions. Wisconsin is one such State.

For more than 20 years cordage interests have promoted national legislation to destroy State set-ups for production of prison-made binder twine. These cordage interests, like barnacles, attached themselves to the clothing, the shirt, and the foundry industries in their fight to eliminate prison production from competition in these fields with free labor.

In this contest it was possible to show instances where in some lines of manufacture prison production was marketed unfairly in competition with like goods made in free industry.

No such condition exists as to prison-manufactured binder twine.

WHY WERE PRISON MILLS ESTABLISHED?

The establishment of binder-twine mills in the prisons of several of the States was made through efforts of grain-producing farmers to protect themselves against extortionate prices of the twine used to bind grain. These mills have made an outstanding record of attainment of the objective responsible for their establishment.

Without taking any unfair advantage of competing free industry, prison binder-twine mills accomplished their purpose.

These mills are an effective stabilizing influence upon the price of binder twine.

During the existence of N. R. A. a convincing demonstration of the fairness of the operators of these prison mills was made when under the codes they sat together with the code authorities of the free-cordage industry. The prison mills willingly, in fact avidly accepted the wage and hour conditions of free industry.

The only differential they asked, and the competing free industry readily considered it to be justified, was a price differential to cover the lack of efficiency in the prison-operated mills. This price differential varied from one-half cent to about 1 cent per pound on binder twine. No complaint was made by private manufacturers that prison binder-twine manufacturers had "chiseled" in any particulars.

It is true a decline in the amount of twine sold by the free manufacturers has been experienced in this country. The same applies to the prison mills. There are two reasons for this: One, the introduction of the combine harvesting machine doing away with the need of binding grain, and, second, the increase in imports of foreign twine. In this wartime this latter reason has almost been eliminated except for the stock of foreign twine carried over from the imports made prior to the beginning of this war.

The manufacture in prison of twine was undertaken in the first instance not for the main purpose of giving prisoners employment but to protect agriculture, the fundamental industry of this country, against exploitation by a handful of binder-twine manufacturers. The same condition that justified its establishment in the first instance exists today. There are fewer free manufacturing plants producing binder twine than were in business 15 years ago. Also there are fewer State-operated binder-twine mills. The disappearance of some manufacturers from this field was not due to prison-made twine, but, in large measure, was due to the "squeeze" tactics of free industry, to change in harvesting processes and to the importation of foreign twine.

At the same time that these prison mills protected grain-producing farmers against extortion, employment was furnished to prisoners. These prison twine mills have not only been a source of labor and income to prisoners, but have produced substantial revenue to operating States. Through these revenues it has been possible in some instances either wholly, or in considerable part, to pay the cost of operating prison establishments.

Unfortunately for this presentation figures are not available from all States manufacturing binder twine to show what these publicly owned and operated prison activities have done for the States and for the prisoners.

In Minnesota in 26 years, it is estimated that the manufacture of binder twine and of farm machinery in its prison has brought revenue to the State of $20,000,000 and that over and above the cost of maintenance of prisoners in the past 10 years, the earnings of prisoners averaged $150,000 per year.

In addition to a saving made through the revenue from these prison industries during the 26-year period, it is estimated that on the use of binder twine from its State-owned mill, the farmers of Minnesota made an additional saving of $10,000,000.

In Wisconsin in a 25-year-operating period its prison binder twine mill, a very modest mill compared with that of Minnesota, turned into the general fund for inmate labor $696,530 and from the binder twine revolving fund, which is never permitted to exceed $600,000, the general fund has received $1,263,059.

In other words, the Wisconsin mill has brought into the treasury of that State $1,959,589. This does not include sums paid to prisoners personally.

It is estimated the actual savings to Wisconsin grain-producing farmers through the operation of the prison binder-twine mill at a minimum is in excess of $100,000 per year, or for the period covered it would mean a saving to the farmers on their binder twine of $2,500,000.

So experiences of these two States present the picture of benefits accruing from binder-twine mills operated in their prisons.

The picture of this industry and the social and economic effect it has in the giving of employment to prisoners and at the same time the giving of protection to farmers places its value on an entirely different basis than that of any other prison industry disposing its products on the open market.

Wisconsin has no private manufacture of binder twine within its borders. Every pound of the binder twine manufactured by the Wisconsin prison mill is sold within the confines of the State. Farmers in northwest Wisconsin, because located close to the Minnesota prison mill, buy binder twine from that mill, as the freight rate is less from Stillwater to points in the northwest of the State than from Waupun, Wis., which is situated a little south of the central part of Wisconsin.

To briefly present an additional picture of the benefits which prison industry confers upon the farmers, the Minnesota prison in 1940, has a wholesale price of $164, f. o. b. Stillwater, for its 7-foot binder. The competing machine sold by the International Harvester Co. is priced f. o. b. Chicago at $211, and by the John Deere Co. $211.25 f. o. b. Moline. While unable to present the retail prices of these machines, but considering the Minnesota mill operates on a 40-hour week and that the average pay of the prisoners employed in its farm-machinery mill is 27 cents an hour, this difference of $47 on each machine of this type is evidence that in those communities where the prison-made machinery is being shut away from the farmers, that the charge of extortionate prices and monopoly control is established.

The facts presented here establish that the prison production of binder twine and of farm machinery is an entirely different relationship than that of the production and marketing of shirts and overalls and other articles of like character which were cited in the charge of unfair competition and wrong done to labor by prison manufacture. Similar wrongs were never successfully established in the case of prison production of binder twine or farm machinery, but on the contrary not only have farmers benefited but the public has been protected as the lower price of the binder twine and farm machinery must lower the cost of the production of grain.

Notwithstanding the plain implications of statements made in Congress in support of this legislation, the language of the Hawes-Cooper Act or of the Ashurst-Sumners Act was not mandatory. Each was an act to provide certain rules with respect to transportation and sale of prison-made goods. These acts were to become effective only through the action of the States. Each State was free to adopt or not to adopt legislation to give effect to these acts of Congress. In the language of either of these statutes there is no compulsion placed upon the States. The Hawes-Cooper Act divests prison-made goods of interstate character provided such goods made in one State are sent into another State which has enacted a statute to give effect to the Hawes-Cooper Act. The Ashurst-Sumners Act provides penalties for the interstate transportation of prison-made goods or for offering for sale such goods on the open market, provided that such goods are received or offered for sale in violation of any law of such State or Territory.

The Federal law imposing penalties only becomes operative through a local law enacted to make the Hawes-Cooper Act and the Ashurst-Sumners Act effective within that State.

States that have refused to enact such legislation are as clearly within their legitimate sovereign rights as are those States which have enacted legislation to make effective the provisions of these statutes.

Neither the Hawes-Cooper Act nor the Ashurst-Sumners Act in language or declared purpose were amendatory of any constitutional power of a State. These acts placed within the power of each State to determine for itself whether it desired to limit its own right to ship or receive or sell or permit the sale in the open market within its own borders convict-made goods. However, the legislation proposed in S. 3550 and H. R. 10101 is broader than any heretofore offered in that it provides penalties for the transport of convict-made goods in interstate commerce.

There is no reference to "violation of a law of a State." This is as broad a prohibition as can be written into the statutes. It is not dependent upon the action of any State law. It is compulsory.

Heretofore legislation to limit prison industries was enacted with coating of honeyed words which won acceptance because the right of the State to act upon the transportation and disposition of prison goods, whether made within or without its borders, was safeguarded. This legislation denies discretion to the State and arbitrarily imposes the will of Congress.

Hon. ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. LA FOLLETTE: We are advised that bill—S. 3550—is to be considered by the Senate Tuesday afternoon, September 17. There are two primary reasons why we are opposed to this bill. First, we believe it is to the best interests of all concerned to keep those in our penal institutions occupied at some profitable labor, thereby cutting down expenses to the taxpayers. Also, when this labor is converted into producing such articles as binder twine, etc., that can be sold to the farmers at a lower price than they would otherwise have to pay, a saving is effected.

If there is any class of people that need help and consideration, we feel it is the farmers. They are not organized, like many other industries, and consequently do not get the recognition and support that other industries receive. The relationship between the price of farm products and farm machinery, etc., has changed very materially in the last few years. The prices of farm machinery, etc., have advanced a great deal more than the prices of farm products.

We represent an organization of Holstein breeders in Waukesha County and are expressing the sentiments of over 1,000 Holstein breeders. We hope and trust you will give this matter your careful thought and consideration.

Thanking you for your attention to this, we are,
Very truly yours,

Senator ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: My attention has been called to bill No. S. 3550. This bill if passed will prohibit the manufacture of commercial goods in prisons. I wish you would do everything in your power to stop this bill from being passed.

In the first place, here in the State of Wisconsin, our prisoners in the manufacture of twine have saved the taxpayers approximately $100,000 a year and have also saved the farmer a large amount of money on the cost of his twine.

While this may not be in line with labor organizations and the monopolists, I believe they need a little competition.

Furthermore, it would be an awful handicap to the States and to the prison authorities to keep discipline among so large a number of idle men. It would even be hard to keep them healthy while idle.

The farmers are certainly entitled to at least a few items at a more reasonable price and our prison goods here in the State of Wisconsin have been far more reasonable than goods manufactured in factories where labor is controlled by labor racketeers and monopolists.

I may be speaking very frankly, but I have the facts to back these statements. If you wish, I can get them for you.

Yours truly,

E. C. MEISSNER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Frazier	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Austin	George	McKellar	Sheppard
Bailey	Gerry	McNary	Shipstead
Barkley	Gibson	Maloney	Smathers
Bilbo	Gillette	Mead	Stewart
Brown	Green	Minton	Taft
Bulow	Gurney	Murray	Tobey
Burke	Hale	Neely	Tydings
Byrd	Hatch	Norris	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Hayden	Nye	Wagner
Capper	Herring	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Caraway	Hill	Overton	White
Clark, Mo.	Johnson, Calif.	Pepper	Wiley
Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Pittman
Downey	King	Reed
Ellender	La Follette	Schwartz

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I renew my demand for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. NORRIS and Mr. ADAMS rose.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I was addressing the Chair, and I wanted to be heard for just a moment. I have no objection to the Senator from Colorado being recognized. The clerk started to call the roll while I was addressing the Chair for recognition.

Mr. ADAMS. I merely wanted to make an inquiry as to the form in which the question was pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the conference report shall be rejected, I shall move for a further conference, with instructions to the conferees to agree to the House amendments as to farm machinery and binder twine. I have no disposition, and, in my opinion, no one else has, to cause any undue delay, and I think that it would take only a few moments for the consideration of the bill by the conferees. I wanted the Senate to know that there was no disposition to kill the legislation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. It should be stated, in order that the Senate may understand the parliamentary situation, that the House has already agreed to the report.

Mr. NORRIS. My reason for making the announcement I have made was that I had understood the House had agreed to the report, and that therefore it would not be in order now for me to move to refer the matter back to conference with instructions. I submit a parliamentary inquiry to the Chair. Would it be in order now to move to recommit the conference report to the committee of conference with certain instructions?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would not be in order at this time.

Mr. NORRIS. That was my idea, and that was why I made the announcement I made.

Mr. BARKLEY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. The House having adopted the conference report, there is no committee of conference at this time, I understand, and that situation would not be changed even though the Senate rejected the conference report. Probably if that occurred the Senate would ask for a further conference.

Mr. NORRIS. That is what I intend to do if the conference report is rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered on agreeing to the conference report, and the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk resumed the call of the roll.

Mr. KING (when his name was called) On this vote I have a pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri (when Mr. TRUMAN's name was called). My colleague the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] is unavoidably detained from the Senate on important business. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] is absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr HOLT], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], the Senators from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE and Mr. THOMAS], the Senators from Illinois [Mr LUCAS and Mr. SLATTERY], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE] is detained in one of the Government departments. I am advised that, if present and voting, he would vote "yea."

Mr. MCNARY. On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. THOMAS], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. AUSTIN. I have a general pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

I announce the general pair of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who is necessarily absent, with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER].

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], who is unavoidably absent, would vote "yea" if present.

Mr. MCKELLAR (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed the Senator from Delaware has not voted.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I have a pair with the Senator from Delaware, which I transfer to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. STEWART. I have a general pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN], which I transfer to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], and will vote. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 23, as follows:

YEAS—36

So the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, during the discussion of the conference report I called attention to the fact that through an inadvertence there had been an omission in the conference report of several words, and it was suggested that I offer a concurrent resolution, which I now do, for the purpose of having the enrolling clerks make the proper correction.

I send the resolution to the desk and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 54), as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of the Senate, in the enrollment of the bill (S. 3550) to make unlawful the transportation of convict-made goods in interstate and foreign commerce, is hereby directed to insert, after the words "Federal Government", the words "or the District of Columbia."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution?

Mr. KING. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution offered by the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FRAZIER. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. FRAZIER. Is the concurrent resolution subject to amendment? Can an amendment be offered to it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that a general amendment would not be in order. An amendment germane to the concurrent resolution, to correct an error, would be in order.

Mr. FRAZIER. The purpose of the concurrent resolution, as I understand, is to correct something that was left out of the conference report.

Mr. KING. To correct a clerical error.

Mr. FRAZIER. I also desire to correct something that was left out of the conference report.

Mr. BARKLEY. The purpose of the concurrent resolution offered by the Senator from Utah is simply to correct a clerical mistake in writing up the conference report. That is done in the Senate frequently. It seems to me the offering of such a concurrent resolution does not provide an opening to change the substance of the conference report.

Mr. KING. I accept the ruling of the Chair, which I think is absolutely correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the opinion of the Chair that the conference report is not subject to a general amendment.

The question is on the request of the Senator from Utah for immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was considered and greed to.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I make the friendly motion that the vote by which the conference report was agreed to be reconsidered.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Missouri to lay the motion made by the Senator from West Virginia on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 607) making additional appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

EXPANSION OF LENDING AUTHORITY OF EXPORT-IMPORT BANK—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I submit the conference report on House bill 10361, to provide for increasing the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes; and, after discussion, I propose to move that it be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York submits a conference report which will be read.

The report was read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10361) to provide for increasing the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

Omit the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment, restore the matter stricken out by the Senate amendment, and on page 2, line 12, of the House engrossed bill, after the word "nationals" insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no such loans shall be made in violation of international law as interpreted by the Department of State, or of the act of April 13, 1934 (48 Stat. 574), or to the Neutrality Act of 1939."; and the Senate agree to the same.

ROBERT F. WAGNER,
ALBEN W. BARKLEY,
JAMES F. BYRNES,
JOHN G. TOWNSEND, Jr.,
JOHN A. DANAHER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

HENRY B. STEAGALL,
CLYDE WILLIAMS,
BRENT SPENCE,
JESSE P. WOLCOTT,
ROBERT LUCE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WAGNER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, this is the conference report on the bill to increase the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank. There were only two items of disagreement between the two Houses, which were within the province of the conferees to consider. The first was the Senate provision that no loan could be made by the Export-Import Bank which was in violation of the Neutrality Act, the so-called Johnson Act, or international law as interpreted by the Department of State. Upon that item the House receded and the Senate provision remains in the bill.

The other item of disagreement was with respect to the House provision authorizing the R. F. C. to issue its bonds or notes in the sum of $1,000,000,000, in addition to the present authorization. The conferees had before them a letter from Mr. Jesse Jones, in which he set forth that since the action by the Senate, commitments had been made by the R. F. C. for national-defense purposes in the sum of $528,895,000. He said further that he was advised by the National Defense Council there would probably be additional commitments "in substantial amounts," for loans to industry and to corporations created by the R. F. C. for the purposes of establishing reserve supplies of strategic and critical materials.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is the list of loans to which the Senator refers available?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; I have it here.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Will the Senator put it in the RECORD and then let me see it?

Mr. WAGNER. I propose to put it in the RECORD, I will say to the Senator from Michigan.

The R. F. C. has available today for all purposes, including national defense, only the sum of about $500,000,000. That is, of course, totally inadequate—inadequate to meet national-defense purposes alone, apart from all the other functions of the R. F. C. As Mr. Jones advised the conferees, a margin of about $1,000,000,000 is required for its general operations as a matter of prudent policy. So that without the increase of a billion dollars, the R. F. C. would be seriously crippled, and so would our defense program.

In addition to the request of Mr. Jones, the National Defense Council has also asked that this additional authorization be given in order that the R. F. C. may aid it in vigorously prosecuting the program for national defense. Without the additional authorization, we are taking the responsibility of seriously interfering with the progress of our defense program. Since June of this year the R. F. C. has made commitments exceeding one-half billion dollars for defense purposes, and it is reasonably estimated that more than $300,000,000 additional will be required for these purposes.

It is plain that unless we want to wipe out entirely the other purposes for which the R. F. C. was created, we shall have to grant this additional sum.

The Senate conferees were so impressed by the arguments and the facts presented that they receded and accepted the House provision. All the conferees have signed the report, so that the conference report is unanimous.

I have here another letter which the Administrator, Mr. Jesse Jones, now Secretary of Commerce, sent to me within the last 3 days, which I ask to have read at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

FEDERAL LOAN AGENCY,
Washington, September 16, 1940.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WAGNER: Under authority of the amendment to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act approved June 25, 1940, in connection with the national-defense program, the R. F. C. has created the Rubber Reserve Co., the Metals Reserve Co., the Defense Supplies Corporation, and the Defense Plant Corporation, and has made commitments for loans and investments, including those made to these corporations, aggregating $558,609,290. The Defense Commission has advised that other commitments in substantial amounts will be necessary.

I wish, therefore, to urge the added borrowing authority for R. F. C. agreed upon by the conferees.

When the Congress, in June, passed the amendment above referred to, no additional borrowing authority was provided, though the Corporation did not have any more unused credit at that time than prudent policy required for its general operations.

The Rubber Reserve Co. was created to provide for the acquisition of a reserve supply of raw rubber, and $145,000,000 has been allocated to it.

The Metals Reserve Co. was created to acquire a reserve supply of tin, antimony, manganese, wolframite, and other strategic and critical materials. One hundred and five million dollars has been allocated to it.

The Defense Supplies Corporation was created to acquire a reserve supply of high-test aviation gasoline, and such other materials as may be designated by the Defense Commission. Fifty-three million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars has been allocated to it.

The Defense Plant Corporation was created with a capital of $5,000,000 in connection with plant construction and the purchase of machinery and equipment to be installed in the plants of manufacturers in order to facilitate the execution of orders by the War and Navy Departments. This Corporation will probably require $150,000,000 or more,, which will bring our present total commitments to near $700,000,000, and it will probably be necessary to increase our allocations for rubber, metals, and other defense supplies in substantial amounts.

I attach a list of defense loan authorizations to date.

Sincerely yours,

JESSE H. JONES, Administrator.

Mr. WAGNER. The letter shows total commitments to date aggregating $558,000,000—including $145,000,000 allocated to the Rubber Reserve Co., to acquire reserve supplies of raw rubber; $105,000,000 allocated to the Metal Reserve Co., to acquire reserve supplies of strategic and critical materials; $53,000,000 allocated to the Defense Supplies Corporation, to acquire reserve supplies of high-test aviation gasoline, and such other materials as the National Defense Commission may designate; and $5,000,000 allocated to the Defense Plant Corporation, to aid in plant construction and purchase of machinery. The Corporation last named is concerned only with defense transactions in which the R. F. C. obtains title to the needed land or plant or machinery, and leases it to the private manufacturer. The remaining $255,000,000 has been allocated for loans to expand defense plants, to purchase machinery, to expand aviation and trade schools, and so forth.

Mr. President, unless there are some questions to be asked, that is all I care to say in explanation of the action of the conferees.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks, tables showing exactly what loans and commitments have been made to date by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for national defense purposes alone.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows;

[6] Sept. 4 as deferred.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I wish to discuss briefly the proposed addition to the lending power of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. That matter was not before the Senate committee at the time we considered the Export-Import Bank bill. That bill, as it passed the Senate, merely authorized the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to borrow $500,000,000 more to finance loans to South America. The House bill provided, in addition to that, another billion dollars. So the bill as agreed to in conference provides for additional lending power to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of $1,500,000,000, which, of course, may be used for any of the purposes of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It is not limited in any way to loans to Latin America or even to defense loans. Its purpose is apparently primarily for defense loans.

So far as I know, no definite showing has been made that the amount asked for is needed. No such showing as is usually made to the Appropriations Committee when it is necessary to appropriate money has been made, and yet the loans of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for national defense are exactly the same as appropriations. They are said to be loans, but we really have stepped beyond the lending power of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and we are in effect appropriating money for what is done. Take the $92,000,000 loan to the Wright Aeronautical Corporation. A subsidiary corporation is created, to which the $92,000,000 is loaned. So, as a matter of fact, a plant is built which in effect belongs to the Government, unless when we get through with this thing the Wright Aeronautical Corporation itself shall decide that it wishes to buy the plant from the Government. So really the so-called loans are appropriations. No showing has been made to any committee of the need for $1,000,000,000. When the matter came up before our committee, I suggested to Mr. Jones that we increase his borrowing power by $500,000,000 in addition to the Export-Import Bank provision, and he said that was enough. On August 8 he testified as follows before the House committee:

Mr. JONES. My opinion is that a billion dollars, to include the bank money, would be adequate.

Mr. KEAN. That is, you would put at the bottom of that page "is hereby increased by half a billion dollars"?

Mr. JONES. Is increased by a billion. You see, it takes half a billion to take care of the bank, and that would leave half a billion, then, for the R. F. C.

Miss SUMNER. Was that limitation of a billion dollars put in the Senate bill? I notice Senator TAFT had some kind of a billion-dollar limitation.

Mr. JONES. The committee more or less agreed. Senator TAFT asked if we would be willing to limit this to a billion dollars, and I told him "Yes."

So all that any committee of the Congress has ever been asked for is half a billion dollars more than the Reconstruction Finance Corporation now has, although the conference committee agrees to an additional $1,000,000,000. No great change has occurred since we were considering the measure. When we were considering it Mr. Jones stated that commitments had already been made for $300,000,000 for national defense, and that the Corporation had been notified that it would need at least two or three hundred million dollars more at once. So the total now set forth by Mr. Jones is about the amount which he then foresaw, when he was satisfied with half a billion dollars.

The learned Senator from New York has said that Mr. Jones says that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation should always have a margin of $1,000,000,000. I do not know why it should have a margin of a billion dollars. As a matter of fact, today no one knows exactly what the borrowing powers are. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation legislation is so completely confused that no one can very easily figure it out. Mr. Jones has never told us what the additional borrowing power is, and has never submitted any table. So far as I know there is no record anywhere of what the additional borrowing power of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is, before we increase it by the proposed amount.

Laws which have been passed have authorized the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to issue a total of $4,250,000,000 of notes, debentures, and so forth. In addition, it has been authorized to issue a great many notes for special purposes. Against that, it has required the Treasury to cancel about $2,700,000,000 of notes which were really issued for relief purposes. Some of those items are chargeable against general appropriations, and some are chargeable against special appropriations. So I challenge any lawyer or accountant to be confident of what the additional borrowing power of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is today. Today it has a capital of half a billion dollars. It has outstanding in the hands of the public about $1,000,000,000 of notes. So far as I can judge, its additional borrowing power is about one and a half billion dollars, before we authorize any additional borrowing under the pending bill. I may be mistaken. Mr. Jones, when asked, in a vague way said that the additional borrowing power was about $1,000,000,000. I do not venture to tell the Senate what the power is. I do not know. It seems to me there should be a complete revision of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation legislation, and that we ought to know, before we get through, exactly what the Reconstruction Finance Corporation can do, and how much additional borrowing power it has. If it has one and a half billion dollars additional borrowing power, then I do not see that any further authorization is needed. Mr. Jones says he thinks he has $1,000,000,000, and about $700,000,000 more or less committed, very little of that to be paid out before the first of January. I believe a margin of $300,000,000 would be sufficient.

As a matter of fact, no one connected with the Government has made any plan as to how much money is really needed for the construction of industrial plants. No plan has ever been presented to Congress. Mr. Jones has never presented any plan. The Army has never presented any plan. The Navy has never presented any plan. We are absolutely in the dark as to how much money the Government needs to lend, or how much money the Government needs to put up for additional industrial plants. As a matter of fact, we have already appropriated large sums of money to the Army and to the Navy for plants.

In Public 667 we appropriated to the Secretary of War, for the construction of plants for expediting production for military purposes, $150,000,000 to be immediately available. There is also $50,000,000 more contingent contract authorization. So in that bill there is $200,000,000 for building plants.

In Public 781, which was the first supplementary military appropriation bill, we appropriated for the construction of army plants, $162,500,000, and made contract authorizations for another $162,500,000. So we have given the Army a total of $525,000,000 for the construction of plants, entirely outside what we may now give the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

In addition, in the Navy appropriation bill, in Public 588, we have given the Navy $43,850,000 for that purpose; another appropriation of $65,000,000; and one of $35,000,000, all of which might be used for that purpose, and may be used for other purposes, or a total of $143,850,000. So, apparently, for the construction of plants, we have appropriated more than $643,000,000; and now Mr. Jones wants another billion dollars.

I do not venture to say that he is right or wrong. All I say is that no data have been submitted to the Congress as to what the plan for the construction of plants is. No data have been submitted to the Congress as to just what the borrowing power of the R. F. C. is. No data have been submitted to the Congress as to just what the $1,000,000,000 will be used for. So it seems to me that we are again asked to vote blindly. I do not want to delay anything. This bill would not delay anything, because the Reconstruction Finance Corporation certainly has four or five hundred million dollars left, beside the unused appropriations which have gone to the Army and Navy.

The purpose of the tax bill which has been passed is to get as much private capital into this thing as possible. So, in addition to all the Government is being asked to put in, we are trying by the tax bill—the amortization provisions and the provisions with regard to the Vinson-Trammell Act—to induce private capital to take a very large proportion of the additional defense need. It seems to me perfectly clear that before we approve the bill we ought to have a schedule showing at least the general nature of the improvements which are proposed to be made, whether they are to be made through loans or whether the Government is to build the plants. It seems to me that $500,000,000 is sufficient to give any department at any time in the form of a blank check. Congress will return in plenty of time to add another half billion dollars if it should be needed. Five hundred million dollars is all Mr. Jones asked for; and personally, I think he would be entirely satisfied with it. Therefore, I feel that the conference report should be rejected.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I shall not delay the vote except to say one or two things about which I think the Senator from Ohio is really too complacent, considering the critical situation which confronts the country at the present time and our desire to prosecute as quickly as possible a program of total national defense.

So far as financing is concerned, I will take the authority of Mr. Jones as against the authority of the Senator from Ohio. I shall not read it, but I have before me an article from Fortune magazine for May 1940, which made a detailed study and survey of the activities of the R. F. C. Those who have read it will remember it paid an eloquent tribute to Mr. Jones as illustrating the highest degree of efficiency and competency in constructive and conservative financing, superior to that known in any other governmental experience.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I do not desire to be understood in any way as questioning Mr. Jones' ability or the fact that he will handle well any money placed in his hands. My opinion of Mr. Jones will not be increased by the endorsement of Fortune magazine.

Mr. WAGNER. Not only Mr. Jones, but the National Defense Council, which we have put in charge and have trusted to carry out and vigorously prosecute our national-defense program, communicated with the conferees, as they did with the committee of the House, and stated that additional R. F. C. commitments in substantial amounts would be needed properly to prosecute the program and to provide for all contingencies.

The R. F. C. was directed by Congress to make loans for national defense and 12 other purposes. I do not need to enumerate them all, but, beginning with agriculture, they include capital loans to banks, loans to open closed banks, loans for railroads, for self-liquidating projects, and so on.

Mr. Jones has explained why he needs a large margin. It is because the demands are apt to come in at any time; they may be concentrated; the retirements may not come in as rapidly as the new loans are made. Mr. Jones might well be put in a position where he was unable to carry out the wishes of Congress.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. With reference to the matter of inducing private capital into enterprises of this sort, while it is true there is an indirect Government obligation involved, the R. F. C. obtains its capital from private sources by the sale of its obligations, and therefore, draws into its coffers from private sources money which it furnishes the Export-Import Bank. Am I correct about that?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. So there is no direct draft on the Treasury for the amount of money involved. It all comes from private sources.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course. These are all loans.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I merely wish to point out that the R. F. C. borrows on the credit of the United States, and that, as a matter of fact, the money which comes to the R. F. C. does not come from private sources any more than the $6,000,000,000 deficit of the Government next year will come from private sources.

Mr. WAGNER. I think the Senator is mistaken. Many of these securities are sold to the public. The R. F. C. has been so conducted that it is now making a profit, as the article in Fortune magazine has pointed out, of between 3 and 4 percent. So it is a money-lending institution which has a very creditable record.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him there?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. So much so that a part of the original $500,000,000 provided for the R. F. C. has become available for return to the Treasury.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I desire to ask a question for information. I have been greatly interested in the work sheets which the Senator has presented from Mr. Jones sustaining his need for the additional billion dollars, and I wish to be sure that I understand the status of some of the items. For instance, heavy loans are made to the Metal Reserves Co. and to the Rubber Reserves Co., running up to a hundred or two hundred million dollars. Is that the equivalent of a Government investment in strategic materials?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is that in addition to the appropriations which Congress has made for the purpose of purchasing strategic materials?

Mr. WAGNER. Does the Senator mean appropriations outside the authorizations to the R. F. C.?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; it is.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In other words, Congress has been asked to provide appropriations to buy strategic materials, and we have made the appropriations, I assume, on the theory that we were meeting the necessity. Now, do I understand that the R. F. C. is to be used to make additional purchases which ordinarily would be financed through appropriations but which are now to be financed through the R. F. C.?

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator may recall the discussion upon the floor on the bill which was considered some 3 months ago, authorizing the R. F. C. to make loans for national-defense purposes. One of the purposes enumerated included the purchase or storage of supplies of strategic materials necessary for the national defense. At that time we discussed the question whether the two ways or methods should be utilized in order to acquire sufficient strategic and critical materials for national-defense purposes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I recall that discussion.

Mr. WAGNER. And the authorization was voted. So there is a prior authorization for these transactions.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I recall that. So my question comes down to this: That a substantial portion of this billion-dollar authorization is, in effect, the equivalent of additional direct appropriations for the purposes indicated?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes. The Senator is correct about that, and the Senate discussed that question sometime ago.

The only appeal I desire to make to the Senate is that we trust and have confidence in the officials who have been selected to carry out our program, such as the National Defense Council and the R. F. C., whose responsible officers tell us that this increased authorization is necessary.

The Senator has stated that Mr. Jones did not have all the plans or commitments when he appeared before us. Of course, he did not, for each day the National Defense Council finds some additional need, either for expanding a plant or producing something that requires financial aid from the R. F. C. The loans definitely contemplated in the near future will exceed $700,000,000; and, from what I am given to understand, they may well exceed the billion-dollar mark. If this report is not adopted the R. F. C. will be left high and dry, unable to continue its financial aid in our defense program, and that program itself will be crippled at this very critical point in its development. I am sure no Senator wants to take that responsibility.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the conference report was as much of a surprise to some members of the Banking and Currency Committee who had such great admiration for and confidence in the ability of the conferees. We did not expect them to be overwhelmed by a group from the other House. We know, of course, that they did everything that was humanly possible to sustain the Senate, but I was amazed when I found that this strong, able group had been overwhelmed.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. If the conferees on the part of the Senate were overwhelmed at all, it was by the evidence that was presented to us at the time we were in conference by communications from Mr. Jones on behalf of himself and the National Defense Council, showing the need for this added sum for national-defense purposes. They persuaded the committee that the need existed and that it ought to be provided for.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, here are conferees appointed by the Senate for a particular purpose, namely, to go into conference to sustain the position of the Senate. I say that, in my own judgment, a committee of conference has no right to go outside and solicit other information and take other evidence that was not presented to the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency. But it seems that the conferees on the part of the Senate set themselves up as an independent senatorial committee and disregarded the action of the Senate because they received information outside from other sources which was not available to the Senate. If other information came to them which indicated that the committee was wrong and the Senate was wrong, the bill should have been sent back to the original committee to pass upon that question.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. WAGNER. I know the Senator is perfectly sincere in what he is now asserting.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator is correct in his statement.

Mr. WAGNER. But I recall that time and time again he, as a member of conference committees on appropriation bills, yielded because he was overwhelmed by the arguments of the other side, and did not come back and ask the Senate for further instructions. That, as I recall, has happened as to many items of appropriation bills on which the Senator was one of the conferees. I found no fault, because I felt sure the conferees acted wisely and intelligently. So we did in this instance, and I think, under all the circumstances, we followed a very wise and patriotic course. As a matter of fact, the conferees agreed unanimously.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the Senator is partly correct. I have served upon a good many conference committees when there have been literally hundreds of items in dispute and as a member of the Senate conference committee I have receded in the face of persuasion from the House and obstinate insistence; but never, never upon any conference committee has evidence been presented from outside sources to a conference committee of which I was a member; never have I been upon a conference committee that set itself up as a proper body to receive evidence and testimony in addition to that presented to the original committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is there any rule of the Senate or the other House, or any practice which has been followed consistently, that prohibits a conference committee from obtaining information pertaining to the matters which are in difference between the two Houses?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I know of nothing in the wording of the rule to that effect. I think, however, that the entire practice, the entire purpose, the entire theory of a conference is that the conference committee represents the body which appoints it to present those things and only those things of which that body had knowledge; and I do not think a conference committee has any right to set itself up as an independent body to take additional evidence and then act upon that other evidence, rather than upon the basis of the information upon which the Senate committee and the Senate itself acted.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will further yield——

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course we all realize that when there are differences between the two Houses there has to be yielding on the part of one, and usually on the part of both, in order to arrive at a conclusion. While I have never advocated or felt that a conference committee should open up matters for public hearings, I have always felt that the conferees of either the House or the Senate had a legitimate right to obtain, from any available source, information which might be of value to them in determining how far to yield, or whether to yield at all, on matters on which there was a difference between the two Houses.

Mr. ADAMS. I am willing to acquiesce in the views of the majority leader. I merely am expressing surprise. As I say, here is the great chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, an ex-judge, one of the outstanding men not only in the Senate but in the Nation; and then here is the majority leader, and here are the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER]. I was more amazed when the Senator from Connecticut yielded than in the case of almost anybody else.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield now?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. DANAHER. I am happy to have the Senator from Colorado yield; and I stand before him with some obeisance, let me say, at the moment.

In view of the fact that my name has been mentioned by the doughty Senator from Colorado, I think it no more than fair to remark that the Senator from Connecticut talked in the conference committee to the point where I think even the chairman of the Senate conferees felt that the junior Senator from Connecticut had become a nuisance. I opposed the House bill to such a point that it was more than half an hour after everybody else had left the conference that finally, after starting with the original R. F. C. Act and Mr. Wood, our legislative counsel, and reviewing every single amendment from 1935 down to date, I reluctantly agreed that as a conferee I apparently was bound to go along with the conference report.

Mr. ADAMS. That is to say, the Senator from Connecticut was overwhelmed by his colleagues on the Senate conference committee, and then the Senate conferees were overwhelmed by the House conferees.

Mr. DANAHER. I was overwhelmed by this situation: As a matter of principle I was opposed to the Export-Import Bank extension idea as contemplated by this bill, and believed that we should not make these loans to South American countries, and I voted against the bill. I voted against it in committee; I voted against its coming out on the floor at all; but the Senate having expressed its desire, having accepted that principle and having voted for it, necessarily the Senator from Connecticut was bound to express the sense of the Senate in that particular.

The Senator from Connecticut sought to limit to $50,000,000 the maximum of any such loans to any one country; and again a great many Senators shared my judgment and, as I recall, there were some 22 or 23 Senators who favored that amendment. Nonetheless, the sense of the Senate in its concerted wisdom, by a majority of numbers at least, was sufficient to overwhelm the Senator from Connecticut and his idea; and once more, then, the principle of an unlimited loan to any South American country was written into the plan of the bill.

When we had the amendment to section 5 (d) of the bill before us in June, and we then authorized the R. F. C. to build plants, the Senator from Connecticut was more or less vociferous in seeking limitations, and language of limitation was written into the bill at that time; but the Senator from Colorado will remember that the Senate voted for that particular extension of power to the R. F. C., but did not vote any funds for them to carry out the plan. Therefore we were bound, as it seemed to me, to do what we could to implement the R. F. C. to execute the will of the Senate; and at that point—and at that point only—does the question of amount become material.

When the matter was before us in the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, as the record of the Senate hearings will show, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] felt that we ought to give the R. F. C. a billion dollars. The House had already voted an increase of a billion dollars. The $500,000,000 of R. F. C. money for the Export-Import Bank as contained in the bill before us also is in the bill as reported by the conference committee. Consequently the allocation of $500,000,000 is identically the same in the conference report and in the bill. So far as the remaining sum of $1,000,000,000 is concerned, there is no appropriation, and the Senator from Colorado knows it. It is an authorization to the R. F. C. to issue its securities for the purpose of making loans in whatever amount may be necessary, first, to carry out what the Senate said must be done; second——

Mr. ADAMS. Pardon me; let me interrupt the Senator.

Mr. DANAHER. Yes; I will.

Mr. ADAMS. Let the Senator proceed, though I believe I had the floor.

Mr. DANAHER. The Senator had yielded, had he not?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes, sir. I am still yielding.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator. I hope he will be overcome presently.

Let me point out, then, that we had first to implement the R. F. C. to carry out the will of the Senate insofar as granting them an extension of power to build plants was concerned; and, second, to replenish their available sums in order to execute the general purposes of the R. F. C. the difference was represented as being necessary.

The House having voted for it, the Senate having never had the matter before it, there being a conflict between the two, and the Senator from Connecticut having been overwhelmed in the light not only of his own logic but of that of the chairman of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, and the House Members having in the aggregate uniformly, without even one moment's faltering, refused to accept the motion of the Senator from Connecticut that we take the Senate bill secondly, the Senator from Connecticut sought to get the committee of conference to accept a billion dollars as a compromise. No; we could not get away with that, as it happened. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] was very assiduous in suggesting a compromise of $1,250,000,000. Let me say to the Senator from Colorado that it got down to a point where we were trading; and when we balked about a mere quarter of a billion dollars with Jesse Jones in the balance, we just surrendered. [Laughter.]

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not want the Senator from Connecticut to have any idea in his mind that I regarded him as a nuisance. I am sure the Senator could not have meant that, because I not only regard him as my friend but I have great admiration for his ability and his infinite capacity for hard work; and our committee always looks to him for wisdom and for guidance in its deliberations.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. ADAMS. I will yield in a moment.

Mr. President, I have had an opportunity to some extent to turn over these matters in my mind while I have been standing here. If, perhaps, I have seemed to criticize the conferees, I desire to withdraw the criticism and to accept their explanations, because before the committee we had no testimony which would justify this billion-dollar increase; and I think perhaps the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency should apologize to the conferees because of our action. We merely acted upon the information we had. The conferees having additional information, the conferees having acted for what they thought was the welfare of the country, I am not criticizing them. I question somewhat the method of getting information so important as this, involving upon a $500,000,000 measure an increase of $1,000,000,000; but it puts the remaining Members of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee and the Senate in a rather bad light to have it appear that we would have denied to the R. F. C. the needed billion dollars. We did not know of these things. Mr. Jones did not tell us he needed this amount. The Council of National Defense did not come before us and say that it was needed; so I think perhaps we should ask the pardon of the Senate for coming here ill-informed.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WAGNER. I attempted to state, earlier in the discussion of this matter, that our committee did not have these matters before them. If they had, I am sure they would have acted differently. These matters came up afterward. The hearings of the House committee were later than ours. They had some evidence, and then in conference both of us received evidence of which neither committee had the benefit. The Senate now understands where this information came from, and why this money is needed, and the Senate has a right to reject what the conferees have done if the Senate feels that we have acted unwisely. I think we acted wisely, and I think we acted for the best interests of the country; but it is something finally for the Senate to decide.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I wish to say a word or two about what I think are the merits of the situation. I am not complaining. I questioned the propriety of this concession.

The R. F. C. was created as an instrumentality for civil purposes, in order to stimulate industry under certain conditions, to make loans to mining, to bankers, perhaps to agriculture, limited strictly to the making of civil loans. It was to act in a banking capacity. The loans which it made were specifically required to be made upon adequate security. The record which Mr. Jones has made has been made in pursuance of the limitation placed upon him that when he made loans he would make good loans.

We are diverting the purposes of the R. F. C. This is not the first time. We have done it before, but that does not make it right. We are diverting the purposes of the R. F. C. into the field of the War Department; we are diverting them into the field of the Committee on Appropriations. We are told that certain things should be done for national defense, therefore that we should give to Mr. Jones, to the R. F. C., vast sums of money, to be loaned to unknown individuals, for unknown purposes, authorize them to create corporations which have no capital and no resources except that which they derive from the R. F. C.

I will give an instance. A company engaged in the manufacture of airplanes incorporates an independent company which has not one nickel of assets. The R. F. C. lends to the company millions of dollars, I think up to $30,000,000. The money is used by the corporation to build a plant for the manufacture of airplanes, a thing highly desirable. Then the new corporation, whose only assets it derived from the R. F. C., leases its plant to another manufacturing company, so that if there is any profit it goes to the existing airplane factory, and if the demand for airplanes ceases, the plant belonging to the new subsidiary corporation remains always as its plant. All the R. F. C. can look to is the plant, which becomes unusable when the stress ceases. In other words, we are not lending the money to the corporation which is in existence, which has resources with which to manufacture, but we are permitting the creation of a new corporation, without assets other than that which we created. In other words, we are engaging in the manufacture of airplanes. That is perfectly proper, if we want to do it. But we come back to the reflection that the Constitution of the United States contains certain provisions. I have been severely criticized, perhaps justly, for having raised constitutional questions. I understand that in some quarters it is regarded as outrageous to do so, but some of us in the course of long years' practice at the bar have come to regard the Constitution as rather a permanent institution.

The Constitution provides that "no money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law." Turning this billion dollars over to the R. F. C. is nothing but an evasion of that provision of the Constitution. If the Congress had been niggardly or careless, the situation might be different; but within a very few days we passed a bill appropriating more than $5,000,000,000 in which vast sums were provided for the very purposes for which the R. F. C. says they need this money. The committe gave every cent that was asked by the War Department, without limitation. The representatives of the Army were asked, "Is there anything you have overlooked?" They replied, "We don't think so." As a matter of fact, that was the third time they had returned for an increase. Congress has been generous to the War Department, generous beyond anything in the history of peacetimes in any nation, when they said to us, "We need money for this plant, that, and the other." We were generous when the Navy said, "We want fields here and there." But was there information from the R. F. C.? No. "We have a billion and a half now which we can lend. We have loaned some of it. We want another billion and a half." "What for?" "We are going to help the national defense." There is no specification to the Congress as to the purpose.

No one doubts the good intentions of Mr. Jones or of the R. F. C., but I question whether Congress can, in justice to itself, in justice to the obligation which the individual Members of Congress have taken, turn over to a corporation the power to borrow money, a power vested in the Congress, and the power to spend money, a power which is vested in Congress. I doubt whether we have a right to defy and disregard the provision that money shall be drawn from the Treasury of the United States only upon appropriations authorized by law.

Under the pending conference report we are asked to permit the R. F. C. to take money out of the Treasury of the United States. It is perfectly idle to say that the money comes from private sources. True, the R. F. C. floats a note, or a bond. It gets the money; yes. There is no difference at all in the process from that of the Treasury of the United States. It sells a bond and gets money from private sources. The credit upon which it gets the money in either case is that of the United States of America. The R. F. C. is nothing more nor less than one of the arms of the United States. Yet we are asked to permit this one arm to do things we allow no other agency of the Government to do.

For these reasons, Mr. President, I am questioning the propriety of the proposed legislation. I think it is unsound. Congress is here, and Congress should know the facts, and I do not think Congress has any right to evade its responsibility by merely saying, "Here is 1 man out of 130,000,000 to whom we can safely trust this money." I do not like to say that there are 96 men in this body and 435 in the other body of the Congress, and that we will not trust ourselves, but will give great sums over into the control of a certain man to expend, which I think violates the provision of the Constitution.

Consequently, with the utmost reluctance, and with not only respect but with great admiration for the members of the Committee on Banking and Currency, and great friendship for them, I feel compelled to vote against the conference report.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Frazier	Lodge	Sheppard
Andrews	George	McKellar	Shipstead
Austin	Gerry	McNary	Smathers
Bailey	Gibson	Maloney	Stewart
Barkley	Gillette	Mead	Taft
Bilbo	Glass	Minton	Thomas, Idaho
Brown	Green	Murray	Thomas, Okla.
Bulow	Gurney	Neely	Thomas, Utah
Burke	Hale	Norris	Tobey
Byrd	Harrison	Nye	Tydings
Byrnes	Hatch	O'Mahoney	Vandenberg
Capper	Hayden	Overton	Van Nuys
Caraway	Herring	Pepper	Wagner
Clark, Mo.	Hill	Pittman	Walsh
Connally	Johnson, Calif.	Radcliffe	White
Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Reed	Wiley
Davis	King	Russell
Downey	La Follette	Schwartz
Ellender	Lee	Schwellenbach

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GILLETTE in the chair). Seventy-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, because of what is rather a confusion in figures, I merely wish to make clear what the figures are, and exactly what it is we are doing.

The R. F. C. today has a billion dollars of borrowing power, in addition to what it has used. We are now asked to add to that another billion dollars, so it will have $2,000,000,000.

The letter presented by Mr. Jones referred to approximately $700,000,000 of expenditures in sight, so we are giving the R. F. C. $1,300,000,000 in addition to any specific expenditure the R. F. C. has asked for or suggested—$1,300,000,000 in addition to approximately $600,000,000 which we have appropriated for the Army and the Navy, so there will be available for the construction of national defense plants nearly $2,000,000,000.

My suggestion to the conference committee is that $500,000,000 less than that is more than ample, and that is the reason I am opposing the larger figure presented in the conference report.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not wish to delay a vote on the conference report, but I think what the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] has said should perhaps be emphasized. We have heretofore authorized the R. F. C. to make loans for national defense purposes. We have even authorized the R. F. C. to create corporations if existing private corporations are not available, in order to carry out a national-defense program.

The pending bill, in addition to making available $500,000,000 for purposes of making defense loans in connection with Latin America, provides an additional $1,000,000,000 of borrowing power in order to carry out the authority we have already given to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

It seems to me it is too late now to argue over the wisdom of the course the R. F. C. will probably pursue in regard to these matters. We have authorized the R. F. C. to do a certain thing. This measure authorizes the R. F. C. to obtain the money with which to do it. While it is always, of course, correct to state that these are indirect obligations of the Government, it so happens that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has not been required to call on the Treasury itself for any money to carry out its vast powers of making loans to industries in the United States. If the R. F. C. in the future is as successful as it has been in the past, I think we may anticipate that there will be no direct call upon the Treasury for any of these funds.

Therefore it seems to me that in the interest of national defense, for which two-thirds of this borrowing power is created, and only one-third for other purposes, we ought not to jeopardize that program now by rejecting the conference report. Therefore I hope it will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. AUSTIN (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], who is necessarily absent. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. KING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. STEWART (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the following pair:

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. If present, the Senator from Oregon would vote "nay," and the Senator from Alabama, if present, would vote "yea."

I also announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] with the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]; and

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER].

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], if present, would vote "yea."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], the Senators from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS and Mr. SLATTERY], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are necessarily absent. I am advised that, if present and voting, the Senators named would vote "yea."

The Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are unavoidably detained.

Mr. MCKELLAR (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], who is not present. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], and will allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 21, as follows:

YEAS—33

Andrews	Glass	Mead	Schwellenbach
Barkley	Green	Minton	Sheppard
Bilbo	Gurney	Murray	Stewart
Brown	Hatch	Neely	Thomas, Okla.
Byrnes	Hayden	Norris	Vandenberg
Caraway	Hill	Pepper	Wagner
Downey	La Follette	Pittman
Ellender	McKellar	Radcliffe
George	Maloney	Schwartz

NAYS—21

Adams	Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Thomas, Idaho
Bailey	Frazier	Lodge	White
Bulow	Gibson	Nye	Wiley
Burke	Gillette	Reed
Byrd	Hale	Shipstead
Clark, Mo.	Johnson, Calif.	Taft

NOT VOTING—41

Ashurst	Davis	Lucas	Thomas, Utah
Austin	Donahey	McCarran	Tobey
Bankhead	Gerry	McNary	Townsend
Barbour	Guffey	Miller	Truman
Bone	Harrison	O'Mahoney	Tydings

Clark, Idaho	King	Smathers
Connally	Lee	Smith

So the conference report was agreed to.

FACTS FOR MICHIGAN FARMERS

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, the nomination of Henry A. Wallace, of Iowa, for Vice President brings the farm issue to the front. No man, whatever his views on the Wallace farm program may be, will question the Secretary's sincere desire to better the farmers' lot in life. The Republican nominee says he will, if elected, continue the Wallace program if a better one is not suggested. So far neither he nor his advisers have done so.

No farm program will satisfy all. It is but human to expect more than is done. We are seldom fully satisfied with our results in any of our efforts.

I now propose to give you what I have made it my business to know—the real facts on the situation of the farmer in general and the Michigan farmer in particular, as far as government affects that situation.

The facts about the farm situation can only be understood in the perspective of recent history. As a nation we grossly overexpanded our farm production to meet the urgent needs of the World War period. We plowed up prairies that never should have felt the plow. Inspired by the war price boom, farmers sank all their capital and years of hard work in odd corners of stony, unproductive land that never could provide a decent living. Farmers on good land sowed their pastures to wheat and turned their wood lots into pastures and mined their fields for every ounce of production.

FARMERS HARD HIT

The war boom collapsed. At the same time three other important trends which had been working quietly for many years came to a head to plague our farmers. They were, first, the disappearance of the American frontier, which always before had provided new land for new farms when things got too tough on the old ones; second, technological improvements which made it possible for fewer people to raise more and left many farm folks without useful work to do; third, the disappearance of job opportunities in the city which had previously absorbed the surplus population of our farms.

So our farmers were left stranded with more produce than they could possible sell and more debts than they could possibly carry and more people than could be profitably employed. The celebrated prosperity of the twenties was always pretty much a fairy tale as far as the farmer was concerned. Even when farm prices advanced they did not go up nearly as fast as the prices of the things the farmer had to buy. So he was worse off than ever.

Thus the depression that hit the stock markets and industries after 1929 was no news to the farmer. It was just another and stronger dose of the same bad medicine he had been taking ever since the war.

YEAR 1932 THE BOTTOM

Things for the farmer, as well as most everyone else, reached bottom in 1932. But the farmer was hardest hit of all. Farm prices which, you will remember, had not risen as fast as industrial prices, fell faster. The result was that with their 1932 income farmers were able to buy only about 58 percent as many goods and services as they could in 1929.

The total cash income of all the 197,000 farm families in Michigan was only $127,000,000 in 1932, compared with $265,000,000 in 1929. The average Michigan price of milk was $1.10 per hundredweight. Beef cattle sold for $3.95 per hundredweight. Hogs brought $3.65. Potatoes were 26 cents a bushel, for the 1932 crop, and wheat 45 cents. Wool was 9.1 cents a pound. Hay was at $5.49 a ton. Chickens brought 11.2 cents a pound and eggs 14.6 a dozen.

In 1932, 1 out of every 20 farms in Michigan was sold by the sheriff because the farmer could not meet the payments on his mortgage.

It is not pleasant to contemplate, even in looking back, those dark days of the early thirties. But it is necessary to do so. They are facts that help explain the present picture.

We were faced by a new problem. And the fact is that we stalled and fumbled the ball and even tried to fool ourselves into believing that the problem was not really there at all.

Long before 1933 we were wrestling with our new farm problem. We tried to peg prices that would not stay pegged. The Federal Farm Board bought large quantities of wheat and cotton and other farm products. Still the farmer stayed deep in the hole.

A WELL-ROUNDED PROGRAM

Since 1933 we have tried in many new ways to solve the farmer's many problems. Some of those ways were good and have been successful. To be unpolitically frank once more, some few of them were not so good. These have been or will be changed or abandoned. But the least that can be said is that now, for the first time, we have a farm program that meets head-on every aspect of the farm problem. The best thinking of farmers, farm organizations, agricultural experts, economists, and Federal, State, and local officials have gone into making that program. Looking at it as a whole we can see just how every major farm problem has been faced.

SAVING THE SOIL

The greatest long-run need for successful farming is, of course, fertile soil. In the heedless expansion of the war period we were reckless with this basic resource; and erosion, dust storms, and floods came as a warning of what might be our national fate if that waste was not stopped.

To meet this need we now have for the first time a national program of soil conservation. In every State, through demonstration projects farmers are being shown the best ways to save their soil. They are receiving cash payments for following good conservation practices. Groups of neighboring farmers are being helped to set up soil-conservation districts so they may work together to improve their only real wealth—the soil. The West Ottawa and South Muskegon districts are examples in Michigan. Thus we are working to provide a sound foundation for the long-run well-being of all farmers and city folks, too.

CREDIT WHERE NEEDED

Another important need of farmers is credit. The best farmer in the world cannot make a living if he cannot get a reasonably good farm to work and tools and other equipment and livestock with which to work it. And lack of capital or high-interest rates can keep him from getting such a farm or take the one he has away from him.

So we have helped to provide loans at moderate rates where they were needed. Loans to buy farms and to run and improve them. Loans for seed and machinery. Loans to tide over the period between planting and the time the crops are sold. Commodity loans to stabilize the market for farm products. Loans for cooperatives and farmers' organizations. Loans for the fairly well-off farmer who wants to expand, and special loans for the man who needs a grub-stake to get himself and his family off the relief rolls.

In this whole system of credit, farmers, with the help of the Farm Credit Administration, cooperate to manage the loan associations and the banks.

Two facts indicate how well this program has worked. You will remember that every twentieth Michigan farm was sold at forced sale in 1932–33. In 1937–38 this figure was reduced by three-fourths. During the same interval, the annual number of farm bankruptcies in Michigan were cut in half.

FARM SECURITY

Another Federal lending agency, the Farm Security Administration, has loaned nearly $7,000,000 to around 14,000 low-income farm families in Michigan since the program started in 1935. Most of these loans have been made to farmers who would have had to leave the farm and either go to town to compete with townfolks for a job or end up on W. P. A. They are good, hard-working citizens, but things have not gone so well with them as they might, and many of them couldn't make a decent living in farming without F. S. A. loans. These loans are made for such practical things needed in farming as machinery, livestock, seed, feed, and fertilizer.

Commodity loans have been made an essential part of the program through a special corporation.

There is still some room for improvement in our lending program—better coordination between the various lending agencies, loosening of credit restrictions in some cases, tightening up in others. But in general, it is safe to say that the farmer's need for credit is being met more adequately than ever before.

REMOVING THE GAMBLE

The next big thing that has happened in the world of agriculture is that, for the first time, some of the gamble has been taken out of farming. As everyone who has ever worked a farm knows, the farmer has always been at the mercy of chance. He might be the most conservative man in the world, he might never play cards or bet on a horse race. But all the time he was betting his whole livelihood every time he planted a crop. Betting that floods or drought or dust or wind or grasshoppers would not come to rob him of the product of his labor before he could harvest it.

Now, for the wheat farmer at least, that desperate gamble is gone. He is sharing the risks with other wheat growers all over the country through the Federal Crop Insurance program. The lucky farmers help to see that the unlucky ones do not lose everything because of bad breaks and know that they, in turn, will be helped when their time of bad luck comes. Around 16,000 wheat farmers in Michigan alone are sleeping easier at night now because they have this protection. There is no reason that the future should not bring expansion of this program to other crops, once the technical problems have been worked out.

INCOME MOST IMPORTANT

Soil conservation, adequate credit, crop insurance—these tools we have forged to meet important long-run needs of farmers. But more pressing than any of these problems is the all-important need of bringing the prices of farm products to a level that will enable the farmer to receive a just reward for his labor.

The solemn fact is that in 1932 we were further from this just price than we have ever been in the history of our country. The reason for that situation was simple and obvious to everyone—farmers were producing more than was being consumed. The solution to the problem was not so simple. But common sense told us that we were in a situation a lot like a man who is being chased by a bull with two sharp horns and cannot get away. He cannot keep running away forever. He must make a stand and fight it out. If he grabs onto one horn, we all know what will happen to him. The only thing to do is to grab onto both horns, pull hard, and do his best to raise one and lower the other until the bull is brought to his knees. Above all, he must hang on and keep twisting. That is exactly what we have done with the bull of low prices that was chasing the American farmer all over the economic map before 1933. The two horns were consumption and production. We did grab the bull by the horns and we have raised one and lowered the other.

CONSUMPTION UP

On the side of raising consumption the most direct means of attack was to buy up the excess produce that was glutting the markets and distribute it to the people who needed it but could not get it. Since 1935 this has been done through the Federal surplus-commodities program. During 1939, $1,500,000 worth of Michigan farm products were bought in this way and distributed to needy families in the State. Included were $900,000 worth of dry beans, $337,000 of apples, $55,000 of fresh peaches, $171,000 of flour and meal, $17,000 of dry skim milk, and $12,000 worth of fresh vegetables.

A significant fact is that these purchases mean much more to the farmer than the actual amount spent. A small surplus on the market can start a wave of price cutting that will wipe out many a farmer. By stepping in and taking these surpluses off the market at the critical moment such disasters can be avoided. Thus, Mr. H. D. Hoolman, secretary of the Michigan State Horticultural Society, wrote last September:

I feel that the announcement of your peach-purchasing program and the actual purchasing of 182 cars did a great deal to give confidence to the men in the trade and stabilize the prices for our peach growers during the past 10 days. * * * I believe the price of peaches would have been 20 to 25 cents a bushel less on September 4 and 5, when over 200 cars were moving into the Benton Harbor market, if it had not been for this program.

FOOD-STAMP PLAN

With the adoption of the food-stamp plan last summer, the surplus program has been expanded and can now be carried on through regular trade channels, thus promising increasing usefulness to the farmer.

Foreign consumption of our farm products has been stimulated through direct subsidies to exporting farmers and through the trade-pacts program, which has opened many doors that were formerly closed to American farmers. The full effect of this program has been obscured by the unnatural situation created by the war abroad, but, even so, we have annually, on the average, nearly $100,000,000 more than in 1932.

Industrial uses promise a great new market for farm products. To stimulate developments along this line, four great regional research laboratories will open their doors this fall.

These programs are direct attacks on the problem of raising consumption.

CITY INCOMES HELP FARMERS

Even more important, perhaps, is the attack that has been made through providing the lowest income groups of city people with money to buy farm products. Recent studies show that a great percentage of the income of those who benefit from the W. P. A., P. W. A., and trade-agreements programs and the minimum wage laws go directly to benefit the farmers—through increasing purchases of food and clothing. There is still great room for improvement in this matter of raising city purchasing power. Self-interest alone dictates that farmers should support any program that leads in that direction.

REGULATING PRODUCTION

So much for the consumption side, the horn of the bull that had to be pulled up. The other side of the problem was, of course, production—which had to be pulled down.

This need for limiting production in some commodities is a hard thing for most of us to understand. For 300 years the constant urge of all our national policy was to increase production. Even now many countries of the world and many people in our own country lack enough of the things we could raise in our fields. But we have to face the unhappy fact that, temporarily at least, our capacity to produce has outrun our capacity to consume. Until this fundamental dilemma in our economic system has been mastered, it will be necessary to keep farm production down. We hope that this will not be for long. It is just a phase of American growth. Already we have made a good start toward eliminating this need.

HOW TO DO IT?

Once we admit the present need for limiting production we must set standards for how we shall do it. It seems to me that there are three questions we should ask of any method of handling the job of controlling farm production. First, is it run democratically? Second, does it serve the long-run best interests of agriculture? Third, does it achieve its main objectives of raising farm prices and total farm income?

Without making any political claims to perfection, I think it is safe to say that the present agricultural-adjustment program measures up pretty well by all these standards.

It is run democratically. Management of the program in each county is in the hands of an elected local committee. Major decisions are submitted to a vote of all interested farmers. All participation in the program is voluntary unless farmers in a given area decide by majority vote to make it otherwise.

LONG-RUN INTERESTS

It does serve the long-run best interests of agriculture. Thus the whole acreage-control program is tied in with the soil conservation work. Special payments are made for planting cover crops, diversification, and other soil building practices. Withdrawal of submarginal land from production is encouraged. Especially important to Michigan is the encouragement of managed farm forests.

In the corn program commodity storage loans make possible the ever-normal granary, in keeping with the ancient wisdom of saving in fat years for the lean ones to come.

Altogether we shall have better farms and more stable production because this program has operated.

This brings us to the final and most important question.

INCOME UP

What has the program done for farm income?

The answer to this question is so very important that at the risk of boring you with too many figures I am going to give it product by product for every important commodity raised on Michigan farms.

The first figure and the one we should all remember after we forget the rest is that Michigan farmers had $88,000,000 more cash income in 1938 than they had in 1932 and $101,000,000 more in 1939. This increase from $127,000,000 to $214,941,000 in 1938 amounts to 69 percent and the increase to $228,000,000 in 1939 is 79 percent. Of the 1938 amount, $7,774,000 came in the form of Government payments.

Every type of farm producer shared in this gain.

Michigan corn and hog purchasers, for example, had a cash income of $17,085,000 in 1938 as compared with $6,902,000 in 1932—an increase of 148 percent. The price of hogs went from $3.65 per hundredweight to an average of $7.90.

Potatoes, one of our promising newer crops, brought a total of $9,189,000 to Michigan farmers in 1938, 103 percent more than the 1932 figure of $4,530,000. The price rose from 26 to 48 cents a bushel in the same period.

Dollar wheat became a reality in December 1939, after a 1932 price of 45 cents a bushel. This meant an increase of 49 percent in the income of Michigan wheat farmers—from $3,946,000 to $5,869,000 in 1938 and an increase of 81 percent in 1939—$7,139,000.

There was a 121-percent gain in the amount received by Michigan farmers raising beef cattle and calves—their income going from $10,497,000 to $23,190,000 as beef cattle went from $3.95 to $6.40 per hundredweight, and veal calves from $5.70 to $9.60.

Apple growers in Michigan earned $4,282,000 in 1938 as compared with $2,891,000 for the 1932 crop, the respective prices being 86 and 65 cents a bushel. The price of butter, the basis of all dairy product prices, rose from 21 cents to 29 cents in the same period, as part of an increase of 59 percent in the income of milk producers. The figures were $62,854,000 for Michigan farmers in 1938 as compared with $39,489,000, 6 years before.

Poultry raisers in Michigan realized 32 percent more in 1938 than in 1932. The total receipts from chickens and eggs rose from $18,717,000 to $24,753,000 as chicken prices went from 11.2 to 16.4 cents a pound and eggs from 14.6 to 20.8 cents a dozen.

Growers of edible dry beans in our State received $8,709,000 for their produce as compared with $6,027,000 as the price went from $1.50 to $1.85 per hundredweight.

Sugar is an especially significant factor in Michigan's agricultural economy. Since the passage of sugar quota legislation in 1934, sugar-beet acreage, production, and grower income have increased.

Comparing the 5 years 1928–33 with the 5 years 1934–39, sugar acreage and production increased 20 percent in Michigan and grower income 44 percent, including Government payments, which amounted to $3,145,665 in the fiscal year ending June 1939. And it is the farmers themselves who have benefited from these payments.

SIXTY-PERCENT INCREASE

Altogether the crop adjustment and other phases of the agricultural program have contributed to increasing the amount of things the Michigan farmer can buy with the product of his labor—some 60 percent over the 1932 income. This is because, for the first time in many years, farm prices have gone up faster than the prices of the things the farmer has to buy.

Time does not permit me to do more than mention the new developments in other parts of the farm program—rural electrification, regulation of commodity exchanges, and mareting practices, forest improvement, and many others. But all of them mean much to the Michigan farmer.

AGRICULTURE AND WAR

One final point should be made in reference to the total farm program. I think it is particularly important right now. Large parts of the world are engulfed in the bloody sea of war. As each succeeding neutral comes into the maelstrom, our whole economy is deeply affected, whether we like it that way or not. And as the terrible tide washes closer to our shores, particularly is the farmer affected, as one by one his foreign markets are swept away by the flood. In fact, the farmer and the land from which he lives were among the chiefest victims of the last world tragedy.

In these dark and uncertain hours we can say one thing for sure: The farmer and his land will not suffer from this war and its after effects as they did from the last. The new machinery we have built for regulating production and insuring soil conservation can become an impregnable defense for our farm economy. Because this machinery is flexible and is run by farmers themselves, it can take care of almost any situation which may arise quickly and democratically. This is worth thinking about in such times as these.

THE RIGHT DIRECTION

Since this is a factual speech and not a political one, I have tried to emphasize the fact that the farmer's problems are not by any means all solved. We still have a lot of work to do and a long way to go. But we have come a good distance and are headed in the right direction.

Altogether it strikes me that our present farm program is a lot like one of the automobiles that were built in Michigan several years back. It is a new thing, meeting a new problem in a new way. It is not streamlined and it will not go 90 miles an hour. It is a little noisy at times and bucks some on the steep hills. But with all its fault it is still a great deal better than walking.

It took time, hard work, and good engineering to turn the model T into the latest V–8. The same thing is true of our farm program.

"GET A HORSE"

Just in closing I want to say something that may sound political—but is also, I think, good common sense. If our farm program today is like the automobile of a few years back, it is probably a good idea to entrust the job of developing and improving it to the men who built it in the first place in preference to others who have so far done nothing more than stand on the sidewalk and holler, "Get a horse."

SCHOOL DISTRICT 13, FROID, MONT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1450) to provide funds for cooperation with school district No. 13, Froid, Mont., for extension of public-school buildings to be available to Indian children, which were on page 1, line 6, to strike out "13" and to insert "15"; and to amend the title so as to read: "An act to provide funds for cooperation with school district No. 15, Froid, Mont., for extension of public-school buildings to be available to Indian children."

Mr. WHEELER. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE

Mr. MEAD. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 960) extending the classified executive civil service of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator will not ask for the consideration of that bill today, because it is my purpose, and the purpose of several others, to ask for the consideration of Senate bill 915, Calendar No. 475, the so-called Logan-Walter bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from New York that the bill which he has moved to consider has been on the calendar and in it many people in the United States are interested. It has passed the House by an overwhelming majority, and it is a measure which ought to be considered. I hope the Senator from New York will insist on his motion that the bill be made the unfinished business.

I will say to the Senator from New York and the Senator from Utah and all other Senators that it is not intended to proceed to a discussion of this bill this afternoon, but to go over until Monday.

Mr. KING. I may say to the able Senator from Kentucky that the Logan-Walter bill passed the House by an overwhelming majority several months ago. It came to the Senate and was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that committee unanimously—perhaps there was one absentee—voted in favor of the bill and directed those in charge of the measure to seek its early consideration. From time to time we have suggested the consideration of the bill, but, in deference to the wishes of the majority leader, and in view of the importance of legislation making provision for the national defense, we have not urged with that zeal which should have characterized our efforts the consideration of this bill. It seems to me there has been—and I am not criticizing any person or persons whatever—some determination not to have the Logan-Walter bill considered at this session of Congress.

I feel that the members of the Judiciary Committee, in view of the unanimous vote of that committee and the overwhelming vote of the Judiciary Committee of the House, in fact, the unanimous opinion of the Judiciary Committee of the House, as I recall, except for one, and the overwhelming vote of the Members of the House in favor of the bill, we would be derelict in our duty if we should consent to the adjournment of Congress without the consideration of this measure. All we ask is to have it fully considered by the Senate, and we respectfully suggest to our leader, for whom we entertain profound respect, that an opportunity be given us for the consideration of the measure. It seems to me that the so-called Ramspeck bill is not entitled to higher consideration than is the Logan-Walker bill to which I have so imperfectly referred.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. MEAD. I will be glad to yield for a short statement.

Mr. BURKE. It will be very short.

I am a member of the subcommittee of which the Senator from Utah is chairman, and I wish to reiterate what he has said and make a brief additional statement. Not only did the Logan-Walter bill pass the House by more than a 3-to-1 majority and come to this body for action, but a similar bill (S. 915), which has been on the calendar now for more than 16 months, actually passed the Senate on one occasion by unanimous consent, but, because of the absence of the majority leader and the majority whip and other Senators, a motion to reconsider was made and, of course, was granted; but at that time, as the RECORD will show, there was a very definite understanding made with our then colleague, Senator Logan, of Kentucky, that at the following session of Congress, which is the one in which we are now engaged, opportunity would be given for the consideration of the Logan-Walter bill, which was then on the calendar.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to permit me to ask a question of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. MEAD. I am glad to yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Would it refresh the Senator's recollection if I were to quote to him the exact words in which the statement was made by the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]? I quote the words:

> With the understanding that the bill be taken up at some date early in the next session.

Those words are to be found in the temporary RECORD on page 14800 and in the permanent RECORD on page 10621, volume 84, part 10, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. BURKE. The session to which reference was made was the session in which we are now engaged, which began last January.

So I wish to say, Mr. President, as one of the members of the committee, that unless there is an agreement by the majority leader to have the Logan-Walter bill given a definite day I propose, for one, to do everything in my power to see that other legislation is not passed ahead of it. I shall, so far as possible, exercise my right to object to unanimous-consent requests. I shall insist upon speaking upon the Logan-Walter bill at very considerable length in the progress of any other business that may precede it. In other words, we are now driven to the point where we must stand upon our feet and say something, as we do not intend to let this session of Congress draw to a close without having the Senate, at least, given the opportunity to concur in the action of the House of Representatives, which passed the bill by a 3-to-1 majority, or reject that action.

Mr. President, I thank the Senator from New York for yielding. He has been recognized. When his motion is put I expect to vote against it, not because I have any objection to the bill itself but because of the absence of an agreement on the part of the majority leader that the Logan-Walter bill may have a place here for consideration.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; for a brief observation.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico will state it.

Mr. HATCH. What is the present status?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A motion is pending, made by the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD], that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 960, Calendar No. 1954.

Mr. HATCH. That is a motion to proceed to the consideration of what is commonly known as the Ramspeck bill?

Mr. MEAD. That is correct.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I asked the Senator from New York to yield. I desire to make some observations on the subject.

Mr. MEAD. I shall be very glad to yield.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from New York very kindly agreed to yield for a brief observation. I prefer to be my own judge of the length of time and of the observations I shall make. I shall speak in my own right on the motion of the Senator from New York.

Mr. MEAD. I am only interested in having the motion decided upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion——

Mr. HATCH. Before the question is put, I seek recognition on the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state the motion, and if the Senator from New Mexico desires recognition on the motion he will be recognized.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield for a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Has any motion been made?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion was made. The Chair has just stated, in answer to an inquiry, that the motion was made. The Chair has not stated the motion, however.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Unless I have lost my hearing, in response to a parliamentary inquiry a moment ago the Chair stated that a request for unanimous consent had been made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. A motion has been made, then? That is an entirely different parliamentary situation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 960, Calendar No. 1954.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I desire to bring this bill to the attention of the Senate at this time because I believe it is in the interest of orderly procedure and efficient management of government. It is not a very difficult bill to understand, and a great deal of time ought not to be required to debate it.

The bill contains two principal sections, one of which gives the President of the United States authority, under certain circumstances and conditions, to cover into the civil service employees of the agencies of government who are now outside the merit system. The President may or may not exercise this authority; but if he should exercise the authority given to him under the provisions of the bill, it would then be necessary for the employee, before being covered under the civil service, to receive the recommendation of the head of the agency in which he is employed, and to pass an examination, the terms of which are to be decided and determined by the Civil Service Commission itself.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. MEAD. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the President were to exercise the sum total of power involved, how many positions would be covered into the civil service?

Mr. MEAD. The bill includes all the agencies of government not now within the civil service, excluding the W. P. A. and agencies operating on funds allotted to the W. P. A., and includes the agencies of government with which the Senator is familiar which have been created during the past 7 years. It would take a considerable length of time to bring within the civil service any measurable number of persons, because the President of the United States would have to issue the order, the Civil Service Commission would have to make up the examinations required in the many categories, and then they would have to provide the times for holding the examinations. I presume the bill would cover possibly 150,000 or 200,000 employees, assuming that the employees comply with the rules and regulations laid down in the bill and to be provided for in the future by the Civil Service Commission. They would, of course, have to be employed in an agency for at least 6 months prior to the time when the President would issue the proclamation. They would have to apply for an examination provided for them by the Civil Service Commission; they would have then to take the examination; and they would have to wait until eligible rosters were established. That would take considerable time, and it is assumed that no large, substantial number of these employees would be covered within the civil service in any one year. Their inclusion would be spread out over a period of years, in order not to overburden the present hard-working Civil Service Commission.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I understand that the Senator's overall estimate is around 200,000?

Mr. MEAD. Various figures were given to the committee during the hearings; but I should say that if eventually and finally, after a long period of time, 200,000 were brought into the civil service, that would be a very fair estimate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. MEAD. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Purely for information, because I am not familiar with the terms of the bill, would district attorneys throughout the United States be put under civil service?

Mr. MEAD. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Would United States marshals throughout the country be put under civil service?

Mr. MEAD. United States attorneys, United States marshals, and deputy collectors of internal revenue.

Mr. McKELLAR. Would collectors of internal revenue also be put under civil service?

Mr. MEAD. They would.

Mr. McKELLAR. Would first-class postmasters be put under civil service?

Mr. MEAD. All postmasters are already covered. They would not be affected by this bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Would they be taken out of their present status by this bill and not be required to be confirmed by the Senate?

Mr. MEAD. No. In answer to the Senator from Tennessee, I will say that under the administration of President Harrison a bill was passed, called the Pendleton bill, which authorized the then President of the United States to cover under the civil service everybody in the Federal service. President Harrison did not very frequently exercise the authority conveyed to him, but President Cleveland did. Then, after a time, although the President already had in the Pendleton law authority to cover all agencies within the civil service, in the enactment of legislation creating new agencies the Congress specifically prohibited the President from exercising that power with reference to a certain agency which was then to be created by the Congress.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator further tell me, for information, whether Cabinet officers would come within the provisions of the bill? Would they be covered into the civil service?

Mr. MEAD. No.

Mr. McKELLAR. Would Assistant Secretaries of Departments be covered into the civil service, such as the Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, the Asistant Secretaries of State, and the Assistant Secretaries of all the other Departments?

Mr. MEAD. It is assumed that they would not be, because that matter was discussed.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have just looked at the provisions of the bill. It seems that there are certain exceptions; and I do not find the Assistant Secretaries of State, or the Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, or the Assistant Secretaries of Commerce, or of Labor, or of any other department, within the exceptions. Therefore, the language of the bill being broad enough to cover all of the agencies of the Government, I take it that there is no doubt that under the bill the Assistant Secretaries of the various departments would be covered into the civil service.

The Senator does not think so.

Let me ask one other question, and then I believe I will be through. In the Department of Justice there are several hundred attorneys, as I recall, drawing probably from $10,000 down to somewhere around $2,000. Would they be covered into the civil service? Is the Department of Justice to be forced to take such lawyers as pass a civil-service examination?

Mr. MEAD. As I stated to the Senator a moment ago, in the first section of the bill we merely restate the authority given to the President in the original legislation giving the President authority to bring certain agencies of the Government within the civil service. It was brought out in our hearings that neither this bill, nor the original law, nor the Executive orders of the President in the interim period, attempted to cover within the civil service public officers requiring Senate confirmation. That matter was discussed in the hearings, and it was suggested that if it was thought necessary to exclude policy-holding positions—positions requiring confirmation by the Senate—we might add the following language:

Except offices or positions to which appointment is required to be made by the President by and with the confirmation of the Senate.

We were advised by the Civil Service Commission that the President could, under the terms of the bill, cover within the civil service collectors, marshals, United States attorneys, and other field employees now requiring Senate confirmation; but it was maintained by experts who seemed to be familiar with the civil-service law that the bill would not authorize the President to cover within the civil service any employee requiring confirmation by the Senate. As I stated in the beginning, this merely gives the President authority taken from him from time to time when a specific measure was passed creating a specific agency of government.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will permit me, I shall read the statement of power given the President under the bill in the first 8 lines:

TITLE I. EXTENSION OF CIVIL SERVICE ACT

That notwithstanding any provisions of law to the contrary—

That takes them all in—the President is authorized by Executive order to cover into the classified civil service any offices—

Not some, but any office—

any offices or positions in or under an executive department, independent establishment, or other agency of the Government.

I may not have a correct knowledge of language, but, in my judgment, that language covers every Assistant Secretary of any department, every lawyer except the Attorney General himself, and, as a matter of fact, even the Attorney General is not in terms excepted under the bill. It may be possible by judicial construction to except him, but certainly one under him and under other independent offices would not be excepted. Let us take the Securities Commission, in which there are many scores, possibly hundreds, of lawyers. All of them would be under the civil service, although those positions require certain technical knowledge which only certain kinds of trained lawyers possess. It seems to me this is a most all-inclusive bill which virtually puts the Government under the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. MEAD. If I may attempt at least to clear up the apparent misunderstanding under which the Senate seems to be laboring, I shall have to have a little time in which to do it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. MEAD. I was not making any reference to what the Senator from Tennessee said, because I believe he made a really constructive contribution to the debate.

The same question which seems to be troubling the Senator troubled me and others during the course of the hearings on the bill. It was maintained by representatives of the Civil Service Commission that the bill covered United States marshals, United States attorneys, collectors of customs, and others in the field service of the United States. It was maintained by others who are thoroughly conversant with civil-service practice that the bill does not cover policy-making positions, positions requiring Presidential appointment, or positions requiring Senate confirmation. It specifies in section 2 that the head of the agency shall confirm to the Civil Service Commission the eligibility of the employee working under his jurisdiction, and the Civil Service Commission will in turn provide the customary examination for employees in that category. It was assumed that that would not pertain to Cabinet officers, to policy-making positions, or to those requiring specifically by law appointment by the President and confirmation by the Senate.

I shall be perfectly satisfied if the Senator from Tennessee, or any other Member of the Senate, will suggest an amendment agreeable to the chairman of our committee—an amendment similar to the amendment which I had inserted in the civil-service section of the reorganization bill, which I had in charge in the other House, which would specifically by words eliminate all positions requiring Presidential nomination and senatorial confirmation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I am glad to yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator will recall that under the act providing civil-service status for postmasters, which was enacted some 2 or 3 years ago, there was a provision requiring Presidential appointment and senatorial confirmation. So that while all postmasters now are under the civil service, and the selection is made from the three highest, as always heretofore in the case of appointment to a civil-service position, the nomination really must come to the Senate and receive senatorial confirmation before the appointee can take office.

Mr. MEAD. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Even in dealing with some of the higher officers mentioned by the Senator from Tennessee a similar provision could be made, if it is the wish of Congress to place them in a civil-service status after they have been appointed and confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. But such a provision is not in the bill now.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; it is not.

Mr. MEAD. The Senator is correct.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I call attention to the fact that the Senate voted to require confirmation by the Senate, and in conference the Senate conferees abandoned the action taken by the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is mistaken, I think.

Mr. GLASS. No; I am not.

Mr. BARKLEY. All postmasters still have to be confirmed.

Mr. GLASS. They are interminable now—those who are in.

Mr. BARKLEY. Only those who were appointed under the new law. Those appointed before that was passed were required to take at least a noncompetitive examination to establish their qualifications, and may be required to take a competitive examination before their names can be sent to the Senate.

Mr. GLASS. I know distinctly that the Senate conferees abandoned the action of the Senate formally taken by a recorded vote.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think if the Senator will look into that he will find he is in error.

Mr. GLASS. I know I am not.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is part of the law, now, and every day these appointments come to the Senate for confirmation.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, if I may take a few minutes to hurriedly run through an explanation of the bill, we might be able to proceed expeditiously with the consideration of the measure.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. HILL. Before the Senator starts on an explanation of the bill, I wonder whether I might call to his attention and to the attention of the Senate the provision in the Constitution which deals with the matter of appointments, in the hope that as the Senator proceeds with his explanation of the bill he may point out how the bill conforms with the language of the Constitution.

If the Senator will yield, the language of the Constitution to which I refer is found in article II, section 2, defining the powers of the Chief Executive, and it is said:

He—

Meaning the President, the Chief Executive—

He shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law. But the Congress by law may vest the appointment of such inferior officers—as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments.

I find nothing in the bill as I have examined it which in any way limits the operation of the bill to what the Constitution calls "inferior officers," and I hope that as the Senator goes along and explains the bill he will make it clear just how the bill conforms with this section of the Constitution, and the language of the section, because I am sure the Senator desires to conform in every way with the requirements and the provisions of the Constitution.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. KING. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator in the logical presentation of the case, but he stated a few moments ago, in answer to a question propounded by the Senator from Michigan, that he thought the bill would involve perhaps a hundred thousand or a hundred and fifty thousand employees. My recollection is that there are now considerably more than a million employees on the Federal pay roll, and with the enormous increase now taking place, with the increase in the agencies of the Federal Government, and the multiplication of offices and office holders and employees in the various activities, I feel sure there will soon be more than 2,000,000 employees on the Federal pay roll. There will be built up such a powerful bureaucracy that it will be almost impossible to dislodge it. I hope the Senator will advise us of the number of employees who will be covered by this bill now and in the immediate future.

Mr. MEAD. Of course, in the estimate of the number of employees which is given to the Senate by my distingished friend the Senator from Utah, there is included the W. P. A., and there are perhaps included the other agencies of government which are financed from W. P. A. funds. There are also included W. P. A. employees. That agency is being liquidated. There are included the H. O. L. C. employees, and that agency is being liquidated. There are a great many agencies and a great many employees whom I tried to approximate, so far as number is concerned, when I attempted to answer the question directed to me by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

I have in mind also that the bill would cover no one under the civil service. It would merely give to a President, who may exercise it next year or 10 years from now, an authority which the Congress gave him many years ago, an authority which was tried and tested in the inferior courts, in the superior courts, and in the Supreme Court, and in the tests it was proven to be valid legislation.

Mr. President, there are, as I said in the beginning, two titles in the bill. I should like to have the attention of the Senate so that I may tell it what is included in title I and in title II.

Title I of the bill would permit the President by Executive order to bring into the civil service, employees in the agencies of the Government, except the W. P. A., and in agencies financed by W. P. A. funds, who are now outside the civil service. The President now has authority in certain instances, by Executive order, to bring positions within the civil service. We all recall that President Wilson brought the postmasters of the Nation within the civil service, only to have them excluded in the next administration by a similar Executive order.

It has been ruled by the Attorney General that when the Congress in creating a new agency specifically exempts the positions under the agency from the civil-service law and from the Classification Act the President in such instances is powerless to cover those employees within the civil service, even though in the administration of President Harrison the Congress decided, after a long-drawn-out fight, that the rank and file employees of the permanent agencies of the Government, could be brought within the civil service by the Executive order of a President of the United States. We are merely restating that authority, and giving to the present President and the President who may be the President 10 or 20 years from now, the authority exercised by President Wilson, by President Cleveland, and by all the Presidents who have served since the passage of that law. So much for title I. It is assumed as the result of the laws which have been passed on this subject, and the Executive orders which have been promulgated, that it applies to rank and file employees of the Government; that it does not apply to employees requiring Presidential nomination or confirmation by the Senate, but that it does apply and will apply to rank and file employees of permanent agencies of government.

Title II merely seeks to extend to the field service the provisions of another congressional act, the Classification Act, an act passed by the Congress originally in 1923, whereas under existing law it only applies in the District of Columbia to the service in Washington.

The Classification Act received the consideration of several Congresses. It was studied exhaustively by committees of both Houses. It was the subject of investigation, and finally it became the scientific application of a rule, a uniform rule, which brought order out of chaos, which meant justice to the employees in the civil service, and which made uniform the salaries which were paid in the several agencies for the work that was being performed.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator has told me that title I ultimately may cover 200,000 persons. Will he tell me how many title II in all could cover?

Mr. MEAD. As I have tried to explain, I could not give the Senator the exact number, but title II will follow in the wake of title I, and as the President, by Executive order, covers an agency within the civil service, that particular agency will come under the Classification Act, and its salary grades will be graded under the provisions of the Civil Service Act, so as many as are brought within the civil service will be brought within the Classification Act.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Can the Senator give me a figure estimating the over-all coverage of title II?

Mr. MEAD. I can only advance a guess, that if some future President of the United States, taking into consideration the agencies which exist today, should attempt to cover them all, which is an uncertainty, it might extravagantly reach 200,000.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator's own report says that it will reach 300,000 and involve $14,000,000 in salary increases. Is that correct?

Mr. MEAD. That takes into consideration all the agencies which were transferred before the committee amended the bill and eliminated a number of agencies. For instance, we wrote into the bill an amendment which eliminated not only the W. P. A. but in the General Accounting Office the employees who were added to the rolls by reason of the additional work resulting from W. P. A. activities. I am advancing what I assume to be a conservative guess. In advancing that guess I must have in mind the varying lists of personnel. I must have in mind, I assume, the permanency of these agencies and the possibility of a ruling on the part of the President that they must be permanent agencies before they are finally covered within the civil service. I am still of the opinion that 200,000 is a very good estimate.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Then the Senator is of the opinion that the committee's report is not particularly valid as a source of reliance?

Mr. MEAD. I think the committee's report is a good estimate, if we take the maximum number under the most encouraging conditions, with a most friendly administration, but it occurs to me that 200,000 would perhaps be a better guess.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that title I of the bill provides the method by which employees may be given a civil-service status, after the President has covered an agency into the civil service, after which all those employees must take at least a noncompetitive examination, provided they have been certified as being qualified by the head of the department or the agency.

Mr. MEAD. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Title II, as I understand, does not cover any more persons under the civil service, but provides for their salary under the Classification Act. They are already under civil service when title II takes effect.

Mr. MEAD. That is correct. Under title I the employee to be covered within the civil service must first of all be included in a Presidential proclamation. Secondly, he must receive the recommendation of the head of his department. In the third place, he must try to pass a civil-service examination. With it all he must have had 6 months' experience prior to the time of the publication of the Executive order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I gladly yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator believe—and I express no opinion by reason of the interrogative form of my question—that the power ought to be left with the President to determine what agencies or departments should come within the classified service? Does not the Senator believe that Congress ought to have some voice in determining whether an agency should come within the purview of the statute dealing with classifications?

Mr. MEAD. A dozen Congresses wrestled with that question, and when the Congress passed the first Civil Service Act and passed subsequent amendments to that act it gave that power to the President of the United States.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I suppose it is not particularly important to nail down the figure I have been struggling to reach. As I understand, the Senator's estimate is 200,000 under title II.

Mr. MEAD. No; I think I had better merely leave with the Senator the thought that that was my estimate or guess in answer to his question. If we take the personnel of the Government in its entirety at any one particular time, as was the case when the estimate for the report was produced, and include the W. P. A., perhaps 300,000 would be a very good estimate.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I notice that the Civil Service Commission officially estimates the number at 320,000, and estimates that there will be an increase of $14,000,000 in the pay roll.

Mr. MEAD. That may be the result of a letter which was sent to the Commission some time ago, which included the W. P. A.

With reference to the $14,000,000 added to the pay roll, that is another estimate. Let me try to explain how it would apply and how the Civil Service Commission obtained that figure.

In practically every city in the United States we have Federal personnel—in the United States marshal's office, the United States attorney's office, the offices of collectors of customs, and in various other offices of the Government. In one office a stenographer may be receiving $1,320 a year. In another office, perhaps because of seniority or because of some other consideration, a stenographer doing exactly the same work may be receiving $1,800 a year. Senators are familiar with the procedure so far as salary grades are concerned. When no law or uniform rule exists, it is sometimes a case of using influence. Again, it may be the result of recognition by a sympathetic employer. The Classification Act merely attempts to apply a uniform rule so that in all the cities of the United States Federal employees will receive a uniform salary for the same work.

That situation now applies in the Postal Service. A letter carrier in New York receives the same salary as does a letter carrier in Los Angeles; but an employee in the office of the collector of internal revenue in Portland, Oreg., doing exactly the same work as a corresponding employee in the office in Portland, Maine, may receive a salary in excess of that received by the employee in Portland, Maine.

In an estimate of the cost of operation for personnel in the field after the Classification Act is applied it is assumed that an additional $14,000,000 annually might be required to meet the cost of the pay roll, but such an estimate does not take into consideration the added efficiency of the personnel, the savings due to elimination of loss in turn-over, and the elimination of constant negotiation and turmoil in behalf of justifiable salary grades. I am of the opinion that such a plan would not cost a cent. It would result in better government. It would probably result in an increase for the lower-paid employees, and it might result in a decrease for employees who have been successful in securing what might be assumed to be unjustifiable increases; but it would result in uniformity and would produce efficiency.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I understand the Senator's contention to be that title II would produce uniform salaries, and stabilize salaries.

Mr. MEAD. The Senator is correct. That is exactly what it would do.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. For the past 2 or 3 years quite a number of persons have applied to me for jobs. Many of them had qualified under the civil-service laws. Has the Senator any figures to show what the status of the registers of the Civil Service Commission were, let us say, for the past 2 or 3 years, when a large number of persons were employed in various agencies under Executive order and without civil-service status?

Mr. MEAD. I presume the Senator is anxious to know whether or not there is a semblance of balance in the quota law as it applies to the several States.

Mr. ELLENDER. No; I do not have that in mind. As the Senator knows, the Commission gives examinations at various times in order to qualify stenographers and other employees for the various departments of government. What was the condition of the civil-service registers at the time, let us say, that many employees were placed on the pay rolls without having to pass a civil-service examination? In other words, were there not many persons on those registers who were awaiting jobs, but who were overlooked in order that non-civil-service applicants might be selected?

Mr. MEAD. I am unable to answer that question; but as the situation applies to this bill, when we authorize the President to cover an agency within the civil service, and the personnel of that agency is called upon to try a civil-service examination which may result in a number of failures, then and only then would those on a civil-service register, ineligible all the time they were on the register for employment under the civil service in a particular agency, become eligible for appointment; and as a result they would have a greater field in which to find employment. But I do not know the condition of the register at any given time, and I do not know that that has anything to do with the covering of an agency within the civil service. However, as more agencies are covered within the civil service, those on the register have more opportunities for employment.

Mr. ELLENDER. I am informed that for a certain period the General Accounting Office was loaded up with employees who did not take the civil-service examination, whereas there were many on the civil-service registers who were qualified. In other words, instead of their getting the jobs, they were given to persons who did not stand an examination.

Mr. MEAD. I will say to the Senator from Louisiana that it is my understanding that the volume of work heaped upon the General Accounting Office as a result of the activities of the W. P. A. and other emergency agencies was so great that provision had to be made for added personnel. Provision also had to be made for appropriations to take care of the added personnel.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. The added personnel could have been obtained from the civil-service registers, but, unfortunately, that was not done.

Mr. MEAD. And for a good reason. It was determined by the Congress that a certain amount of the money appropriated for W. P. A. should be allotted to the General Accounting Office to take care of the added volume of business resulting from the activity of the W. P. A., and that the employees who were added to the staff of the General Accounting Office should not be taken from the civil-service register and given a civil-service status because, if W. P. A. were to be liquidated, then the General Accounting Office would have a problem on its hands in taking care of the added personnel which would have a civil-service status.

Mr. ELLENDER. Why could not the services of persons with a civil-service status be dispensed with to the same extent as are the services of other employees? Moreover, these emergency employees have had constant work for many years.

Mr. MEAD. I suppose the appropriations for W. P. A. were primarily approved by the Congress to take care of those who were on relief, rather than those who were on the civil-service registers. I suppose the rules and regulations in the W. P. A. law and in subsequent appropriations were applied in the employment of personnel paid for out of those appropriations. I suppose every agency of Government, temporary or permanent, may go to the civil-service registers or to the reemployment registers; but, of course, if that course were always followed, certain citizens who need employment would receive no recognition whatsoever.

Mr. ELLENDER. Does not the Senator think it is wrong for any agency in which civil service is required to be permitted to go to any other place than the civil-service registers to obtain its employees?

Mr. MEAD. Civil service was not required in the General Accounting Office in connection with the work which was added to the General Accounting Office's responsibility as a result of W. P. A., because the Congress specifically earmarked a certain amount of W. P. A. money for the extra burden heaped upon the General Accounting Office, and that money was used for personnel hired temporarily for that purpose only. That personnel did not become part or parcel of the permanent staff of the General Accounting Office.

Mr. ELLENDER. This so-called emergency did not exist merely as a result of W. P. A. If the pending bill is enacted, many will be given civil-service status in preference to those who were eligible because they qualified under the civil-service laws.

Mr. MEAD. As I understand, they are more or less listed as temporary W. P. A. personnel.

Mr. President, I am about to conclude. Later on, after the motion has been acted upon, I desire to have an opportunity to discuss the merits of the bill. I close, as I started, by saying that we are not attempting to advocate or sponsor a new principle of law or of government. The Congress of the United States battled with this question for over a hundred years, and it was climaxed in the administration of President Harrison when the Pendleton Act was passed. That act gave to the President and to every one of his successors in office authority to blanket within the civil service the employees of the permanent agencies of government. We are merely perfecting the authority given to the President, and we are adding to it certain limitations and requirements. We are doing so in the interest of orderly procedure, because, instead of allowing the President to blanket persons into the civil service without regard to ability or any other consideration which might be appropriate, we require, first of all, the proclamation of the President; secondly, the approval of the head of the department; and, thirdly, the passing of an examination, not authorized or compiled by the head of the agency, but an examination under the Civil Service Commission. We surround the procedure with careful, well-rounded consideration; and, as a result of that procedure, no one can prophesy now the number of persons who will be brought into the civil service within any given time. Only a certain number of examinations can be held over and above those which are now being held; and if the Civil Service Commission were suddenly called upon to give examinations to everybody in the Federal service and outside of the civil service, I do not believe they could do so within a period of 3 or 4 years.

So I believe the enactment of this bill will be in keeping with good, orderly, efficient procedure of government. It will give to the Presidents of tomorrow the authority which the Congress gave to the Presidents many, many years ago. It will apply only to the agencies of government hereafter to be created or heretofore created which have been specifically kept outside of the purview of the civil service.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. KING. Upon two occasions the Senator has alluded to the fact that by this bill we are conferring upon the President only the authority which he heretofore has enjoyed. Is it not a fact that Congress believed that if the act to which the Senator referred did confer upon the President unlimited authority to blanket agencies under the civil service it was too great an authority, and by a number of restrictive measures they took from him the authority which the Senator contends was conferred in prior legislation? In other words, is it not a fact that the Congress took away from the President the blanket authority which the Senator contends he enjoyed under a former act, believing that Congress ought to have something to say in regard to who should come under the civil service, and what agencies should be brought within the Classification Act?

Mr. MEAD. I probably may assume that at times, when a specific agency of government was being created by the Congress, the Congress or its leaders or a substantial number of its Members felt that the given agency ought to be outside of the civil service and ought to be maintained in the patronage category. I suppose that at times a majority felt that way, and so amendments were written into certain acts at variance with the policy of the Congress adopted when the Pendleton Act was written into the law. I suppose the Congress has occasionally deviated from that policy, and, I believe, without good results. Therefore, it is my opinion that the Congress ought to hark back to the policy which it adopted many years ago, and to the policy which in the main it has supported ever since.

Mr. KING. If I may again interrupt the Senator, he knows that a policy of Congress today does not indefinitely bind Congress. We may change our views. Congress upon at least one occasion has declared against a third Presidential term; and by that I do not mean to imply that we ought to favor or ought not to favor a third term now. The point I am making is that a declaration by Congress of a policy does not bind Congress indefinitely. Congress is the author of its own laws; and it may determine what policies, within the power of the legislative branch of the government, may be carried into effect by the Government itself.

Mr. MEAD. The Senator is perfectly correct. We cannot bind a future Congress; but, looking back over the experiences of this country and of other countries, over the experiences of all the States and all the municipalities, we find that there are certain progressive steps which progressive government takes, and once it takes those progressive steps it never returns to the status which was in existence before it made its departure. This is a progressive step, uniformly and universally taken by the Federal Government and by every political subdivision of the Federal Government; and, of course, no Senator would infer that this Government or any part of this Government would ever return in the main to the patronage system of the early history of our country.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. MEAD. I had better yield the floor to the Senator, because I am through.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, when I asked the Senator from New York to yield a moment ago, and it seemed to me that for some reason he did not care to yield, and I said I would speak in my own time as long as I might desire, there was no intention on my part to discuss this motion or the bill itself this afternoon. It is late now; but I do not want the session to adjourn without making my position clear. I wanted to support the Senator from New York in his motion. I think the motion should prevail, and that the bill should not only be acted upon but should be passed. I also hope—and I rose to express my view on that subject—that the Logan-Walter bill may be acted upon and passed at this session.

I am quite sure the majority floor leader desires the floor at this time, and I do not care to continue my remarks tonight. Perhaps tomorrow or Monday I should like to discuss some reasons why this particular measure, the Ramspeck bill, should be passed, why both political parties ought to keep some of the promises they have been making to the people of the country for more than 50 years, not that the present civil service as it exists may be enlarged and expanded, that is not the answer, but that a real system of merit and efficiency may be set up for all the inferior officials and employees of the Federal Government.

Mr. REED obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may we have a vote on the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, before we have a vote on that motion, I wish to address myself to it at some length.

Mr. BARKLEY. If that be so, then I think we might as well suspend here and let the motion go over until Monday.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, before that is done——

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas was recognized.

Mr. BARKLEY. I hope the Senator is not going to make a point of no quorum until I can get some things in the RECORD.

Mr. REED. May I yield to accommodate the Senate majority leader?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas has the floor.

PRESIDENT'S STATEMENTS ON PEACE

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will yield to me, I wish to have some matters inserted into the RECORD, and to make a statement about them.

Mr. President, the attempt of certain persons in this political hour to charge the President of the United States with showing a tendency toward war, or performing acts leading America into war, is a deliberate disregard of a consistent record made by him in his public utterances on peace covering a period of many years.

President Roosevelt has been an active and earnest advocate of peace; definite in all of his pronouncements that America will not participate aggressively in war with any foreign nation. To attribute to the President any motive of fostering hostile activity with any nation with which we are now at peace is sheer nonsense. For anyone to say that President Roosevelt by any act, thought, speech, or connivance has done anything having a tendency to plunge this country into any of the wars now being waged is an untruth from the whole cloth.

Every word, sentence, paragraph, or speech of the President's has been designed to urge all nations to adjust their legitimate differences by negotiation and arbitration, and, by preventing war elsewhere in the world, to safeguard our own peace and that of the Western Hemisphere. He has ventured to appeal to the dictators and rulers of the European countries that they should not precipitate conflicts which would disturb world peace. It is not humanly possible in the framing of words into sentences to make them more definite than has the President in his statements in opposition to war. In no way, shape or form, act or deed has he said or done anything to encourage hostilities anywhere in the world, but he has consistently advocated the settlement of international disputes by just methods of pacific negotiation and arbitration.

For reassurance and conclusive proof of this assertion, I offer for the RECORD, and ask that they be printed as part of my remarks, quotations from numerous statements by the President against the participation of the United States in any foreign conflict. Furthermore, by no stretch of the imagination can any American citizen consider the enactment of the Selective Military Service and Training Act in any other light than as a measure of adequate preparation for our national defense for any emergency which may arise.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the able majority leader whether he is advocating the reelection of President Roosevelt on the ground that he has kept us out of war?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I am not advocating his reelection on the ground that he has kept us out of war. No such campaign issue has arisen. I suppose that even the Senator from Ohio knows that we are not at war.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXCERPTS FROM THE PRESIDENT'S STATEMENTS ON PEACE

[Excerpt from the annual message of the President of the United States delivered before a joint session of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, 76th Cong., 1st sess., January 4, 1939]

That hemisphere, that peace, and that ideal we propose to do our share in protecting against storms from any quarter. Our people and our resources are pledged to secure that protection. From that determination no American flinches.

This by no means implies that the American republics disassociate themselves from the nations of other continents—it does not mean the Americas against the rest of the world. We as one of the republics reiterate our willingness to help the cause of world peace. We stand on our historic offer to take counsel with all other nations of the world to the end that aggression among them be terminated, that the race of armaments cease, and that commerce be renewed.

[Excerpt from press conference No. 523, February 3, 1939]

As a nation—as American people—we are sympathetic with the peaceful maintenance of political, economic, and social independence of all nations in the world.

[Excerpt from address of the President by radio from Key West, Fla., on the occasion of the opening of the San Francisco Golden Gate Exposition, February 18, 1939]

Many times, in the elaboration of what I call the good-neighbor policy, I have stressed the point that the maintenance of peace in the Western Hemisphere must be the first concern of all Americans—North Americans, South Americans, and Central Americans—for nothing is more true than that we here in the New World carry the hopes of millions of human beings in other less fortunate lands. By setting an example of international solidarity, cooperation, mutual trust, and mutual helpfulness we may keep faith alive in the heart of anxious and troubled humanity and at the same time lift democracy high above the ugly truculence of autocracy.

[Excerpt from address of the President by radio from Key West, Fla., in connection with the Pan American Hernando De Soto Exposition at Tampa, Fla., February 18, 1939]

We desire by every legitimate means to promote freedom in trade and travel and in the exchange of cultural ideas among nations. We seek no territorial expansion; we are not covetous of our neighbor's goods; we shall cooperate in every proposal honestly put forward to limit armaments; we abhor the appeal to physical force except to repulse aggression; but we say to all the world that in the Western Hemisphere—in the three Americas—the institutions of democracy—government with the consent of the governed—must and shall be maintained.

[Excerpt from address of the President of the United States delivered before a joint session of the two Houses of Congress, 76th Cong., 3d sess., January 3, 1940]

For out of all the military and diplomatic turmoil, out of all the propaganda and counterpropaganda of the present conflicts, there are two facts which stand out and which the whole world acknowledges.

The first is that never before has the Government of the United States done so much as in our recent past to establish and maintain the policy of the good neighbor with its sister nations.

The second is that in almost every nation in the world today there is a true public belief that the United States has been, and will continue to be, a potent and active factor in seeking the reestablishment of peace.

In these recent years we have had a clean record of peace and good will. It is an open book that cannot be twisted or defamed. It is a record that must be continued and enlarged.

[Excerpt from address of the President broadcast in connection with the Christian foreign-service convocation, Saturday, March 16, 1940. From press release]

Today we seek a moral basis for peace. It cannot be a real peace if it fails to recognize brotherhood. It cannot be a lasting peace if the fruit of it is oppression, or starvation, or cruelty, or human life dominated by armed camps. It cannot be a sound peace if small nations must live in fear of powerful neighbors. It cannot be a moral peace if freedom from invasion is sold for tribute. It cannot be an intelligent peace if it denies free passage to that knowledge of those ideals which permit men to find common ground. It cannot be a righteous peace if worship of God is denied.

[Excerpt from address of the President before the governing board of the Pan American Union, April 15, 1940]

Universal and stable peace remains a dream. War, more horrible and destructive than ever, has laid its blighting hand on many parts of the earth. Peace among our American nations remains secure because of the instruments we have succeeded in creating. They embody, in great measure at least, the principles upon which, I believe, enduring peace must be based throughout the world.

Peace reigns today in the Western Hemisphere because our nations have liberated themselves from fear. No nation is truly at peace if it lives under the shadow of coercion or invasion. By the simple process of agreeing that each nation shall respect the integrity and independence of the others, the New World has freed itself of the greatest and simplest cause of war. Self-restraint and the acceptance of the equal rights of our neighbors as an act of effective will has given us the peace we have had, and will preserve that peace so long as we abide by this ultimate moral law.

[Excerpt from address of the President of the Young Democratic Clubs of America, April 20, 1940]

I am not speaking tonight of world affairs. Your Government is keeping a cool head and a steady hand. We are keeping out of the wars that are going on in Europe and in Asia, but I do not subscribe to the preachment of a Republican aspirant for the Presidency who tells you, in effect, that the United States and the people of the United States should do nothing to try to bring about a better order, a more secure order, of world peace when the time comes.

[Excerpt from address of the President broadcast from White House, May 26, 1940]

Day and night I pray for the restoration of peace in this mad world of ours. It is not necessary that I, the President, ask the American people to pray in behalf of such a cause—I know you are praying with me.

I am certain that out of the hearts of every man, woman, and child in this land, in every waking minute, a supplication goes up to Almighty God; that all of us beg that suffering and starving, that death and destruction may end, and that peace may return to the world. In common affection for all mankind, your prayers join with mine that God will heal the wounds and the hearts of humanity.

[Excerpt from address delivered by the President at the graduation exercises of the University of Virginia, June 10, 1940]

I informed the Chief of the Italian Government that this desire on the part of Italy to prevent the war from spreading met with full sympathy and response on the part of the Government and the people of the United States, and I expressed the earnest hope of this Government and of this people that this policy on the part of Italy might be continued. I made it clear that in the opinion of the Government of the United States any extension of hostilities in the region of the Mediterranean might result in a still greater enlargement of the scene of the conflict, the conflict in the Near East and in Africa, and that if this came to pass no one could foretell how much greater the theater of the war eventually might become.

[Excerpt from the President's message to the Congress of the United States, July 10, 1940]

That we are opposed to war is known not only to every American, but to every government in the world. We will not use our arms in a war of aggression; we will not send our men to take part in European wars.

[Excerpt from President Roosevelt's address to the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, September 11, 1940]

Weakness in these days is a cordial invitation to attack. That is no longer theory; it is a proven fact—proved in the past year.

I hate war now more than ever. I have one supreme determination—to do all I can to keep war away from these shores for all time. I stand, with my party, upon the platform adopted in Chicago:

We will not participate in foreign wars, and we will not send our Army, naval, or air forces to fight in foreign lands outside of the Americas, except in case of attack.

[Excerpt from communication from President Roosevelt to Chancelor Hitler of Germany, August 24, 1939]

To the massage which I sent to you last April I have received no reply, but because of my confident belief that the cause of world peace—which is the cause of humanity itself—rises above all other considerations, I am again addressing myself to you with the hope that the war which impends and the consequent disaster to all peoples everywhere may yet be averted.

I therefore urge with all earnestness—and I am likewise urging the President of the Republic of Poland—that the Governments of Germany and of Poland agree by common accord to refrain from any positive act of hostility for a reasonable and stipulated period, and that they agree likewise by common accord to solve the controversies which have arisen between them by one of the three following methods: First, by direct negotiation; second, by submission of these controversies to an impartial arbitration in which they can both have confidence; or, third, that they agree to the solution of these controversies through the procedure of conciliation, selecting as conciliator or moderator a national of one of the traditionally neutral states of Europe, or a national of one of the American republics which are all of them free from any connection with or participation in European political affairs.

I am thankful that I can tell you that our Nation is at peace. It has been kept at peace despite provocations which in other days, because of their seriousness, could well have engendered war. The people of the United States and the Government of the United States have shown capacity for restraint and a civilized approach to the purposes of peace, while at the same time we maintain the integrity inherent in the sovereignty of 130,000,000 people, lest we weaken or destroy our influence for peace and jeopardize the sovereignty itself.

It is our traditional policy to live at peace with other nations. More than that, we have been among the leaders in advocating the use of pacific methods of discussion and conciliation in international differences. We have striven for the reduction of military forces.

[Statement by the President for the press, April 19, 1938]

As this Government has on frequent occasions made it clear, the United States, in advocating the maintenance of international law and order, believes in the promotion of world peace through the friendly sclution by peaceful negotiation between nations of controversies which may arise between them. It has also urged the promotion of peace through the finding of means for economic appeasement. It does not attempt to pass upon the political features of accords such as that recently reached between Great Britain and Italy, but this Government has seen the conclusion of an agreement wtih sympathetic interest because it is proof of the value of peaceful negotiations.

[Excerpt from a speech of the President, Treasure Island, San Francisco Bay, July 14, 1938]

We fervently hope for the day when the other leading nations of the world will realize that their present course must inevitably lead them to disaster. We stand ready to meet them and encourage them in any efforts they may make toward a definite reduction in world armament.

The year 1939 would go down in history not only as the year of the two great American World's Fairs, but would be a year of world-wide rejoicing if it could also mark definite steps toward permanent world peace. That is the hope and the prayer of the overwhelming number of men and women and children in all the earth today.

[Excerpt from an address of the President at Queen's University, Kingston, Ontario, Canada, August 18, 1938]

Happily, you and we, in friendship and in entire understanding, can look clear-eyed at these possibilities, resolving to leave no pathway unexplored and no technique undeveloped which may, if our hopes are realized, contribute to the peace of the world. Even if those hopes are disappointed, we can assure each other that this hemisphere at least shall remain a strong citadel wherein civilization can flourish unimpaired.

[Excerpt from a radio address of the President broadcast from the White House, October 26, 1938]

No one who lived through the grave hours of last month can doubt the longing of most of the peoples of the world for an enduring peace. Our business now is to utilize the desire for peace to build principles which are the only basis of permanent peace.

It is becoming increasingly clear that peace by fear has no higher or more enduring quality than peace by the sword.

There can be no peace if the reign of law is to be replaced by a recurrent sanctification of sheer force.

There can be no peace if national policy adopts as a deliberate instrument the threat of war.

There can be no peace if national policy adopts as a deliberate instrument the dispersion all over the world of millions of helpless and persecuted wanderers with no place to lay their heads.

There can be no peace if humble men and women are not free to think their own thoughts, to express their own feelings, to worship God.

There can be no peace if economic resources that ought to be devoted to social and economic reconstruction are to be delivered to an intensified competition in armaments which will merely heighten the suspicions and fears and threaten the economic prosperity of each and every nation.

At no time in modern history has the responsibility which rests upon governments been more obvious or more profound.

I speak for a United States which has no interest in war. We covet nothing save good relations with our neighbors, and we recognize that the world today has become our neighbor.

[Excerpt from a radio address of the President from Hyde Park, N. Y., in connection with the dedication exercises of the Will Rogers Memorial, Claremore, Okla., November 4, 1938]

And while we are developing that coolness of judgment, we need in public office, above all things, men wise enough to avoid passing incidents where passion and force try to substitute themselves for judgment and negotiation.

During my 4 years as Governor and during my nearly 6 years as President, I am proud of the fact that I have never called out the armed forces of the State or Nation except on errands of mercy.

[Excerpt from the address by President Roosevelt to the joint Congress, January 3, 1940]

Already the crash of swiftly moving events over the earth has made us all think with a longer view. Fortunately, that thinking cannot be controlled by partisanship. The time is long past when any political party or any particular group can curry and capture public favor by labeling itself the "peace party" or the "peace bloc." That label belongs to the whole United States and to every right-thinking man, woman, and child within it.

[Excerpts from address on Armistice Day, Arlington National Cemetery, November 11, 1935]

The primary purpose of the United States of America is to avoid being drawn into war. We seek also in every practicable way to promote peace and to discourage war. Except for those few who have placed or who place temporary selfish gain ahead of national and world peace, the overwhelming mass of American citizens are in hearty accord with these basic policies of our Government, as they are also entirely sympathetic with the efforts of other nations to avoid and to end war.

* * * national ambitions that disturb the world's peace are thrust forward. * * *

* * * we must go forward with all our strength to stress and to strive for international peace.

* * * Our soldier and sailor dead call to us across the years to make our lives effective in building constructively for peace. * * *

* * * If we, as a Nation, by our good example, can contribute to the peaceful well-being of the fellowship of nations, our course through the years will not have been in vain.

We who survive have profited by the good example of our fellow Americans who gave their lives in war.

* * * The past and the present unite in the prayer that America will ever seek the ways of peace, and by her example at home and abroad, speed the return of good will among men. (Washington Star. November 11, 1935, p. A–3.)

[Excerpts from address to Brazilian Congress, Rio de Janeiro, November 27, 1936]

We [Brazil and the United States] have a record of which we can be proud—a record of joint endeavor in the cause of peace in this New World.

* * * Your first concern, like ours, is peace—for we know that war destroys, not only human lives and human happiness, but destroys as well the ideals of individual liberty and of the democratic form of representative government which is the goal of all the American republics.

* * * The motto of peace is, "Let the strong help the weak to survive."

* * * There is no American conflict—and I weigh my words when I say this—there is no American conflict that cannot be settled by orderly and practical means.

* * * The friendly nations of the Americas can render no greater service to civilization itself than by maintaining both domestic and international peace and by freeing themselves forever from conflict.

[Address of the President at Chautauqua, N. Y., August 14, 1936]

I have seen war. I have seen war on land and sea. I have seen blood running from the wounded. I have seen men coughing out their gassed lungs. I have seen the dead in the mud. I have seen cities destroyed. I have seen 200 limping, exhausted men coming out of line—the survivors of a regiment of 1,000 that went forward 48 hours before. I have seen children starving. I have seen the agony of mothers and wives. I hate war.

I have passed unnumbered hours, I shall pass unnumbered hours thinking and planning how war may be kept from this Nation.

I wish I could keep war from all nations; but that is beyond my power. I can at least make certain that no act of the United States helps to produce or to promote war. I can at least make clear that the conscience of America revolts against war and that any nation which provokes war forfeits the sympathy of the people of the United States.

[Excerpt from the address of the President of the United States before a joint session of Congress, September 21, 1939]

These perilous days demand cooperation between us without trace of partisanship. Our acts must be guided by one single hard-headed thought—keeping America out of this war.

[Letter to W. H. Oppenheimer, St. Paul War Memorial Dedication Committee, May 20, 1936]

* * * It is fitting that this memorial be dedicated to peace. The maintenance of peace is the cornerstone of our foreign policy. We seek no conquest. We have no imperial designs. And I am glad to reiterate here a declaration I have previously made that the people of America and the Government of those people intend and expect to remain at peace with all the world. The highest tribute we can pay to the courage and sacrifices of those in whose honor you have reared this war memorial is to continue to maintain a just and lasting peace. (St. Paul Dispatch, May 28, 1936.)

[Address at Texas Centennial, Dallas, Tex., June 12, 1936]

We seek to banish war in this hemisphere; we seek to extend those practices of good will and closer friendship upon which peace itself is based. (Washington Star, June 12, 1936, p. A–3.)

[Defense message to Congress, January 28, 1938]

The Congress knows that for many years this Government has sought, in many capitals, with the leaders of many governments, to find a way to limit and reduce armaments and to establish at least the probability of world peace.

* * * We, as a peaceful Nation, cannot and will not abandon active search for an agreement among the nations to limit armaments and end aggression.

* * * It is an ominious fact that at least one-fourth of the world's population is involved in merciless devastating conflict in spite of the fact that most people in most countries, including those where conflict rages, wish to live at peace.

* * * Specifically and solely because of the piling up of additional land and sea armaments in other countries, in such manner as to involve a threat to world peace and security, I make the following recommendations to the Congress (detailed recommendations follow).

* * * It is our clear duty to further every effort toward peace, but at the same time to protect our Nation (White House release, Jan. 28, 1938, pp. 1–2).

[Radio address from the White House, October 12, 1937]

The kind of peace we want is the sound and permanent kind which is built on the cooperative search for peace by all the nations which want peace.

* * * We seek peace, not only for our generation but also for the generation of our children.

* * * In a world of mutual suspicions, peace must be affirmatively reached for. It cannot be just wished for. It cannot just be waited for.

Such cooperation—as may take place with reference to China in Nine Power Conference—would be an example of one of the possible paths to follow in our search for means toward peace throughout the whole world.

* * * The development of peace in the world is dependent * * * on the acceptance by nations of certain fundamental decencies in their relations with each other.

* * * America hopes for peace. Therefore America actively engages in the search for peace (White House release, Oct. 12, 1937, pp. 2, 6, 7).

STATEMENTS ON PEACE BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE

[Annual alumni luncheon, Yale University, June 23, 1937]

In our relations with other nations it is the task of the Government to insure durable peace—to make it possible for the individual to live a normal existence, uninterrupted and undistorted by the overriding exigencies of armed conflict * * *.

The attaining of world peace and of improved and constantly developing economic relations among nations are the basic objectives of American foreign policy.

[Radio address in cooperation with Economic Policy Committee, February 6, 1938]

In the world of today international peace is of direct and vital concern to each one of us. Peace is no mere abstraction; it is the indispensable foundation of our political, economic, and social order, both nationally and internationally * * *.

We shall never cease to exert whatever moral influence we possess in the councils of nations toward a universal acceptance of those basic principles of conduct among nations which are essential to a civilized international order under law—order under law, with economic security as its chief foundation, which is the surest path to enduring peace.

[Second Annual National Farm Institute, Des Moines, Iowa, February 19, 1938]

If we want peace and prosperity for our country, we must work for them with clear-sighted devotion, with vigorous enterprise, with vision and unselfish public spirit—with the pioneer hardihood, courage, and determination with which our people built this Nation. We should be governed, in our relations with other nations, by those fundamental principles of justice, morality, good will, and friendliness which, in civilized international relationships underlie order under law and with economic security as its chief foundation.

[Statement to the press, March 4, 1938]

The Department of State of the United States is sometimes called the Department of Peace. The problem of peace is of constant concern to the Department; preservation of peace is the cornerstone of the foreign policy of the United States.

* * * The good-neighbor policy is inherently reciprocal in nature. The Government of the United States endeavors to treat with scrupulous respect the rights of other countries and their nationals, and the Government expects similar consideration from other nations for the rights of our people.

The general attitude of the Department of State toward international relations has been summarized recently by the Secretary in a statement to the following effect: This country constantly and consistently advocates maintenance of peace. We advocate national and international self-restraint; we advocate abstinence by all nations from interference in the internal affairs of other nations. We advocate adjustment of problems in international relations by processes of peaceful negotiation and agreement. We advocate faithful observance of international agreements. We believe in modification of provisions of treaties, when need therefor arises, by orderly processes carried out in a spirit of mutual helpfulness and accommodation. We believe in respect by all nations for the rights of others and performance by all nations of established obligations. We stand for revitalizing and strengthening of international law. We believe in limitation and reduction of armament. We avoid entering into alliances or entangling commitments, but we believe in cooperative effort by peaceful and practicable means. We advocate steps toward promotion of economic security and stability the world over; we advocate lowering or removing of excessive barriers in international trade; we seek effective equality of commercial opportunity, and we urge upon all nations application of the principle of equality of treatment.

The Government of the United States is endeavoring to keep alive, strengthen, and revitalize, in reference to all the world, these fundamental principles. The Department of State transmitted this statement of principles to all foreign governments and requested their comments. More than 50 governments placed themselves on record in support of these principles.

[Address at National Press Club, Washington, D. C., March 17, 1938]

The primary objectives of our foreign policy are the maintenance of the peace of our country and the promotion of the economic, the social, and the moral welfare of our people. * * *

On July 16, 1937, I issued a public statement setting forth the fundamental principles to which our Government adheres in the formulation of its foreign policy. On behalf of our Government I transmitted a copy of this statement to every government of the world, requesting such comment as each might see fit to offer. To our profound gratification an overwhelming majority of those governments joined in affirming their faith in these vital principles.

We want to live in a world which is at peace; * * *

To that end we will continue to give full and sincere adherence to the fundamental principles which underlie international order; we will continue to urge universal acceptance and observance of these principles; we will continue, wherever necessary and in every practicable and peaceful way, to cooperate with other nations which are actuated by the same desires and are pursuing the same objectives; we will persevere in appropriate efforts to safeguard our legitimate rights and interests in every part of the world; and we will, while scrupulously respecting the rights of others, insist on their respecting our rights.

[Radio address, August 16, 1938]

We want peace; we want security; we want progress and prosperity—for ourselves and for all nations. Our practical problem is that of finding and employing the best methods, of keeping our eyes and our feet upon the better way, of cooperating with other nations that are seeking as are we to proceed along that way.

[Annual Red Cross Convention, Washington, D. C., April 25, 1939]

The maintenance and improvement of the structure of peaceful international relationships, upon which the entire fabric of our present-day civilization rests, require a willing contribution from every nation. * * *

We hope devoutly that a negotiated peace before rather than after the senseless arbitrament of war, a peace based on a mutually fair adjustment of outstanding problems, will be the happy lot of mankind in the future which lies immediately ahead. We are prepared to make our appropriate contribution to such a peace.

[Radio address, Foreign Trade Week, Washington, D. C., May 21, 1939]

The universal desire of all peoples, when they surmount their fears and apprehensions, is, I am convinced, to live at peace with their fellow men. By peace I mean the peace of understanding and not mere yielding to superior force. * * *

This is the broad course for which we are working. It is the course which, in plain duty both to ourselves and to our position in the world, we are bound to follow.

[Chicago Sunday Evening Club, Chicago, Ill., May 28, 1939]

No country can insure peace for itself by merely proclaiming its desire for peace, when there are in the world nations willing to challenge and fight other nations to gain by force what they covet. When such is the case, peace can be assured only at the price of abject surrender to the challenger. * * *

It is not through a policy of isolation, but rather through supplementing our domestic efforts by playing our appropriate role as a member of the family of nations, that we can hope to solve the problems which confront us today within our own frontiers.

[On Peace and Neutrality, July 14, 1939]

The cornerstone of the foreign policy of the United States is the preservation of the peace and security of our Nation, the strengthening of international law, and the revitalization of international good faith. The foreign policy of this Government may be misinterpreted or it may be misunderstood, but it cannot be destroyed. Peace is so precious and war so devastating that the people of the United States and their Government must not fail to make their just and legitimate contribution to the preservation of peace.

[Twenty-sixth National Foreign Trade Convention, New York City, October 10, 1939]

I, for one, hold fast to the conviction that, however much suffering and destruction may lie ahead in the immediate future, there is, in all nations, sufficient strength of will and sufficient clarity of vision to enable mankind to profit by the costly lessons of the past and to build upon a sounder foundation than heretofore.

There is much that our country can do toward that end. We must retain unimpaired our firm belief that only through enduring peace, based on international law and morality, and founded upon sound international economic relations, can the human race continue to advance. We must cooperate to the greatest possible extent with our sister republics of the Americas and with all other nations to keep this conviction alive and to maintain the basic principles of international good faith, world order under law, and constructive economic effort.

In the economic field, the guiding lines of the policies which we would pursue are clear. Nothing that has happened has weakened in any way the validity of the basic ideas which have underlain our commercial policy in recent years. The type of international economic relations which we have sought to establish through our reciprocal-trade agreements has been amply proven by experience to be the only effective means of enabling the process of international trade to perform fully its function as a powerful instrument for the promotion of economic welfare and for the strengthening of the foundations of enduring peace.

I would greatly prefer to say that we are safe in this country and in this hemisphere from outside danger. But I am firmly convinced that what is taking place today in many areas of the earth is a relentless attempt to transform the civilized world as we have known it into a world in which lawlessness, violence, and force will reign supreme, as they did a thousand years ago. * * *

The one and only sure way for our Nation to avoid being drawn into serious trouble or actual war by the wild and destructive forces now abroad elsewhere in the world and to command respect for its rights and interests abroad is for our people to become thoroughly conscious of the possibilities of danger, to make up their minds that we must continue to arm, and to arm to such an extent that the forces of conquest and ruin will not dare make an attack on us or on any part of this hemisphere. To this end each citizen must be ready and willing for real sacrifice of time and of substance and for hard personal service. In the face of terrific problems and conditions, and until the present serious threats and dangers have disappeared, we cannot pursue complacently the course of our customary normal life.

ALICE GERTRUDE COLLINS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Kansas will yield, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] has asked that I bring before the Senate in his behalf a resolution to pay the widow of William J. Collins, long superintendent of the Press Gallery, a year's salary. On behalf of the Senator from South Carolina, I report without amendment Senate Resolution 305 from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 305), submitted by Mr. GLASS on August 29, 1940, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate to Alice Gertrude Collins, widow of William J. Collins, late superintendent of the Senate Press Gallery, a sum equal to 1 year's compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will not the Senator withhold that suggestion? I do not want to have him call for a quorum at this hour. The Senator from Tennessee desires to make a brief statement.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Kansas is about to make a point of no quorum in order to prevent consideration of the amendments of the House of Representatives to Senate bill 1681 this afternoon. He has a right to do that, a legal right. I think it is a very improper use of the right, but still he has it. But I wish to give notice that at the first opportunity when I can get recognition from the Chair on Monday I shall ask that the House amendments be laid before the Senate for consideration regardless of any other matter.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish to say, very briefly, in response to the Senator from Tennessee, that I made that very suggestion to the Senator from Tennessee several times this afternoon, and he was unwilling——

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator has made several suggestions to the Senator from Tennessee this afternoon, all of which have been refused. [Laughter.]

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair), as in executive session, laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States, submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

RECESS UNTIL MONDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 16 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, September 23, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate September 20 (legislative day of September 18), 1940

CALIFORNIA DEBRIS COMMISSION

Maj. Henry C. Wolfe, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, for appointment as a member of the California Debris Commission provided for by the act of Congress approved March 1, 1893, entitled "An act to create the California Debris Commission and regulate hydraulic mining in the State of California," vice Col. L. B. Chambers, Corps of Engineers, relieved.

SENATE

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 23, 1940

(Legislative day of Wednesday, September 18, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou whose eternal calm lies round about our great unrest, whose presence stills the confusion of our thought: Inspire us, we beseech Thee, day by day with that fine loyalty of soul to which visions are vouchsafed, that at the crossroads of our life the path of duty may be clear. Breathe upon us with Thy quickening breath in our moments of reflection, and in the hours of action guide us by Thy powerful hand, as we thank Thee for the toil that wearies us and the arbors of rest that leave us renewed.

O Man of Galilee, who knowest all our frailties and forgivest even our denials of Thyself, look upon us with Thine eyes of love, the love that sends us out into the silences to weep and lament and long for restoration and then, by its wondrous power, transmutes failure into success, sin into grace, and sadness into song. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Friday, September 20, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Immigration, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4656) to record the lawful admission to the United States for permanent residence of Esther Klein, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 2159) thereon.

REVISION AND CODIFICATION OF NATIONALITY LAWS

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Immigration with amendments the bill (H. R. 9980) to revise and codify the nationality laws of the United States into a comprehensive nationality code, and to submit a report (No. 2150) thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the report will be received and the bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. In this connection I wish to say, briefly, that this bill is a codification of the nationality laws of the United States. It involves work which has been going on since 1933. It is an intensive study carried out both in the departments of the Government and in the House of Representatives.

Insofar as the Senate committee report is an explanation of the bill, I ask that the report be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report is as follows:

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH, from the Committee on Immigration, submitted the following report to accompany H. R. 9980:

The Committee on Immigration, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9980) to revise and codify the nationality laws of the United States into a comprehensive nationality code, having considered the same, report it back to the Senate with amendments, and recommend that the bill as amended do pass.

HISTORY OF THE BILL

The President, by Executive order of April 25, 1933, designated the Secretary of State, the Attorney General, and the Secretary of Labor, a committee to review the nationality laws of the United States, to recommend revisions, and to codify those laws into one comprehensive nationality law for submission to the Congress. The cabinet committee set up a technical advisory committee consisting of six experts upon the subject from the Department of State, one from the Department of Justice, and six from the Department of Labor, who worked for a period of several years in producing the draft code which was submitted to the Congress by the President on June 13, 1938, for its consideration. Extensive hearings were held upon the measure in the House of Representatives, and both the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization and this committee have had the benefit of the views of representatives of the Departments of State, Justice, Labor, War, and Navy, the American Bar Association, and other organizations particularly concerned with the subject of nationality.

This proposed code, if enacted, will be the first authoritative legislative measure since the Revised Statutes of 1878, containing in logical and systematic form a statement of all of the laws of the United States upon citizenship, naturalization, and expatriation. It will be of exceptional value to naturalization officers, judges, and clerks of naturalization courts, American diplomatic and consular officers throughout the world, United States attorneys, lawyers, and all Government officials and other persons having occasion to consider the conditions under which citizenship of the United States may be acquired or lost.

NATURE OF THE CODE

The proposed code consists of five chapters, as follows:

Chapter 1. Definitions.
Chapter 2. Nationality at birth.
Chapter 3. Nationality through naturalization.
Chapter 4. Loss of nationality.
Chapter 5. Miscellaneous.

Ambiguous provisions of present law have been clarified and conflicting provisions eliminated. An instance of the latter is the fixing of the statute of limitations for criminal prosecution under the proposed code at 5 years. Under the basic Naturalization Act of 1906 a similar period was prescribed, but doubt continually has been raised as to its effectiveness because the Federal Criminal Code of 1909 contains a general limitation of 3 years applicable to most crimes. Much vexatious litigation has arisen because of this conflict.

Obsolete material has been eliminated through repeals.

A NATIONAL-DEFENSE MEASURE

The proposed revision will greatly strengthen the laws of the United States concerned with the national defense.

During the first World War the act of 1918 provided for the naturalization of persons rendering various types of service in the armed forces of the United States. In addition, further temporary military provisions were enacted extending for limited periods various provisions of World War legislation to persons who had rendered such service. These measures included the acts of 1919, 1926, 1929, 1932, two in 1935, 1937, and 1939. Such legislation, while it was in force, was very difficult to apply because of its technical nature and the confusion of its terms. Certain members of the armed forces of this country were discriminated against in favor of others.

These undesirable features have been eliminated through the inclusion in the code of a section which would apply uniformly to persons who served honorably in the United States Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard for a period or periods aggregating 3 years. They would be relieved from the usual 5-year period of residence in this country and from the requirements as to the declaration of intention, certificate of arrival, and residence within the jurisdiction of the naturalization court. Proof of honorable service, good moral character, attachment to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, and favorable disposition toward this country during such service would be made by authenticated copies of the records of the executive departments under which the service was rendered. This provision has been approved by the War and Navy Departments.

Aliens serving honorably or with good conduct for a period of at least 5 years on United States Government vessels other than those forming a part of the Navy or Coast Guard or on merchant vessels of the United States would also be permitted to become naturalized under similar conditions. While service on Government vessels would be regarded as residence within the United States for naturalization purposes, such provision would not apply to service on vessels operating in connection with the maintenance, operation, and protection of the Panama Canal.

A particularly desirable feature of the code is the broadening of the prohibition against the naturalization of persons who are members of anarchistic or other subversive groups or who believe in or advocate subversive doctrines or sabotage. This provision would be applicable to any person who within 10 years prior to filing a petition for naturalization has entertained any such views or has been affiliated with any organization or group of a subversive nature.

More than 100 criminal offenses against the naturalization and citizenship and expatriation laws have been defined and penalties provided up to a maximum of $5,000 fine or 5 years' imprisonment, or both.

Desertion from the military or naval service of the United States in time of war would, as under present law, result in loss of citizenship after conviction by court martial. A new section provides for loss of citizenship through the commission of any act of treason against the United States, or attempting by force to overthrow it, or to bear arms against it. Because the penalty is so drastic, it would follow only after conviction by court martial or a court of competent jurisdiction.

The loss of American nationality would result not only from obtaining naturalization in a foreign state or by the taking of an oath of allegiance or making an affirmation or other formal declaration of allegiance to a foreign country but also from entering or serving in foreign military forces if thereby nationality in such foreign country is obtained, accepting employment under a foreign government for which its nationals only are eligible, or voting in a foreign political election or plebiscite.

Expatriation for certain specified acts may occur after a citizen has reached the age of 18 years for the reason that in many foreign countries the duties of citizenship, including that of bearing arms, begin at the age of 18 years.

Citizenship would be lost by a naturalized citizen who resided for 2 years in the foreign state of which he was a national or where he was born if he acquires through such residence the foreign nationality. If he did not acquire such nationality, residence for 3 years would expatriate him. If the residence should be in a foreign country other than that in which he was formerly a national or in which he was born, the period of residence for expatriation would be extended to 5 years.

These provisions for loss of nationality by residence abroad would greatly lessen the task of the United States in protecting through the Department of State nominal citizens of this country who are abroad but whose real interests, as shown by the conditions of their foreign stay, are not in this country. An example of this nature is that of a man 76 years of age, 66 years of whose life had been spent in a central European country. He had remained in the United States but 4 years after his naturalization, and had thereafter resided abroad for about 35 years.

The State Department has also experienced considerable trouble through persons possessing dual nationality—that of the United States and of a foreign country—who continue to reside in the foreign country for many years while insisting upon protection by the Government of the United States. Such persons may have children born abroad who acquire citizenship at birth and also claim the protection of this Government.

The code would give such dual nationals abroad 2 years from the effective date of the code to return to this country and take up permanent residence in order to demonstrate that they have elected to retain American citizenship. Failure to do so would result in the loss of American citizenship.

FURTHER RESTRICTIVE PROVISIONS

While under present law, minor children may acquire citizenship of the United States automatically through parentage until they arrive at the age of 21 years, the code would reduce this age to 18 years.

Under the present law a child born outside of the limits and jurisdiction of the United States of one citizen and one alien parent becomes a citizen at birth, provided the citizen parent has resided in the United States before the birth of the child. No prescribed period of residence in this country of the citizen parent is fixed. Under the code the citizen parent must have resided in the United States preceding the child's birth for at least 10 years, 5 years of which must have been after reaching the age of 16 years. This restriction would prevent the perpetuation of United States citizenship by citizens born abroad who remain there, or who may have been born in the United States but who go abroad as infants and do not return to this country. Neither such persons nor their foreign-born children would have a real American background, or any interest except that of being protected by the United States Government while in foreign countries.

HUMANE PROVISIONS

Under present law no provision is made for the acquisition of citizenship by children through adoption by citizen parents, even though such children may under State laws be entitled to property and other rights that blood children of the parents would possess. Frequently the ties of affection between adoptive parents and their children are very strong. The code would permit their naturalization before reaching the age of 18 years upon the petition of the adoptive parent or parents. However, such children must have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence, must have been adopted in the United States before reaching the age of 16 years, and must have been adopted and in the legal custody of the adoptive parent or parents for at least 2 years prior to the filing of the petition for the child's naturalization.

Illegitimate children would be treated as other children if legitimated before the age of 16 years and in the legal custody of the legitimating parent or parents.

PROCEDURAL IMPROVEMENTS

Congress is authorized by the Constitution to prescribe "a uniform rule of naturalization." Under the present nationality laws there is great difficulty in the attempt to reach this uniformity.

For example, under a law of 1926 judges of United States district courts are authorized to designate naturalization officers or examiners to conduct preliminary hearings on petitions for naturalization, to take testimony, and to make findings and recommendations to the courts in such cases. If the testimony of the witnesses who vouch for the petitioner is satisfactory, the designated examiner may excuse the witnesses from attendance at the final hearing in court. This procedure in most instances saves the time of the court and the inconvenience and expense to the petitioner and witnesses which would be caused by a second appearance of the witnesses in court. The provision for the designated examiner does not apply to State naturalization courts, which are many times more numerous than the Federal courts. The code would extend this desirable practice to State courts handling naturalization proceedings. There are nearly 1,700 State courts in which such proceedings are entertained.

At the present time the naturalization law does not affirmatively require an examination of the petitioner for naturalization by the Immigration and Naturalization Service concerning his knowledge of and attitude toward the fundamental principles of the Constitution and Government of the United States. This attitude of the applicant is one of the most vital phases of a naturalization proceeding. The proposed code would authorize the Attorney General of the United States to approve the scope and nature of the examination to be given to petitioners for naturalization as to their admissibility to citizenship, so that approprate recommendations made be made to the courts. This would be an added assurance of greater uniformity of interpretation of the law.

One striking example of the lack of uniformity in the present law which would be cured by the proposed code is shown by the provisions concerning the exemptions from the usual requirements for naturalization accorded to the alien spouse of a citizen of the United States. Under the Cable Act of 1922 and a law of 1934, an alien woman who married a citizen of the United States between 1922 and 1934 may be naturalized after but 1 year's residence in the United States, whereas an alien husband who married a citizen wife during such period was granted no exemption. With the act of 1934 increasing the period of residence required of an alien married to a citizen spouse after the enactment of that law, the husband and wife were placed on an equal basis. Some courts, however, construed the 1934 act as permitting the alien husband married to a citizen wife prior to 1934 to be naturalized upon proof of 3 years' residence, although an alien wife of a citizen husband under the same circumstances was required to show but 1 year's residence.

The code has clarified and equalized this situation by requiring but 1 year's residence for either wife or husband if the marriage occurred between 1922 and 1934, and by continuing the present requirement of 3 years' residence on the part of either if the marriage occurred after the passage of the 1934 act.

AMENDMENTS

The amendments are as follows:

On page 8, line 6 (sec. 205, second par.), after the word "child", insert a comma and the following: "whether born before or after the effective date of this act."

On page 27, following line 16, insert an additional subsection to section 317 to be known as subsection (c), to read as follows:

"(c) A person who shall have been a citizen of the United States and also a national of a foreign state, and who shall have lost his citizenship of the United States under the provisions of section 401 (c) of this act, shall be entitled to the benefits of the provisions of subsection (a) of this section, except that contained in subdivision (2) thereof. Such person, if abroad, may enter the United States as a nonquota immigrant, for the purpose of recovering his citizenship, upon compliance with the provisions of the Immigration Acts of 1917 and 1924."

On page 86, at line 8, after the word "States", insert a comma and add the following: "if he has or acquires the nationality of such foreign state."

On page 87, at line 19, change "subsection (g)" to "subsections read as follows:

"(h) Committing any act of treason against, or attempting by force to overthrow, or bearing arms against the United States, provided he is convicted thereof by a court martial or by a court of competent jurisdiction."

On page 87, at line 19, change "subsection (g)" to "subsections (g) and (h)."

On page 89, at line 11, change "commercial or financial organization" to "commercial, financial, or business organization."

On page 89, beginning at line 21, strike out subsection (e) and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(e) Who is the wife, husband, or child under 21 years of age of, and is residing abroad for the purpose of being with an American citizen, spouse, or parent who is residing abroad for one of the objects or causes specified in section 405 or subsections (a), (b), (c), or (d) hereof;"

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SCHWELLENBACH:

S. 4371. A bill to provide for free treatment in Public Health Service hospitals of certain persons engaged in maritime employment; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. THOMAS of Utah:

S. 4372. A bill conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Christoffer Hannevig; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

S. 4373. A bill to amend the act of June 25, 1938, entitled "An act extending the classified civil service to include postmasters of the first, second, and third classes, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. SMITH:

S. 4374. A bill to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

S. 4375 (by request). A bill to amend the Railway Labor Act approved May 20, 1926, as amended June 21, 1934, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

EXTENSION OF CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE—AMENDMENTS

Mr. MEAD submitted three amendments and Mr. ELLENDER submitted five amendments intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the bill (H. R. 960) extending the classified executive civil service of the United States, which were severally ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

PRINTING OF HEARINGS BEFORE MILITARY AFFAIRS COMMITTEE ON SELECTIVE COMPULSORY MILITARY SERVICE

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 318), which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 2 of the Printing Act approved March 1, 1907, the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate be, and is hereby, empowered to have printed for its use 2,500 additional copies of the hearings held before said committee during the current session on the bill (S. 4164) to protect the integrity and institutions of the United States through a system of selective compulsory military training and service.

ADDRESS BY THE PRESIDENT ON THE TWO HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF FOUNDING OF UNIVERSITY OF PENNSYLVANIA

[Mr. GUFFEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in in the RECORD the address delivered by the President at Convention Hall, Philadelphia, on September 20, 1940, in connection with the two hundredth anniversary of the founding of the University of Pennsylvania, which appears in the Appendix.]

PRINCIPLE OR POLITICS—ADDRESS BY SENATOR BYRNES

[Mr. HARRISON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address delivered by Senator BYRNES on September 20, 1940, on the subject, Is It Principle or Politics, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY SENATOR GUFFEY BEFORE AMALGAMATED CLOTHING WORKERS OF AMERICA

[Mr. GUFFEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by him at a State-wide meeting of local representatives of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America in Philadelphia, Pa., September 21, 1940, which appears in the Appendix.]

STATEMENT OF GEORGE W. ROBNETT ON LIMITATION OF THE PRESIDENTIAL TERM

[Mr. BURKE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the statement of George W. Robnett, executive secretary, Church League of America, of Chicago, Ill., before the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, on Monday, September 23, 1940, on the limitation of the Presidential term, which appears in the Appendix.]

EDITORIAL ON CONSCRIPTION FROM KNOB NOSTER GEM

[Mr. CLARK of Missouri asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Knob Noster Gem entitled "Concerning the Draft," which appears in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 960, extending the classified executive civil service of the United States.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I intend to renew my efforts to secure the adoption of the motion pending before the Senate to take up for consideration House bill 960, commonly referred to as the Ramspeck civil-service bill.

As I explained on Friday of last week, the bill is a very simple measure, easily understood. It passed the House of Representatives without substantial opposition. It is in conformity with the platforms of both political parties. It received the unanimous support of the committee; and it will set up an orderly procedure for the gradual and eventual covering into the merit system of the employees, particularly the rank-and-file employees of the permanent agencies of government.

I said on Friday last that taking into consideration the limitations and restrictions, the bill may eventually cover some 200,000 Federal employees. A careful study over the week end of the numbers that may eventually be protected by the influence of the merit system verifies that statement. I desire to call to the attention of the distinguished senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] the fact that the estimate of 200,000 was not a conservative estimate, but was a very liberal one; and I wish to quote from the report of the committee to verify that statement. The Civil Service Commission said:

> There are a large number of low-salaried, part-time, intermittent, and temporary positions to which it would be administratively impracticable to extend the competitive examination procedure. We estimate, therefore, that probably somewhat less than 200,000 positions will be placed in the competitive classified service by the President pursuant to the bill.

So my estimate was fair and justified by the record.

Another point which was made by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads [Mr. MCKELLAR] has been the recipient of my consideration likewise over the week end. In order to eliminate the doubt raised before our committee during the hearings and in the Senate on Friday as to what employees are covered by the provisions of the bill, as to whether or not it covers policy-making positions and positions requiring the confirmation by the Senate, I shall, a little later on, offer an amendment which will eliminate from the provisions of the bill policy-making positions and positions requiring the confirmation by the Senate. That will leave the bill applying, as it is the understanding of most of the committee members that it now applies, only to the rank-and-file employees.

I desire to say that, in view of the attitude of both political parties, in view of the attitude of the advocates of the merit system representing both the political parties, and particularly in view of the opportune time at which the bill is called up, I believe there should be little or no opposition to it. The elections are almost at hand. Representatives of both parties are confident of success, I assume, and the bill will empower not the present President but the President who will take over the reins of Government in the next administration to make the decision as to who will be covered within the civil service. Certainly it is not a case of one party attempting to take advantage of another party, but it is a case of both parties desiring to carry out their platform pledges at a time when it is uncertain in the minds of some as to who will carry out the provisions of the bill. It is in their minds the proper time, I believe, for putting into effect the planks contained in the platforms of both parties. Let us keep our promises, and let us entrust to the future President of the United States or the future Presidents of the United States the authority to carry out the mandate provided by this bill.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. When the Senator referred to the future President of the United States, did he have in mind that we are to have just one President all the time? [Laughter.]

Mr. MEAD. So far as the immediate future is concerned—and by "the immediate future" I mean such time as will elapse between 1940 and 1944—my distinguished colleague is accurate, and not only approximately right but perfect so far as his judgment, in my opinion, is concerned. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, one more interruption. I am glad the Senator corrects his statement and limits it to 1944. I disagree. I think we shall have another President after this year. I assume from his remarks that when he said "the future President," he meant that after the third term we would have a fourth term, a fifth term, a sixth term, and so on, and then we would have a permanent President. [Laughter.]

Mr. MEAD. There is not any doubt in my mind that that might become a reality if the delegates to subsequent Republican national conventions persist in the mistakes they made at Philadelphia a short time ago. [Laughter.]

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I shall be very glad to yield.

Mr. OVERTON. When will the bill go into effect? Will it go into effect on approval, or at some later date prescribed in the bill?

Mr. MEAD. The bill will go into effect upon the date of its approval; but, insofar as it applies to any individual or any agency or any group of employees it will go into effect only when at some future time the President of the United States by proclamation covers a specific agency within the merit system. Thereafter the Civil Service Commission will have to set up the examination procedure, the examinations will have to be held, and the bill may not go into effect for any one agency or for any one employee until 6 months, a year, or 6 years from now. There is no specific time fixed when it actually shall go into effect, as affecting an individual or an agency. The bill merely gives to the President the power to cover within the civil service, under the restrictions and limitations of the bill, agencies not now within the civil service.

Mr. OVERTON. If the Senator will yield further——

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. My purpose is to obtain information in respect to the provisions of the bill. The President is authorized, under the provisions of the bill as they now stand, under one Executive order to place under civil service all who are not now under civil service, and are contemplated by the bill. He could do so under one Executive order, could he not?

Mr. MEAD. All those who are not contemplated by the bill?

Mr. OVERTON. All who are contemplated by the bill could be placed in the civil service under one Executive order?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; but that itself would be subject to limitations. First of all, the Civil Service Commission would have to have the additional required appropriations, and that would necessitate their coming to the Congress.

Mr. OVERTON. Those are mere details, which would have to be taken care of administratively after the Executive order had been issued.

Mr. MEAD. Nevertheless they would result in a severe check upon the operation of the proclamation. For example, Congress might withhold the appropriation, and it would take the Civil Service Commission a long period of years to hold the examinations for some 200,000 employees, because, under present circumstances and with present appropriations, it can hardly carry on the ordinary and required list of examinations which must be held without any regard to the pending bill.

Mr. OVERTON. After the President had issued an order, if he should issue such an order, that would fix the status of the respective employees, would it not?

Mr. MEAD. No. After he issued the order the Civil Service Commission would have to set up the examination.

Mr. OVERTON. I understand, but that is merely a detail of administration.

Mr. MEAD. Not one single employee would become a civil-service employee at once.

Mr. OVERTON. Could the President later rescind the order? After he had once exercised the authority could he rescind the order?

Mr. MEAD. He probably could if it had not been carried into effect, but once an agency had been covered within the civil service, or an individual employee had been covered within the civil service, then the President could not rescind the order.

Mr. OVERTON. I assume that once he exercised the authority it would be exhausted, and neither he nor any future President could rescind the Executive order with respect to any particular agency or with respect to all of them.

Mr. MEAD. Speaking generally, the Senator is absolutely correct, but I am assuming that the President might issue an order covering a number of agencies into the civil service, and before the order went into effect he might modify the order, under the orderly procedure which might be permitted within the meaning of the bill; but once an agency is covered within the civil service, no future President could withdraw it from the civil service, as the Senator indicates.

Mr. OVERTON. I doubt whether it could be done, unless there is some provision in the bill which would authorize the President either to withdraw or to modify any Executive order he might issue.

Mr. MEAD. I think perhaps a future Congress might change it, or perhaps an amendment to the bill, as the Senator suggests, might do it.

Mr. OVERTON. That is what I am getting to; if an Executive order has been issued, before the order could be rescinded it would require an act of Congress in itself to rescind the order.

Mr. MEAD. I am almost ready to believe that the Senator's statement is correct. However, the most liberal interpretation would permit the President to modify his order before it became effective.

Mr. OVERTON. I think the bill should be modified, and the Senator might have an amendment prepared which would give the authority to the President to modify or rescind any order.

Mr. MEAD. That would be agreeable to me, except that once an agency or an employee were covered within the merit system, I would not want a future President to deny such employee or agency civil-service status without congressional action. Otherwise, I should be very glad to consider an amendment of that character.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. It is perfectly certain that, while the President may cover any office into the civil service, there is no language in the bill itself which would authorize him to withdraw from the civil service an office once placed within it.

Mr. MEAD. That is absolutely correct. As I suggested, I doubt very much whether the President would have power to take out of the civil service such an office; but I am merely trying to give the statement of the Senator from Louisiana a very liberal interpretation, and in doing so I will say that if the President issued an order and discovered that there was a mistake in the order, he might modify the order before it actually went into effect. But that would be discretionary, as I interpret the language.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. On that point, assuming that any future President would be desirous of stooping so low as to perform an act like that of President Hoover, covering in 60,000 employees 3 or 4 days before he went out of office, he would have exhausted his powers, and the incoming President would not have power to make any change.

Mr. MEAD. That is correct.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. So that any President going out of office could, under the provisions of the bill, do what Mr. Hoover did and cover 60,000 employees into the civil service by a partisan action.

Mr. MEAD. Except that under the provisions of the bill, which were not the provisions of the law when President Hoover took that action, the President, if he issued such an order just before he went out of office, would find that it required a congressional appropriation to enable the Civil Service Commission to conduct examinations for 60,000 employees. Congress might withhold the appropriation. If he issued such an order, the then President of the United States would have his proclamation held up for perhaps a long period of time before the Civil Service Commission could set up the standard examination required or the series of examinations required for some 60,000 employees. It would be held up until all the 60,000 examinations had been held and all the ratings established and the eligible rosters published. An examination of that magnitude under the restrictions and the orderly procedure prescribed in the bill could not be accomplished in a year. Therefore a President going out of office, with only a few days or months to serve, would see the futility of action such as that taken in the administration of President Hoover. Therefore, the Congress is really prescribing the limitations which will govern the Presidents in the future in that regard.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, the bill actually would do for the employees who would come within it what has already been done with respect to postmasters, would it not?

Mr. MEAD. If I understand the question asked by my distinguished colleague from Connecticut, it is whether the provisions of the bill would confer upon other employees what has already been conferred upon postmasters.

Mr. DANAHER. Yes.

Mr. MEAD. I think that is correct.

Mr. DANAHER. In other words, the bill would blanket them in under a noncompetitive examination, taking into account their experience and their status in the service at the time the law becomes effective. Is that it?

Mr. MEAD. No. Unlike bringing within the civil service the postmasters, the bill would merely authorize the President of the United States to issue a proclamation bringing within the civil service from time to time agencies now outside the civil service, provided a real, authentic civil-service examination were held under the direction of the Civil Service Commission; provided the employees have a certain number of years of seniority service; provided the employees pass the examination; and provided they are recommended by their superiors as being worthy of the test applied.

In the case of postmasters, Congress specified that they should be brought within the civil service at a specified time, and left no discretion with the President. Under this bill we leave the President to make his own decision as to the time element and the agency involved, whenever he believes that a given agency should be brought within the civil service.

Mr. DANAHER. But otherwise, except as the Senator has pointed out, it is the same idea?

Mr. MEAD. That is correct.

Mr. DANAHER. If the Senator will give me some information about one other thing which has bothered me as I have listened to his argument, I shall thank him. If the civil service can give a well-prepared noncompetitive examination, and if all the employees must take the examination before ultimately they can qualify, why would not such an examination also, in order to obtain those best qualified and in order to have a real merit system, be open to all candidates for similar posts?

Mr. MEAD. From time immemorial the Congress of the United States has been enacting legislation and the Presidents of the United States have been issuing Executive orders blanketing in employees who, by the experience and their training and their seniority, have proven their capacity and their ability to do the work. The only difference between the regulations set forth in the bill and the proceedings which have characterized the extension of the merit system in the past is that the bill really requires a bona fide civil-service test of fitness, while in the past, as a general rule, Presidents have, without examination, without any discretion on the part of the Civil Service Commission, without any limitations as to seniority requirements such as those included in the pending bill, blanketed great numbers into the civil service by merely issuing Executive orders. We feel that the bill proposes by far the most advanced and perfected system that has been developed up to the present time.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. MEAD. Yes.

Mr. DANAHER. The question I wish to ask the Senator is predicated on a statement of fact in Hartford, Conn., a few weeks ago, when Mr. Philip J. Gallagher, who is the second national vice president of the National Association of Postmasters, outlined to the Connecticut postmasters the plan to freeze 7,100 postmasters into the classified civil service upon a noncompetitive examination basis. He went on to point out how the President would operate under the plan, substantially as the Senator from New York has shown. There were present other speakers, all of them members of the Federation of Post Office Clerks, and I read from the report of the Hartford Courant:

> Speakers urged those present to support the sponsors who appointed them to office in the coming elections. Mentions of President Roosevelt, Senator Maloney, and Postmaster Farley brought cheers from the audience, as one speaker testified, "The election is in the bag."

That is the report, let me say to the Senator from New York, of the way the postmasters in Connecticut, at least, in their annual convention in August, were led to think this proposal would operate.

Does the Senator from New York feel that the 200,000 or more civil servants who are not now under the civil-service laws, but who would be permitted to take the noncompetitive examination contemplated by the Ramspeck bill, would also be asked to feel under obligation to their sponsors and be asked in the coming elections to perpetuate them in office? Or, to put it another way, would the Senator from New York feel that that would achieve a real merit system for such employees?

Mr. MEAD. In the first place, I hope that anything I say to my distinguished colleague from Connecticut, whose judgment and whose leadership I respect, will not at all reflect upon the good sound judgment of the speaker who lauded the President, and who praised the colleague of the Senator from Connecticut, and who expressed a very laudatory and praiseworthy desire to see them reelected.

Mr. DANAHER. If the Senator please, let me say that the Senator from Connecticut, my colleague [Mr. MALONEY] was not present. Let me exculpate him from that.

Mr. MEAD. Yes; all of which increases the effectiveness of the testimonial paid to the Senator's distinguished colleague, because lauding a man when he is absent, and enthusiastically approving his efforts toward reelection, I think is a far greater compliment than if it were done in his presence.

But while agreeing with the sentiments expressed by the distinguished speaker from whose remarks the Senator from Connecticut just quoted, let me say that since that time we have enacted the Hatch law, and it applies to the non-civil-service employees the same restrictive rules and regulations with reference to elections which we have always in the past applied to employees within the civil service. Therefore I think my distinguished friend from Connecticut, who I believe supported the Hatch Act, will have no need to fear that the employees affected by this bill will become politically active in the forthcoming campaign, and if we enact the proposed legislation and it becomes law this month, I do not believe the Senator from Connecticut has any idea that the President of the United States will have time to issue an Executive order and that the Civil Service Commission will have opportunity to set up the standards for the examinations and hold them and establish the eligible roster, and finally cover the employees within the civil service. My prediction is that it will not be accomplished under any circumstances within the period of 6 months. Only a comparatively small number will be brought in under the civil service within that time.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, one other question, if the Senator will kindly yield.

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator. So it comes down to this, after all, that the Senator really argues that because the Civil Service Commission will not have time to hold competitive examinations in order to obtain the best qualified list of eligibles for each position, we should adopt this legislation, and take into the civil service only those persons who can pass the noncompetitive examination. Is not that about it?

Mr. MEAD. Oh, no. I think the question of my distinguished colleague should have some reference to what I said about the Hatch law.

Mr. DANAHER. Oh, yes.

Mr. MEAD. The Senator brought up the question of the political activities of a group of men who, when they were brought within the civil service, were not under the Hatch law, because there was no Hatch law at that time. I think the Senator should also make some reference to the fact that we are merely authorizing a future procedure which no political party can take advantage of right now because of the time element.

I firmly believe that my party will be successful in November. I have no dispute with the representatives of the opposition who believe their party will be successful; but I maintain, and I think the Senator agrees, that now is the opportune time, when it will be to the advantage of neither side, to authorize some future President to exercise the authority within the very severe limitations provided by the pending bill.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I will say, in passing, that I should think a better time would be in January, for then there would be no question as to which President might undertake to issue the Executive order, for it is perfectly apparent that anyone who today occupies one of these positions and who looks forward with anticipation to being blanketed into the civil service under this measure will not lose any sleep over who is his sponsor or to whom he is obligated for his permanent position.

What I am getting at is that after everything is said and done, if we view this proposal frankly, openly, and squarely, we shall see that it will not achieve the selection of the best-qualified persons for the posts comprehended within its scope, but actually will blanket into the United States civil service some 900,000, or by now a million persons who have been given positions during the last 5 or 6 years. Let us face the situation frankly. The fact of the matter is that almost every one of these persons has been appointed within the last 5 or 6 or 7 years.

I will tell the Senator another thing by way of my own experience. I have been a Member of the Senate for 20 months, and I have yet to receive a favorable letter from a department to which I have written in behalf of the finest-qualified applicants who could be found. On the other hand, the departments thank me for my interest and say that when the opportunity is open to consider a particular young man I have sponsored I will be advised.

I sent a test case to a department. He was a boy who had stood first in his class at Yale. He had won every prize that was offered during the time he was there. Later he stood among the first 10 in his class in the Yale Law School. Does the Senator suppose he received a job? He did not. Not only did he not get a job, but in the very same week I recommended him for a position I happened to learn of the sponsorship of another young man, the sponsor being a member of those who are now in the majority, if I may be so crude as to say it, and, quite frankly, the one who was so sponsored was the one who received the job.

I did not see the boy I sponsored until I received his record as compiled by his professors in his school. He cannot even get on the roll. Meanwhile what opportunity is there for other well-qualified citizens of the United States to get on the rolls and to do a decent job?

The Senator could as well say to those persons who are affected by the legislation: "Listen; we will take care of you; we will put you on the rolls; we will pass the Ramspeck bill, and we will freeze you in your jobs for life, but do not forget, it will be after the election. You cannot get it before the election. So remember, after election, if you vote right, and we win, our President will take care of you."

Is not that a frank statement of the situation? [Laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, the frank statement, I believe, is the Senator's report of his disappointment in his attempt to secure proper recognition for his constituents who desire to affix themselves to some Federal pay roll. I believe that frank confessions of discouragements and failures are as rife on this side of the aisle as the one which has just been made by the distinguished Senator from Connecticut. However, I do not believe he wants to raise that as his objection to the measure under consideration. I believe he will agree with me that since the Congress of the United States enacted the Hatch Act and placed under discipline, so far as political activities are concerned, every employee of the Government outside the civil service, he need have no fear that the employees of the civil service, or employees outside the civil service, will take an open and militant part in the forthcoming campaign.

I know he will admit that if the bill should become law, candidates for public office in both political parties—even candidates for the Presidency—would assure the people of America, in keeping with the platform of the party of which they may be candidates, that they will embrace the opportunity to extend and expand the merit system so that no distinct advantage will be gained by any of the various candidates for office as a result of the passage of the bill.

Let me state one further thought, and then I shall have concluded. The Hatch Act, enacted preliminary to this bill, sets forth provisions governing the activities of employees outside the civil service in the forthcoming campaign. The Senator makes a point about opening up opportunities to all the people, rather than merely to those who have been filling the positions for 5 years, 10 years, or 20 years in some instances. There is a tradition on this subject among the leaders of his party, going back as far as President Chester A. Arthur. In President Arthur's time such employees were all blanketed in without examination. The same thing was done in the administrations of Harrison, McKinley, Theodore Roosevelt, William H. Taft, and Warren Harding. Only with the beginning of the administration of Calvin Coolidge were competitive and noncompetitive examinations required. That practice was followed in the next administration, and it was extended and made more restrictive under the administration of the present President of the United States. So, with all these safeguards, I cannot see any occasion for worry or fear on the part of the Nation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Connecticut, in recounting his disappointment, created the impression that perhaps he had been reading my mail [laughter], because I have had not one but many occasions to be disappointed over the failure of someone whom I had recommended to get a job. We all know how such things happen. We receive letters from persons in our States and outside our States who delude themselves into the belief that we have influence. Such a belief is a pure delusion, but it is difficult to convince our constituents and friends that such is the case. It is always easier to write a letter to some Department, or refer the letter which we receive to some Department, than to explain to a friend or constituent why we cannot do anything. Of course, we expect the appointing authority to examine more minutely into the qualifications of the applicant than we could possibly do, with all we have to do in the way of legislation.

I dare say the Senator from New York was very conservative and mild in his statement when he suggested to the Senator from Connecticut that there are as many, if not more, disappointments on this side of the aisle with respect to getting jobs for people than there could be on the other side of the aisle.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. Let me say to the Senator from Kentucky that I have never obtained a job for anybody. One would think that once in a while I could at least obtain a job for a waiter; but apparently no Republican from Connecticut is qualified.

Mr. BARKLEY. During the Hoover administration, I tried to obtain a job for a charwoman, but I never got anywhere.

Mr. DANAHER. I was not then in the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator might have helped me if he had been here. Would he have helped me if he had been here?

Mr. DANAHER. Let me say to the Senator from New York and the Senator from Kentucky that, so far as I am concerned, I am pinning no roses on Republican politicians who control patronage. I have nothing of that sort in my system. I am saying that if the Senator from New York would frankly, openly, and avowedly say that this is a political measure, and that "We will take care of these people," he would be perfectly within his rights. He has the necessary votes to pass the bill. They can pass anything they want to pass on the other side of the aisle. [Laughter.]

Let me point out that the Hatch Act, to which the Senator from New York referred, went into effect long before the postmasters' convention in Connecticut in August to which I made reference. I dare say the Senator from New York was not present one day a few months ago when I recounted the experience with the postmastership in Southport, in my State. Let me briefly recapitulate it. Under the merit system, which the Senator from New York is espousing so avowedly and openly today, there was a Republican incumbent in the postmastership in 1933, and he was promptly displaced. A temporary appointee was named. Under the law the temporary appointee could fill the office for some 6 months, as I recall, before a civil-service examination should be called for. It was called for, and the only person who passed the examination was the former Republican incumbent. So, there not being a complete register, the Post Office Department called for a new examination. It seems it was necessary to have three candidates who could pass the examination, but there was only one, and he was the Republican, who proved that he knew the job. So another examination was called for, and again the Republican was the only one to pass the examination; but this time the temporary appointee had to be displaced and his sister took his place. With a new temporary appointee, it was necessary to have a new examination. That situation continued until March 1940, the same cycle being repeated every year for 6 years. Every time the only person to pass the examination was the former Republican incumbent, until March of 1940, when some fellow who had been a dentist in Southport passed the examination. He achieved a mark of 73, but he was a Democrat. Was there a full register? There was not. There were two candidates—the Republican, with a mark of 86, and the Democrat, with a mark of 73. The Democrat got the job.

Mr. President, I do not know whether or not we need to go to Dale Carnegie to learn how to win friends and influence people. I do not know what we should do, but the fact remains that when anybody tells us, as experienced people, that the proposed program is nonpolitical, or that it is based upon merit, or that it purports to give the people the best kind of service as a result of competitive examinations, when incumbents are asked, "What color is blue vitriol?" and they answer "blue" and pass the examination, that is a lot of "bunk."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, I do not know anything about the appointment of a postmaster at Southport, Conn.; but if the appointee was a dentist, I suppose he regarded the appointment as toothsome. [Laughter.]

Mr. DANAHER. He said, "Open wider." [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. We all know, of course, that every President who has been in office has dealt with the question of civil service in one way or another. I recall that just before Woodrow Wilson was inaugurated in 1913 President Taft issued a blanket order covering all fourth-class postmasters into the civil service without examination. They were really "frozen." No examination was required of them. They were covered in automatically. That order was amended, at least to require an examination.

As I understand, under the terms of this bill the President may from time to time cover agencies and their employees into the civil service. They do not go in automatically. They may not even take the noncompetitive examination unless the head of the department or agency certifies that they have been in the service for a certain length of time and that they have rendered meritorious service. If they are unable to obtain such a certificate, they are out. They may not take the noncompetitive examination, and, of course, may not take any other sort. The bill would give them the privilege of at least assuming that their experience is worth something.

As I understand, that is the basis upon which the noncompetitive examination is provided. If the employees have been giving meritorious service and have been in their positions long enough to have had valuable experience, the law takes that fact into account and permits them to establish their qualifications by noncompetitive examinations.

In all probability years would be required for the 200,000 referred to to obtain a civil-service status, because of the examinations, because of the requirement for certification, and because no President, no matter who he might be, could blanket all the positions into the civil service at one time. If he should do so, the Civil Service Commission would be swamped. It is already swamped because of the large number of competitive and noncompetitive examinations being held in order that men and women may establish their qualifications for positions.

By no stretch of the imagination could the present occupant of the White House or the Civil Service Commission issue an order or hold an examination in time for any one of the 200,000 to know prior to the November election whether or not he was to be appointed or continued in office. So the political side of the question is entirely out. If, as our friends on the other side hope—with not much fervor, but at least with a faint hope—they should win in November, their President would have the same right, either to take the proposed action or to refuse to do so. It is not mandatory on the President. It is only permissive.

As I understand the amendment which the Senator intends to offer, excluding policy-making officers and those whose nominations must be confirmed by the Senate, it would automatically exclude United States district attorneys, United States marshals, and collectors of internal revenue. Is that correct?

Mr. MEAD. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. And probably others.

Mr. MEAD. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Frankly, I do not see any reason why a United States district attorney, who has jurisdiction in a whole State, or a large portion of a State, over the prosecution of criminals for violation of Federal laws, should be under civil service. He may not be a policy-making officer in the same sense as a Cabinet officer, but he certainly has wide discretion in determining what should be done in the performance of his duties. I think such officers really ought not to be covered into the civil service.

PROPAGANDA TO FORCE UNITED STATES INTO WAR—ARTICLE BY CHARLES G. ROSS

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to present another matter? It is necessary for me to leave the Chamber to attend a committee meeting.

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch of September 22 there appeared one of the most illuminating and one of the most important articles, in my opinion, which has appeared in any newspaper or magazine in the United States in the course of a great many years. It is written by Mr. Charles G. Ross, one of the leading members of the press gallery, formerly president of the Press Club, also formerly president of the Gridiron Club, and one of the most careful masters of research and statement who has been in Washington in my time. The article is entitled "Inside Story of 'Propaganda Engine' To Send United States Army and Navy Equipment To Britain—Behind-the-Scenes Group, Including War Advocates, Takes a Hand in Campaign—Hon. William Allen White and Others Are Arousing Public To Try To Influence Roosevelt's Action."

I purpose on tomorrow, or as soon as I can obtain the floor, to make some observations on the disclosures contained in this article. Meanwhile I ask unanimous consent that the article may be inserted in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I am not going to object, but I should like to ask the Senator a question. Does Mr. Ross deal with propaganda issued every week from 17 Battery Place, New York, by an organization which issues a sheet called German Information, or something like that?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not believe he does. If the Senator has any thing along that line, I will be glad to join in putting it into the RECORD. I will say to the Senator from Kentucky, since he has asked the question, that the article of Mr. Ross deals with the connection between the William Allen White committee and the so-called Miller group, which openly and notoriously is urging and seeking to bring about the entrance of the United States into the war by their propaganda activities, and also it discloses the authors of a speech recently made by General Pershing and discloses that they have been and are openly and notoriously in favor of a declaration of war?

Mr. BARKLEY. I merely asked the question because I supposed the Senator is, as are other Senators, getting a publication of some kind called German Information.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes; and I throw it in the waste basket.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is a pure propaganda sheet and is so recognized. I am not in any way impugning Mr. Ross' motives, for I have the highest respect for him, but if we are going to put things in the RECORD which we regard as propaganda we ought not to cull out the emanations of one organization and ignore the others.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will say to my friend from Kentucky on that point that I introduced a resolution a year ago or nearly a year ago for the purpose of appointing a Senate committee to investigate all sources of propaganda calculated or tending to change the neutral position of the United States, which resolution was unanimously reported from the Foreign Relations Committee, and has since been stifled in the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I agree with the Senator from Kentucky that all sources of propaganda seeking to change the neutral position of the United States ought to be investigated, and if he will exert his great influence on the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses to report that resolution, and it can be adopted by the Senate, I think that consummation so devoutly to be wished could be brought about.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand the Senator's resolution was introduced in connection with the neutrality law, and was originally designed to ascertain whether there was any propaganda with respect to a change in our neutrality law in September, October, or November of last year.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the Senator will permit me, the resolution was intended to cover propaganda designed to change the neutral position of the United States.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is, it was introduced prior to the enactment of the neutrality law?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It was introduced prior to the enactment of the last neutrality law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to printing in the RECORD the article presented by the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President——

Mr. MEAD. I yield to the Senator from Indiana, because I understand he desires to discuss the same point.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I apologize for intruding, but it was necessary for me temporarily to leave the floor.

ARTICLE BY CHARLES G. ROSS ON WALTER-LOGAN BILL

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, in view of what the Senator from Missouri has said concerning Mr. Charles G. Ross, with which I entirely agree, I should like to insert in the Appendix of the RECORD, another article by Mr. Charles G. Ross, of May 18, 1940; I hope the Senator from Missouri will concede the ability of Mr. Ross as a research expert in that case, when he says that the Walter-Logan bill, which is now before the Senate, is just the reverse of the so-called court "packing" bill, and shows that the Walter-Logan bill would bring about a form of judicial censorship.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have not read the article to which the Senator from Indiana refers. I have, of course, no objection to its insertion in the RECORD. I may agree with Mr. Ross' conclusions and I may not. My particular reference to him was as to the care with which he collected facts, because his article which I desire inserted in the RECORD is a factual record rather than one of conclusions.

Mr. MINTON. I think Mr. Ross has some facts in this article, and I commend them to the attention of the Senator from Missouri and hope he will read them. I ask unanimous consent that the article be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXTENDING THE CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE

The Senate resumed consideration of the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 960) extending the classified executive civil service of the United States.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, I have been interested in what the Senator from New York has had to say about the civil-service bill, and I rather expected to vote for it; yet I noted what he said about the Civil Service Commission.

I picked up a late issue of the Washington Post and read that the Civil Service Commission had ruled or would rule that National Guard men when they were called into the Federal service came under the Hatch Act, and it might be inferred that draftees, when they come into the service will also come under the Hatch Act. If we are going that far with men who are drafted and taken from civil life, if we are putting them into the Army and Navy, and saying that they come under the Hatch Act and cannot express their own political opinions, it seems to me we are taking a very dangerous step. I do not know whether the chairman of the committee knows about this, but I hope that the report in the Washington Post, which I got about 10 or 11 o'clock last evening, is wrong and that the Civil Service Commission will correct it or the Congress will see that it is corrected. If the Commission intends to rule that a man called into service for a year against his will, whether a National Guard man or a draftee, comes under the Hatch Act, I do not believe such a thing was within the mind of the sponsor of the Hatch Act when he introduced the original measure; and I hope it was not.

Mr. MEAD. I thank my distinguished colleague from Vermont for his contribution, and I feel that I am in agreement with him that it was not contemplated in the provisions of the Hatch Act to cover the political activities of those in the military service.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I am glad to yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. A few moments ago the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] propounded a question which I should like the Senator from New York to answer, and that is with respect to the reason why it is not feasible to hold competitive examinations for all the positions that might be covered by the bill. I think it would be very enlightening to the Senate to find out why it is not feasible to hold open competitive examinations.

Mr. MEAD. Does the Senator mean wide-open competitive examinations?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. MEAD. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I was interested in the statement of the Senator from Vermont. I am not clear about it, but it runs in my mind that the Army regulations themselves prevent members of the Army taking part in political campaigns. I am not certain, but I think that is true. The Senator from New York will recall that very few Army and Navy officers have a vote. If they live on governmental reservations they are prohibited by law from voting. They have to reside on State soil in order to vote, and it is my recollection—I am not definite about it—that all those who belong to the Regular armed forces are prohibited by Army regulations from participating in politics. I can see the reason for it, although in the case of draftees it might be unjust. But the Regular Establishment, as I recall, is prohibited by Army regulations from taking part in political activities. I may be in error, but I have that very definite thought in my mind from the brief association I had with the Army some 20 years ago. At any rate, it would be wise to see what the regulations provide before we go too far with the subject, and whether or not it would be equitable to apply them to the new Army that is now being raised, because there are many sides to that question. I can sympathize with the position of the Senator from Vermont as to the draftees. I know that in some cases absentee voting is permitted, and that soldiers can vote in some States which have laws to that effect, but, generally, members of the Regular Establishment, my recollection is, are already prohibited from taking part in political campaigns by Army regulations rather than by law.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. GIBSON. I merely wish to answer the Senator from Maryland. He is correct; I believe that there are such Army regulations affecting the Regular Army. I do not think the regulations go so far as to prohibit voting, but they do place restraint on political activity. Those regulations, however, are not nearly so drastic and the punishment provided is not nearly so severe as that laid down by the Hatch Act. It seems to me a very dangerous precedent for our democratic process of government in this country to draw a million men into the service, and say to National Guard officers and noncommissioned officers and draftees who have friends and families back home, and many of whom have been active in civil life "you are in danger if you say anything as to your political views." These men are practically threatened with jail if they forget they are no longer free men.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the Senator from Vermont is right, as I interpret what he says. It boils down to this, that such regulations as the Army has and may have are all the regulations that ought to affect the draftees; they ought not to be subject to the Hatch Act and to the Army regulations, too; and if there are proper provisions in the Army regulations governing members of the Regular Establishment, then, the Hatch Act ought not to put an extra blanket over them, because they will be subject to the Army regulations and discipline, and that will be sufficient, in my judgment, to prevent any breach of the law of a political nature.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I ask the Senator from Vermont if the information to which he has referred was not contained in the statement issued by the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. GIBSON. Yes; it was.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What has the Civil Service Commission got to do with the rules and regulations governing the Army?

Mr. GIBSON. None, but it has with the Hatch Act.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas did not vote for the Hatch Act; but I can readily see how this status is arrived at. The Civil Service Commission has been given jurisdiction to look after the administration of the Hatch Act; has it not?

Mr. MEAD. It has.

Mr. CONNALLY. It has charge of the administration of the Hatch Act. The Civil Service Commission has nothing to do with the Army or Navy as such; but in the draft act we preserved the positions of civil-service employees who may enter the Army or the National Guard; so in a sense they are still members of the civil establishment. They are only suspended; they are only on furlough; and by reason of their still holding on to the civil jobs to which they may return after their military training is over they may go back and reclaim, by specific provision of law, the civil-service positions which they formerly held. So the Hatch Act would certainly seem to apply to them, according to my view; and it seems to me the Civil Service Commission is probably correct in the view that so long as such persons hang on to their civil-service positions, even though they may be suspended, they must abide by the terms of the Hatch Act.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I can see the logic of the application which the Senator makes to ex-civil-service employees who are taken from the civil service.

Mr. CONNALLY. They are not "ex." They are still civil-service employees.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Suspended civil-service employees, then.

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. VANDENBERG. But I call the Senator's attention to this fact—and the Senator from Vermont will correct me if I am wrong. The statement issued by the Civil Service Commission is not confined within any such narrow limits.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have not seen it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It warns all members of the National Guard that when they are inducted into the service they fall under the prohibitions of the Hatch Act. Is not that correct?

Mr. GIBSON. That is exactly correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have not read the Civil Service Commission's statement, but I am sure the Senator is in error. I cannot conceive of the Civil Service Commission assuming to take jurisdiction over the military and naval personnel, unless the military or naval personnel has enjoyed a civil service or governmental status.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is what I am inquiring about.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] is here, and I am sure he can throw light on this matter.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the Senator from New Mexico has just come on the floor, and has been trying to get the drift of the discussion which has been going on. I have not seen the ruling to which the Senator evidently has been referring. Something was said about the young men in training.

Mr. GIBSON. I should like to tell the Senator what is under discussion if I may. I saw in the Washington Post, which I picked up about 10 o'clock last evening, a statement that the Civil Service Commission had ruled that all members of the National Guard, when inducted into the Federal service, become subject to the Hatch Act; and the statement implied that the same principle would be applied to draftees. That statement was in the Washington Post, which I picked up last evening—that all members of the National Guard, when they go to drill for 2 hours and when they are inducted into the Army of the United States for a year's service, are then subject to the Hatch Act. I knew the author of the law had no such idea in his mind, and I merely expressed the hope that that interpretation of the law would be corrected, because it is wrong in principle.

Mr. HATCH. I have not any comments to make about the National Guard. I am not familiar with the set-up and do not know whether or not members of the National Guard would come within the term "employees of the executive branch of the Government." That is the term used in the act itself.

I am not much worried one way or the other about the political activities of members of the National Guard when they are inducted into actual service. Probably the ruling of the Civil Service Commission is correct as to them. What troubles me is the inference that the young men called into training are within the prohibitions of the act.

My only concern about that matter is that those young men are involuntarily drawn into the Federal service; and that fact raises a very nice constitutional point, for one of the basic principles set forth in the opinions which uphold the validity of this type of legislation is that a man has a voluntary choice. He may engage in political activity if he desires, because he has a right to surrender his job and go out and be just as independent as any other person. That is a nice distinction made by Mr. Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes. The draftee has no such privilege. He is just like a man on relief in that respect. He is where he is because he is compelled to be there. He has no choice about the matter. In my opinion, for whatever it may be worth to anybody, he certainly is not an employee of the executive branch of the Government.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In order to make specific the thing the Senator from Vermont and I were discussing, I quote from the publication, as follows:

Application of these principles—

Referring to the Hatch Act—

the Commission said—

That being the Civil Service Commission—makes officers and members of the National Guard subject to the statute while on active duty and on so-called drill nights.

And the conclusion seems to be based on the fact that they are drawing their pay from the Federal Treasury.

If that line of logic would apply to the National Guard men, it would apply to the conscripts. Perhaps the conscript has an additional right to protection such as the Senator from New Mexico has indicated. I should not think the Hatch Act applied to either one of them.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The Civil Service Commission, in basing its ruling on the fact of a Federal employee drawing his pay from the Federal Government, is taking into consideration something which is not in the act at all.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What would be the difference between the status of a National Guard man in that aspect and the status of a W. P. A. worker?

Mr. HATCH. The National Guard man assumes his duties purely voluntarily.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I mean, so far as concerns identification by means of the fact that he is paid from the Federal Treasury.

Mr. HATCH. As to the W. P. A. worker, there is a specific section of the law which relates to persons receiving relief. There is another section of the law which relates to persons in the employ of the executive branch of the Federal Government. Persons employed in the executive branch of the Federal Government are prohibited from political activity. There is not a word about the pay, because they are our own employees. We may say to our employees, "You may do this, or you may not," just as we choose. The pay of the Federal Government does not enter into the matter except as a matter of fact that, of course, being employees of the Federal Government they are paid by the Federal Government.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What is the opinion of the able Senator from New Mexico, who is the supreme court on this subject so far as I am concerned——

Mr. HATCH. Not at all.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What is his opinion of the statement of the Civil Service Commission that officers and members of the National Guard are subject to the Hatch Act when they are on active duty, or on drill nights?

Mr. HATCH. Again I state that my opinion in construing this act is of no more weight than that of any other Senator. The officials charged with the enforcement of the act and its interpretation are the ones whose opinions are entitled to weight. My own thought is, however, that members of the National Guard probably are under the act when they are in actual service. I also have the general impression that they would be prohibited from political activity by Army regulations as well.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. GIBSON. It is true that the Army has certain regulations governing political activity.

Mr. HATCH. Yes; probably more stringent than these.

Mr. GIBSON. But I cannot conceive of any rightful reason why National Guard men, really forcibly taken out of their civil life for a year, should be threatened with two punishments—one under the Hatch Act and one under Army regulations.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, there is a philosophy which probably would answer the Senator's question. The military service, whether National Guard or Regular Army, should forever remain out of politics, for the reason that there is always a conflict between military and civil authority. The military must never control the country.

Mr. GIBSON. That is the very thing which makes me fearful about this matter. Of course, we do not expect them to go down the company street and get up on a soap box and make an oration, and there are regulations which prohibit that sort of thing.

Mr. HATCH. The Army regulations prohibit that, without any so-called Hatch Act.

Mr. GIBSON. But when we are creating a tremendous army of 1,200,000 men, taken out of civil life, and threatening them that they may no longer express themselves on political matters in this country—a thing that some of them have been used to all of their lives—I say that the very soul of democracy is being threatened. It is a club that should not be held over them.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. When the Senator speaks of drafting men out of civil life and putting them into training he is saying something in which I agree with him. I say there is a decided distinction. These men are not in the Army, they are in the service for training, and while they are going through the involuntary service of training, they certainly should have all the independence any other citizen has. When they go into the Regular Army, however, there is a different situation. I think that is a distinction which the Senator should think through.

Mr. GIBSON. I have been trying to think it through since I was somewhat shocked when I read the newspaper article which has been referred to. It does not seem right to have any such thing as that in a democracy.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator can see how that could be carried on and on in the building up of a huge military machine. If the military machine were permitted to engage in purely political matters, they could control every election in this country; which must never come about.

Mr. GIBSON. It is our heritage to engage freely in political elections. If a man chooses to go into the Regular Army, he is forbidden by regulations from doing what the Senator has described, and rightly so; but when men are taken against their will, in some cases, and unexpectedly, and probably against their will in the case of many National Guard men, to have it said that they cannot express their opinions and cannot take some part in politics when they are in fact only training, when we are not in a war, and doing that in an election year, it seems to me is the world's worst performance.

Mr. HATCH. We do not disagree that these young men are in fact training.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. I supported the Hatch bill, and I am disturbed now to have it said and not denied that one subject to the provisions of the Hatch law may not express an opinion on a political question. That has been repeated here a dozen times. My understanding of the Hatch law is that it prohibits those who come within its provisions from taking an active part in the management of political affairs. I see no real objection to saying to the National Guard men called into active duty, and to the trainees to be called under the provisions of the law, "During the time you are actually called into service you should not serve on political committees; you should not be unduly active in political organizations." But if the law goes so far as to provide that there shall be any restriction on the 800,000 trainees we hope to have in training very soon against expressing their own opinions on political matters, I would join heartily with the Senator from Vermont in saying that is a matter into which we would have to look very carefully.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am very glad indeed the Senator from Nebraska asked his question. I had not heard the expression, to which he has referred, used on the floor of the Senate. I had not noticed that it had been said these men were prohibited from expressing their opinions. Certainly such is not the law, and never has it been so construed. The rule of the civil service, from which the language of the act was taken, provides that such employees might express their opinions privately. That led to a good deal of discussion and brought disturbing thoughts to me. I did not like the word "privately." I recall with what eloquence the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], who sits before me, talked about a man getting his family around him, where, in the privacy of his home, he might express his opinions. The Senator recalls the debate. As a matter of fact, we struck the word "privately" out of the bill, so that there could be no question about it. The act expressly provides that nothing contained in it shall prevent expressions of opinion on any subject, not only political subjects, but all others.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. GIBSON. Of course, the act does not say one cannot express an opinion, but that will be the effect as it is being interpreted by the Civil Service Commission. It will even go further than that; the situation will be such that one whom I can think of, a man engaged in the practice of the law, who has frequently been active in our State politics, cannot write back home to his friends and say, "We wish things would go this way or that way." He can take no such action. It is a club over the head of the guardsman and of the draftee.

I hope that in this particular year the Democratic administration will make it clear that there is no such club and no Hatch Act over National Guard men or draftees, no club over them save as the Army by regulation places there.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. As to the National Guard man, the Senator understands that when the National Guard man enters the National Guard, in the first place, he does it voluntarily. He takes an oath that he is willing to be mustered into the Federal service, and when he goes into the Federal service he becomes subject to all the regulations, just the same as the Regular Army man is subject to them. That is why I say I am not so concerned about the National Guard men. They come under the regulations, and there will be no political activity on their part, and I do not think there is anything to worry about in their case. But I agree that the young men in training who are involuntarily taken into the service should not be under the prohibitions of the act. They should be just like any other citizen, and, in my opinion, they are, for I do not think they come within the description of "employee" of the executive branch of the Government.

Mr. GIBSON. I wish to say just one more word. I cannot see any real distinction between the draftees and the National Guard, because they all come from civil life. I think the practice which apparently is laid down by the Civil Service Commission is wrong, and I hope the Democrats, who are in the majority, will correct that situation.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, the enlightened discussion to which the Senate has just listened I am sure makes crystal clear the fact that the bill we are now considering does not in any way change the status of those in the military. I can see that the provisions of the Hatch law, particularly the provision which applies to all those engaged in activities paid for in whole or in part out of the Federal Treasury, might be construed as applying to the National Guard men who are in the service of the State, might even apply to the draftees, might even apply to the military as a whole; but the enactment of the provisions of the bill will neither enlarge upon those regulations nor will it limit them. That is a problem for the members of the Committee on Military Affairs and for those who are concerned with and interested in the proper enforcement of the provisions of the Hatch law.

It may be said, in passing, that the Civil Service Commission has not as yet ruled as to what action it will take with reference to the trainees who will shortly be called into service. It may also be pointed out that the authority which the Civil Service Commission now exercises as a result of the enactment of the Hatch law is authority which the Civil Service Commission did not seek; it is an authority which was contained in a bill passed by the Congress of the United States.

Finally, Mr. President, the bill I am discussing is in no way responsible for the interpretations and the rulings issued by the Civil Service Commission with reference to the military. The bill merely authorizes the President of the United States, under the restrictions of the measure, to bring within the merit system those who are now employed by the Federal Government in civil occupations, and who are not now covered by the merit system.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. MEAD. I am glad to yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. I should like to have an answer to the question propounded to the Senator about 15 minutes ago with reference to examinations, as to why it is not feasible, and in fact, preferable, to have competitive examinations for these positions, rather than noncompetitive examinations as is provided in the bill under discussion.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, the decision as to that must be made by each individual Senator. In arriving at that decision, each Senator must give some consideration to or must ignore the meritorious services of those who have been in the employ of the Federal Government.

Mr. ELLENDER. How about the thousands who are now awaiting jobs, who have taken the civil-service examinations in the hope of obtaining jobs and who have not been recognized?

Let me point out to the Senator some figures from the fifty-sixth annual report of the United States Civil Service Commission, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939. On page 115, it is shown that during the entire fiscal year 556,571 persons took civil-service examinations for classified positions and of that number 254,095 passed the examinations and qualified for appointment.

On page 147 of that report appears the number of persons who were employed after having passed these examinations, and that number is 66,290. Today there are persons on the registers throughout the Nation, who became eligible last year only, amounting to almost 200,000; and my information is that, including previous years, there are almost 800,000 eligibles who have successfully passed a civil-service examination and are now on the registers awaiting Federal appointments.

As I understand, the intent and purpose of the civil-service law was to establish a merit system whereby selection for appointment should be made upon the basis of demonstrated relative fitness without regard to political, religious, or similar considerations. I say it is wrong for the Congress to pass a law now whereby over 200,000 persons can be placed under civil service without taking competitive examinations. I charge that such a procedure is unfair to thousands who are in and out of the service and strikes at the fundamental purpose and reason underlying the adoption of the present Civil Service Act.

In a pamphlet which was issued by the Civil Service Commission for the general information of the public, being Form 2346, June 1938, on page 11, appears the following—and I should like the Senator from New York to listen to it:

> One purpose of the civil-service law is to give all citizens an equal right to demonstrate their qualifications for Government employment. Another purpose is to insure that the persons appointed are the best qualified among those seeking Government employment. The better the quality of employees the smaller is the number required. The Civil Service Commission aims through the competitive-examination process to save money to taxpayers by securing the most competent employees for the Federal service.

All these fine phrases are, to my mind, nothing but the payment of lip service to the merit system. Preparation is now being made, by way of the measure under consideration, to blanket over 200,000 persons into the service, when as a matter of fact, there are today almost 800,000 persons who have taken and passed the civil-service competitive examinations and are on the registers, but are without jobs.

Permit me to state, Mr. President, that I am not opposed to the placing of all of the departments involved in the bill under civil service, if competitive examinations are resorted to so as to fill those jobs.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, this question has been before the Congress—it has been before the House and the Senate committees—ever since the introduction of the bill in question, and in fact ever since the introduction of the first civil-service reform measure. Everyone knows that if we are to require wide open, noncompetitive examination for all the categories in all the agencies involved in this bill, endless examinations will have to be held, millions of dollars will have to be appropriated, and many of the employees who at one time or another were employed in agencies covered within the merit system and taken out of the merit system, through no fault of their own, by Congressional act, would of necessity have been discriminated against.

In all the experience of the Civil Service Committees of both Houses, and of the Civil Service Commission itself, and the various government organizations affected, as well as organizations not affected by the civil service, that is, those who are outside of it, the plan involved in the bill before the Senate is by far the best procedure yet adopted, and has been accepted with acclaim by Federal employees' organizations, by leaders, and by the rank and file of labor organizations, and by those interested in civil-service reform.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. Of course, Federal employees' associations are in favor of the bill, certainly, because their memberships are composed of those who now have Federal employment. They are already in the Federal service. Many of those who will be affected by this bill are part and parcel of such organizations.

Mr. President, as I have heretofore stated, I am not against that portion of the bill which provides that the various departments shall be placed under civil service. I think they should come under civil service. They ought to be under civil service. What I contend is that when they are placed under civil service there should be open competitive examinations to fill those positions. It is not fair to cause disappointment to thousands upon thousands of persons who have already taken examinations, and others who have civil-service status but have lost their jobs, and who, under the very rules of the Civil Service Commission, have a preferential right to those jobs.

The law provides how those who have been dispossessed of jobs can get into the service again. If we pass the bill in its present form we shall evade the rules and regulations which form the basis of the Federal civil-service system. In other words, those who should have an opportunity, under competitive examination, to compete for these jobs, simply will be left out in the cold. Those who are now in will get them on a permanent basis, and the Senator from New York well knows that there are many who now are holding Federal jobs because of political influence.

Mr. President, it is positively wrong for us to blanket in all of these job holders without competitive examinations, as provided by the civil-service laws and rules and regulations. It is a direct deviation from the fundamental principles of the merit system.

I have held hearings on this proposition for about 6 months, and I know that the passage of the bill will not be conducive to a good merit system. If we are to have a merit system we should place every applicant on the same basis, and let the one who is best qualified, the one who receives the best grade, by reason of his education and experience, get the job.

Competitive examinations could be held very easily to fill these positions, and under the civil-service rules, as they now exist, it would be possible to give some preference to the present incumbents, by reason of their experience; but I repeat, it would be unwise to ignore completely the thousands upon thousands of applicants who have taken civil-service examinations and who are eligible for Federal appointment and it would be a violation of the fundamentals of the merit system.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I have been greatly interested in the remarks made by the Senator from Louisiana. I do not think there is very much difference in the views of many of us on this subject. Representative RAMSPECK, who introduced the bill in question in the House, included in the original bill the competitive feature, but I think the Senator from Louisiana knows—at least I know, and the Senator from New York knows, and other Senators know—that that bill, containing the competitive feature, would simply not pass the Congress. If the suggestions made by the Senator from Louisiana are followed, no matter how sound they are, no matter how good they are, the bill is dead.

Mr. ELLENDER. Does the Senator know why it would not be passed by the Congress?

Mr. HATCH. Yes; I know why it would not.

Mr. ELLENDER. It would not be passed by the Congress because it would affect the appointees of Representatives and Senators. That is the reason it would not be passed.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator is exactly correct.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, such procedure strikes at the fundamentals of the merit system, and if we are honest with ourselves and really believe in the merit system we should not tolerate it. Why give only lip service to the merit system? If we are to have civil service, let us have it on a real merit basis rather than let a lot of political appointees in under the umbrella, so to speak, and then blanket them under civil service.

We should pass a bill placing every department under civil service. We should have done so many years ago. So far as I am concerned, every time a new department is created I shall insist that its employees come under the civil service from its inception. But it is entirely unjust to blanket in over 200,000 employees who do not have to take a competitive civil-service examination, in the face of the fact that last year there was an enormous surplus of men and women who complied with the rules and took the examinations, and who now are eligible for these jobs. I maintain that it is not fair to blanket these temporary workers into the civil service when we already have a surplus of as many as 800,000 qualified civil-service applicants. Not only is it unfair to those who have taken the examinations, and are on the registers awaiting appointment, but also to the thousands who are now employed by the various departments, and who worked hard over a period of years and have climbed up the ladder by way of civil service.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I wish to compliment my distinguished colleague from the State of Louisiana for the warmth and the enthusiasm with which he embraces the merit system. He is an advocate of the merit system who, in my judgment, is far in advance of the spirit that has characterized the present Congress, the Congresses of the past, and the most ardent advocates of the civil service. Those who are realists, the advocates of civil service who approach the program from a practical viewpoint, have been satisfied to make what might be termed gradual progress throughout the years. Those who really want a bill passed which will eliminate the patronage system, with which my distinguished colleague from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] finds so much fault, have found the solution in a compromise. They have found a possibility in the bill now before us.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I shall be glad to yield in a moment.

If we intensify the philosophy suggested by my distinguished colleague from Louisiana, or if we break down the bill by eliminating the restrictions and limitations within the bill, we shall probably fail to obtain enactment of a bill before the adjournment of Congress. So those of us who want a bill, those of us who are anxious to extend the merit system, those of us who would bring in other agencies so that those who are on eligible rosters may have more and more opportunities to find employment in the service, are anxious about the present bill, which is not perfection itself. It is not a loosely drawn bill, but is a bill which squares with the standards of every public and private organization concerned with the advance of the civil service.

I now yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I wish to be frank with the Senator about my own feeling with regard to the bill. I think I am as completely a devotee of the merit system as is any other Member of Congress. I should like to expand it far beyond its present scope; but I cannot escape the conclusion submitted by the Senator from Louisiana. When the proper time arrives I shall move to strike out the noncompetitive examination and substitute the competitive examination.

The Senator says the bill is a step in the direction of removing the curse of patronage. It seems to me that a noncompetitive examination covering in 200,000 employees, far from removing the curse—if that is what it be—of patronage, merely confirms the curse of patronage, and provides a life tenure for the beneficiaries of patronage. I cannot see anything remotely related to the merit system in giving 200,000 employees jobs for life without any competition whatsoever. The present incumbents ought to have a 95-percent advantage in a competitive examination, because they are thoroughly familiar with their tasks. If, with that advantage over anybody else who might compete with them, they cannot win a competitive examination, Heaven knows they certainly are totally unqualified for their positions.

I cannot see how there is any fundamental loyalty to the merit system in noncompetitive examinations. Is not competition the heart and soul of the merit system? I ask the Senator from New York, is not the merit system built on the theory of competitive worth?

Mr. MEAD. In answer to my distinguished colleague, I will say that we can proceed only as the result of experience in the growth of the merit system. We should hearken to the leadership of those who were interested in the merit system long before we exerted our personal interest in the matter. If we review the hearings we find that the bill is a remarkable step in the direction of a selective system, as compared with anything else ever enacted by the Congress. The Committee on Civil Service realizes that every important organization interested in the civil service, including the American Federation of Labor, the Congress of Industrial Organizations, the business and professional women's clubs, the National League of Women Voters, the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce, and the Federal employees' organizations are supporting the bill, which follows the precedents established by every preceding Congress and followed by Presidents without exception, from Chester A. Arthur down to the present incumbent in the White House.

In view of all that, with a desire to extend the civil service, and an eagerness to make progress over the rules and regulations which were included in previous laws, requiring, as we do, bona fide examinations, we feel that we have made as much practical progress as could be made by practical legislators in an effort to widen the merit system, and to insure to those who pass civil-service examinations an opportunity for filling positions in the future, an opportunity which has been denied to them in the past.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the Senator had his own way about it, would he have competitive or noncompetitive examinations?

Mr. MEAD. In certain instances I should apply the principles specified in the bill before us. For example, the Bureau of Internal Revenue was at one time within the civil service. It was removed from the civil service, not by the employees, but by the Congress. Within its ranks are persons of many, many years of training, and persons affiliated with both major parties. If the agency were of recent establishment, or if it were a new agency of government, I should apply the rigid rules outlined by the Senator from Michigan. But there are many, many agencies, and we have numerous problems before us. By and large, I follow the leadership laid down for us by the best thought on the subject, the thought which has been emphasized before our committee by every agency in the United States honestly and frankly interested in and concerned with the development of the civil service.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What does the language in the committee report mean when it says that the provision for noncompetitive examination is as satisfactory and as fair as can be obtained with any hope of enactment? That certainly encourages a doubt that it is the fairest and the most satisfactory method. What does the language of the committee report mean when it says, in effect, "You had better take this, because it is the best you can do"? Where is the obstacle or objection to making it wholly satisfactory and wholly fair—which obviously the committee thinks would be competitive rather than noncompetitive examinations? Why is the bill the best there is any hope of obtaining?

Mr. MEAD. In answer to that question, I will say that if my distinguished colleague will further peruse the report of the committee he will find on page 9 that under the law, which evidently had the same serious consideration that we are meticulously giving this particular bill, the then President of the United States, without any examination whatsoever, under the authority which Congress at that time gave him, blanketed into the civil service the employees in the agencies covered by the proclamations without any selective system and without any examination. Our committee, in reviewing the record, recognized the fact that only such legislation was approved by the Congress as followed the precedent established by the Congress which created the first merit system; but we were eager and anxious to improve that system, which allows widespread blanketing in without examination of employees who are fit, as well as employees who are unfit, for the service. Therefore, for the first time in the history of civil-service reform we made a great forward step, and by limitations and restrictions, and by requiring an examination with which no Department except the Civil Service Commission, and no officer of the United States, including the President, could have anything to do, gave authority to the examining agency of the Government to prescribe the examination governing each particular case. In so doing we feel that we shall reward only those who could pass an examination if required to do so; but we shall reward them because of their seniority of service, their meritorious service, and their fitness. The problem of economy is involved, as well as that of the practicability of getting the legislation enacted into law. Every argument speaks for the bill, until such time as every Senator, every Representative, and all the organizations concerned with civil-service reform shall feel as does my distinguished colleague from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Would it be a correct interpretation of the committee's report to say that there would be no hope of enactment—that being the phrase of the report—if competitive examinations necessitated a full, free, and fair approach to these 200,000 positions?

Mr. MEAD. I doubt if taken literally, as probably my distinguished colleage from Michigan would interpret it, that that would be an accurate statement. I think it might be stated that, taking the whole category of the agencies, old and new, involved within its provisions the committee stands upon the bill. I believe if we were going to cover within the civil service an agency of government created by the present Congress, an agency without experience of years, the committee would require wide-open competitive examinations. But we believe it would be unfair and would be difficult of attainment to take, for instance, the collectors of internal revenue, many of whom were appointed in the administrations of Presidents Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover and who are still there, giving an excellent account of themselves, and to eliminate them or to make it necessary for them to attempt an examination in which they would compete with those who have not rendered such meritorious service or applied themselves to the study of tax legislation and tax problems of the country as have the incumbents. The committee recognizes that there is some consideration due to seniority and to the meritorious services of those employees who have been working for the Government for so many years. So there are two questions involved: The question of the senior employee of the senior agency, and the question of the recent employee of the newer agency.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes; but take the case of the senior employee to which the Senator refers. He speaks about his long years of service; he speaks about his great familiarity with the law and technique of the position which he occupies, and claims that he ought to have consideration. Of course he should, but if competitive examinations are held who in the world can hope to compete with that intelligent incumbent? He has a 95 percent chance to win before he ever starts, and, if he cannot win under competition with all that background, then, there is something wrong with him; and he ought not to have the position.

I do not think the Senator has argued successfully against competition at all, and I remind him that the last time a bill extending the civil service was before the Senate, I think a year or two ago, we had then the same argument over the question of competitive and noncompetitive examinations, and the Senate voted a requirement that the examinations should be competitive. It was obviously the feeling of every friend of civil service in this body that the reality of the merit system required competitive examination, and so the Senate voted that way.

Of course, when the bill reached the House of Representatives something happened to it. Under the rules of the Senate, I am not permitted to comment upon what I think happened there. Is that the danger once more to which the Senator's report refers when he says that the only way there can be hope for the enactment of this bill is to confirm the patronage appointees who have been named during the last 10 or 15 years? It seems to me that I can draw no other conclusion. The incumbents are probably good for 20 more years. I think this bill ought to be labeled a bill to extend the civil service to 1960.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, in answer to the first statement made by my learned colleague from Michigan, let me refer to the statement of a renowned barrister whose attainments in the law and whose success before the courts made him the stand-out lawyer of his community. He was not only well learned in the law, honored by law schools and universities all over America, but his services and his experiences were oftentimes requested by his community, by his State, and by the Nation. I heard that barrister say on one occasion, "Although I have practiced law for a quarter of a century, if I were called to try an examination, an open examination in which all the graduates of the law schools of that year were participants, despite my knowledge of the law and legal technique, my aloofness from lawbooks has been such that I would not be able to pass the examination." He said, "I know a great deal about the law, but I could not compete with the graduates who would try that examination, even though they had never tried a case in court." The same statement might apply to veteran employees of the Internal Revenue office whose services over a period of 10 or 20 years have been highly satisfactory, and yet in competition with legal graduates of some university, graduates of a course in the tax laws of America, the veteran employees whose school days are certainly far behind them would be unable to pass an examination.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question at that point?

Mr. MEAD. I am glad to yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. How many of the 200,000 life jobbers who are created by this bill are veteran employees under the Internal Revenue Service?

Mr. MEAD. I imagine that all the employees of the Internal Revenue Service, with the exception of a very small percentage, are veteran employees.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What would the number be?

Mr. MEAD. The number of veteran employees of the Internal Revenue Service?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes. Would it not be an infinitesimal fraction of the 200,000? As a matter of fact, do not the 200,000 generally include merely the 'mine run' of civilian clerkship services?

Mr. MEAD. I think, perhaps, that is correct, except that the Internal Revenue Service is not an infinitesimal part of the Service, and it certainly is not an infinitesimal part of the Service that will eventually be brought within the merit system by future Presidents of the United States. I do not believe that any President, no matter how warmly he may embrace the civil service, is going away out of his way to bring within the merit system employees of temporary agencies that may never become permanent agencies of the Government. I really believe that the Internal Revenue Service is one Service that will have the immediate consideration of the President of the United States.

Let me say to my distinguished friend from Michigan, who complains of the unanimous action recommended by the Civil Service Committee, which is the action recommended by every organization concerned with the civil service, that we were both in the Congress, with all the power and opportunity for complaint or for praise which we now command; yet during the administrations of Presidents of the United States who are not now in office, when they blanketed employees within the civil service without even a competitive examination prescribed by the Civil Service Commission, we may or we may not have raised our voices. But here is the record: During the administration of President Warren G. Harding there were brought within the civil service without examination a total of 2,000 Federal employees. I do not know who appointed those employees, and I do not know how much complaint was raised by the Members of Congress.

There were brought within the civil service, without examination, during the administration of President Calvin A. Coolidge over 7,000 employees. I do not know whether they were patronage employees. I do not know who found fault with the action taken by the then President.

There were brought within the civil service, without examination, under the administration of President Hoover, some 3,400 non-civil-service employees.

I make the point that if we pass this bill no future President of the United States will do what Presidents Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover did. He will be able to do it only under the limited restrictions of the pending bill and under an examination that will make every employee stand on his feet and prove that he has the ability to perform the duties of the task within the agency covered into the civil service.

It is an orderly procedure, a procedure in comparison with which no preceding Congress, under either political party, has ever provided a superior. When we are making progress of that character and when the record indicates that during our tenure of office employees have been blanketed into the civil service without regard to the Civil Service Commission and without regard to any examinations for fitness, I think that our committee, the sponsors of this bill, and the organizations recommending this bill are entitled to some compliment rather than to complaint.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I shall be very happy to furnish the Senator and his committee and all his colleagues and associates with a basketful of compliments.

Mr. MEAD. That will come in the most tangible and material way with the Senator's vote for the bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And the Senator from Michigan will vote for the bill if the fundamental of civil service is included; namely, the element of democratic competition.

I think the committee has made progress. I think this system is infinitely preferable to the system to which the Senator refers as having previously obtained; but I am asking why, in undertaking this admirable progress to which I know the Senator is sincerely dedicated, we have to bind ourselves to noncompetitive examinations, when the Senator knows, and his committee report confesses, that they would be put on a competitive basis if we dared do it. I just do not understand why at least the Senate should not duplicate the record it made the last time this subject was up and require the preservation of this fundamental thing in a democracy—and certainly it is fundamental when we are talking about a permanent civil-service status in a democracy—this fundamental thing of full, free, fair approach of all citizens to every available position in the land. I do not see why we should voluntarily desert it. All I am asking the Senator to do is to let us make some progress, at least so far as the Senate is concerned, and not surrender this fundamental thing in both civil service and democracy, at least until we have to.

That is the sole extent of my plea to the Senator.

Mr. MEAD. I appreciate the compliments the Senator has paid to the committee and those who are interested in making progress in civil-service reform; but there are two points which I believe are fundamental: One is bringing these agencies within the merit system so that they will remain there while those agencies remain a part and parcel of the Government. Another is to set up a satisfactory and suitable system of examining the applicants so that we may know they will be admirably fitted to fill the jobs within those agencies. The committee meets those two points, and in meeting those two points the committee has contributed to the remarkable progress indicated by this bill over the blanketing-in processes which have characterized our Government in the past.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I am glad to yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. Aside from the point which was urged a while ago with reference to noncompetitive examinations, there is another point about which I should like to question my good friend from New York. Just as the noncompetitive feature is urged by the author of the pending bill—in other words, we are asked to violate the existing law with respect to competitive examinations—I am wondering how the Senator feels about the apportionment problem and how it will be affected if we should pass the bill as reported.

As the Senator well knows, the Civil Service Commission has had to deal with apportionment ever since the act has been on the statute books. The employees from various States who are to serve in the city of Washington are to be apportioned in proportion to the number of inhabitants in the respective States.

I admit that considerable improvement in apportionment has been made since 1933. To afford Senators a comparison of the figures as they existed in 1933 and as they exist in 1940, let me read from a table appearing on page 5 of the Senate committee report.

Take the case of the State of Alabama: In 1933 Alabama received but 43.5 percent of its quota of civil-service departmental jobs. Today it has 61.7 percent.

In 1933 the State of Virginia, which is nearby, had 344.9 percent of its quota. Today that percentage has been reduced to 207.8 percent. In other words, Virginia has double the number of appointments it is entitled to in comparison with States and Territories which have as low as 11 percent of their quotas.

The question I desire to ask the Senator from New York is, how will the problem of equalizing apportionments be affected if we are to blanket in 200,000 persons when it is logical to assume that the vast majority of them come from his State, New York, or from Virginia, or nearby Maryland, or the District of Columbia, which have today far in excess of their quotas? In other words, are we not again being asked to nullify that provision of the law when we are urged to vote for the bill as it is now written?

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, in answer to that question, I will say that, as the Senator suggests, we now have on the statute books an apportionment law, and unfortunately it does not apply with equal force to agencies outside of the civil service. In other words, if we bring all the agencies within the civil service, and give to the Civil Service Commission greater authority than they now exercise over agencies which are without the jurisdiction of the civil service, we may expect a constant and a more progressive improvement in the administration of the apportionment law.

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator from Louisiana is not questioning that feature of the bill. I am for placing them under the civil service. They ought to be there; but let us put them there in the manner prescribed by the law, so that the Commission will be able to exercise its duty with respect to apportionment as provided by existing law. I say to the Senator that if we permit the Civil Service Commission to blanket in these 200,000 persons without competitive examinations, it may be that instead of the figures I have just read, wherein, as I have pointed out, Virginia had 344 percent of her quota, the percentage of employees from Virginia might go up to 400 percent. I repeat that unless we have competitive examinations, and unless the Commission is given the opportunity to work out this apportionment as provided in the law, we probably shall revert to the condition which prevailed prior to 1933.

Mr. MEAD. I am in complete sympathy with the Senator's ultimate objective, but it was pointed out to our committee in the hearings that during the World War period, or perhaps immediately following the war, when it was very difficult to induce individuals to join up with the Federal agencies, there was a relaxation of the quota law, and there was a large employment of persons in nearby States. I was told by the Civil Service Commission and their representatives who appear before our committee, however, that there has been a constant and continuing improvement; that they have the law, that they will equalize the apportionment as rapidly as they possibly can, and that they themselves are opposed to the amendment of the so-called quota law so far as the progress of this bill is concerned.

So if we have any complaint of the quota law I really believe an amendment to it might be in order. I know it would be in order so far as the consideration of this bill is concerned; but our committee considered the subject. We took it up with the Civil Service Commission. We were satisfied with the progress they are making, and we felt as a committee that that matter had no place in the bill; and therefore I have before me nothing but the committee bill.

Mr. ELLENDER. I do not see how we could cure the defect I complain of by an amendment, because under the bill we are directing the Civil Service Commission to hold noncompetitive examinations irrespective of the incumbent's State of residence; and if the incumbents pass that examination, into the service they go, notwithstanding the fact that the appointments may be in direct opposition to the apportionment phase of the law.

Mr. President, in connection with my remarks I ask unanimous consent that the tables appearing on pages 4 and 5 of the Senate committee's report on this bill be incorporated in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LODGE in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The tables are as follows:

[1] Although the apportioned classified civil service is by law located only in Washington, D. C., it nevertheless includes only about half of the Federal civilian positions in the District of Columbia. Positions in local post offices, customs districts, and other field services outside of the District of Columbia which are subject to the Civil Service Act are filled almost wholly by persons who are local residents of the general community in which the vacancies exist. It should be noted and understood that so long as a person occupies, by original appointment, a position in the apportioned service, the charge for his appointment continues to run against his State of original residence, and once appointed he cannot be removed from his position because his State is in excess. Certifications of eligibles are first made from States which are in arrears.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I ask the Senator to yield for two reasons. First, it had been my intention to speak in behalf of the bill today, but I realize that perhaps it would be a little difficult to get a vote on the bill or on the Senator's motion on account of another bill which it is desired to have considered. So I shall not take the time of the Senate to speak on the bill. I wish to say to the Senator, however, that I do not know what his idea is, but I know what my idea is about this particular bill, and especially with reference to the objections raised by the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Louisiana. My thoughts are best expressed in language which I have frequently heard the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] use, that Senator being present and doing me the honor of listening. I would rather have half of something than all of nothing. [Laughter.]

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, while my distinguished colleague from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], who briefly discussed certain provisions of the bill on Friday, is present, I wish to read from a letter directed by the Civil Service Commission to the distinguished chairman of our Committee on Civil Service, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW], who also is present in the Chamber and whose efforts in conducting the affairs of our committee are worthy of compliment and high praise from me. The letter reads:

> The only positions in the executive branch of the civil service to which the provisions of H. R. 960 may not be extended are those "positions in or connected with the Work Projects Administration." No other group of positions is excluded from the purview of title I—

Mr. MCKELLAR. Did he say the P. W. A.?

Mr. MEAD. The W. P. A. The letter continues:

> No other group of positions is excluded from the purview of title I, and positions which are filled by appointment by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate may, therefore, under the bill be included in the classified civil service. There is no provision in the bill, however, which can be construed to change the locus of the appointing power or to deprive the Senate of its right of confirmation with respect to any position or group of positions. If an Executive order should be issued pursuant to the bill, therefore, including within the classified service positions which the law provides shall be filled by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the Commission would presumably be required to issue a certificate of eligibles to the President, from which a proposed employee would be nominated and his name submitted to the Senate for confirmation in much the same manner as appointments of first-, second-, and third-class postmasters are now affected under the act of June 25, 1938.

In other words if a district attorney, or United States marshal, or a collector of internal revenue, or any officer requiring confirmation by the Senate, were included in an Executive order and covered into the merit system, a list of eligibles would be given to the appointing agency, and from that list of eligibles a name would have to be sent to the Senate for confirmation of the appointment by the Senate, just as is the case today, and just as is the case under the law bringing postmasters of the Presidential class within the civil service.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, that is a distinct improvement upon what seemed to be the provision of the bill as we were discussing it a few days ago. But I wish to call the attention of the Senator to an argument he made a few moments ago, in reply to a contention made by the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], concerning the elderly lawyer who felt that he could not stand an examination in competition with a youngster who was just out of college, where he had been highly trained and educated. I think the Senator was apt in the illustration he gave.

What strikes me with a great deal of force is that that applies to all district attorneys and all assistant attorneys general in Washington, of whom there are a great many The Senator's reasoning would apply to all those lawyers, and I am not so sure but that the bill could be improved very much by excluding those classes of lawyers, for the reason that otherwise we would have as assistant attorneys general and as attorneys all over the country boys just out of college. They might in the future make very excellent assistant attorneys general, but, as the Senator so well argued in his colloquy with the Senator from Michigan, it seems to me that some exception should be made so that a competitive examination would not be required in such cases. I hope the Senator will give that his attention and will offer an amendment along that line.

While I am on my feet I wish to ask the Senator a question. I was present when he was having a colloquy with the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] a few minutes ago, when the Senator was complaining that this was a patronage bill. In that connection I desire to ask the Senator whether the Tennessee Valley Authority would be included under the proposed law, or might it be included within the provisions of the law?

Mr. MEAD. Unless an amendment is offered exempting the Tennessee Valley Authority, which I understand has its own rigid selective system now, it will be covered by the proposed law.

Mr. MCKELLAR. The Tennessee Valley Authority is an extensive Federal organization, largely situated in my State. It probably has several thousand employees. I say to the Senator from New York and to the Senator from Connecticut that if there is a single, solitary person, man or woman, who is holding a position, important or humble, under the Tennessee Valley Authority on my recommendation, I do not know who it is. I understand the Authority has a very excellent civil-service system of its own. I suppose that under the terms of the bill it would probably be merged into the general civil service, but surely if it is a question of patronage that is bothering the Senator from Connecticut, I am in the same boat with him, although I happen to be on the other side of the house politically.

Mr. MEAD. In answer to the statement made by my distinguished colleague from Tennessee, I will say that the Employees' Craft organization, the American Federation of Labor, and a number of other organizations were high in their praise of the working conditions and the working relations and the selective system adopted by the Tennessee Valley Authority. I wish to say also to my distinguished friend that the committee on the investigation of the activities of the Tennessee Valley Authority, on which I was one of the House representatives, went into the personnel selective system very thoroughly, and I quite agree with the statement the Senator has made, that it has never been a patronage agency, and that the Congressmen from the State of Tennessee received no more consideration than was the case with the Congressmen from any other State. In fact, there was a total absence of consideration and preference given to those in political authority or political positions when it came to the employment of personnel.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I thank the Senator. I think he is entirely correct in his statement, and I wish to say that in making the statement I have made, I was speaking in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut this afternoon. I am not complaining of the action of the Tennessee Valley Authority at all in its failure to appoint anyone in whom I might have been interested, or whom I might have recommended.

Mr. MEAD. By a strange coincidence, the first man I met after our committee went into the Tennessee Valley investigation, and of whom I inquired as to his residence, informed me that he lived in my district.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am interested in what the Senator from Tennessee has stated, because the Tennessee Valley Authority and its policy has in some measure been a headache to all of us. We put into the law a provision that no political consideration should be given to applications for any position under the Tennessee Valley Authority. When the dam in Kentucky was projected, the one at Gilbertsville, which is the only one in the State of Kentucky, which I believe they have named "The Kentucky Dam," it was announced that there would be a restricted area from which employees would be taken, naming certain counties in the Tennessee Valley and contiguous thereto, and a certain day in August of 1938 was fixed when all applications had to be in. Otherwise the applicant would be barred from consideration. Some 45,000 persons filed applications for positions in connection with the dam at Gilbertsville. An examination was held to test the fitness of the applicants, and to classify them in proportion to their fitness for jobs of various sorts. As happened all over Tennessee I am sure, of 45,000 who filed applications for positions under the T. V. A. at Gilbertsville, I think 44,900 of them wrote to me asking for indorsement. It was difficult to explain to the applicants that an endorsement from us not only would not be of any value, but would probably do them harm.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. At the time of the establishment of the T. V. A. that was definitely its policy. A young man who came to me very highly recommended by his professors of the University of Missouri, received a letter from my office, and went down to apply for a job with the T. V. A., but was told by the director of personnel that a recommendation from a Senator or a Representative was a disqualification.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; and that policy has been constantly pursued. I explain to all applicants for positions at Gilbertsville Dam, that a letter from a Representative or a Senator is almost the equivalent of an assurance that they would not be employed. So I have quit writing letters recommending persons for jobs with the T. V. A., because I do not want to do the applicants any harm; I want them to get the jobs on their merits.

I think it is a very wholesome thing to put in the law a provision that recommendations of a political nature will be disregarded, and I think the T. V. A. has been so scrupulous in obeying that provision that its officials have leaned backward. In the course of the development of these different dams I have no doubt the officials have carried with them from one dam to another experienced men who have been with them from the beginning of the construction on the Norris Dam. As the result a large number of Tennesseans are employed in the construction of the Gilbertsville Dam. Every time I tell my friends that a letter from me will be of no value, but rather will do harm, I am confronted with the statement that all those from Tennessee who are engaged at Gilbertsville, Ky., were appointed upon the recommendation of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]. I have no proof that that is not true, except I know the policy of the T. V. A., and it is very reassuring and comforting for me to hear the Senator from Tennessee say, as I heard him tell Dr. Morgan one day in my presence, that no one whom he had ever recommended to the Tennessee Valley Authority had gotten a job.

Mr. McKELLAR. No one whom I have recommended has gotten a job as an officer, or as an employee, or even as a guide, or anything else. So far as I know, I make no recommendations at all to the T. V. A., and if any are made in my name they are always turned down.

Mr. BARKLEY. I realize that.

Mr. McKELLAR. So far as I know, of my own knowledge, as I said a while ago, not a single person that I ever recommended to the T. V. A. is in the employ of the T. V. A. today.

Mr. BARKLEY. I can state the same thing, so far as I am concerned, and I can give testimony that if there is one agency, in the United States Government which is scrupulously carrying out that policy it is the Tennessee Valley Authority. When our old colleague and friend Senator Pope, of Idaho, was made a T. V. A. Commissioner many of his friends, I have no doubt, thought they would be able to use their friendship with him to obtain jobs, but to his credit let it be said that he has carried out the same policy.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator from New York will permit me, I wish to say that, as a matter of fact, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], in drawing the T. V. A. measure, placed in it a provision excluding political appointments, and the officials of the T. V. A. have simply carried out that provision of the law.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I should like to ask the Senator from New York, in connection with the point to which reference has been made, whether or not the T. V. A. will be included in the bill now under discussion?

Mr. MEAD. Under the terms of the bill before us it is included.

Mr. DANAHER. Is it not a fact that the T. V. A.—and let it be understood that what I say is not said with the slightest intention of reflecting on the T. V. A.—the T. V. A. purposely in the past asked not to be included within the civil-service provisions?

Mr. MEAD. That is true; and one of the reasons for the request is that the T. V. A. is in the construction stages.

Mr. DANAHER. Precisely.

Mr. MEAD. Eventually there will be a minor number of employees, comparatively speaking, who will be needed in the maintenance of the various facilities of the T. V. A. At that time the T. V. A. will have no objection, I believe, to being included within the civil service, but they have an excellent selective system now in vogue which, as I understand, in great part has come about as the result of conferences with and advice from the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I had talked previously with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who had come into the Chamber, and who told me of the experience of the T. V. A. and why the practice followed was necessary in the selection of technical men, and I approve of it. I have no criticism of it, Senators will understand. There is one point, though, which is certainly worthy of passing notice, and that is that no better evidence to the effect that there is nothing political about appointment to positions with the T. V. A. could be obtained than from the testimony of the Senator from Tennessee. There is no question about that. I have no fear when I hear his praise of this particular agency, which apparently is the only one which Senators can think of as to which there is no political history. Quite the contrary, it appears to have no political patronage aspect to it at all.

I should like to ask the Senator from New York another question. Does the Senator from New York and his committee feel that the United States attorneys should be exempt or should be included in this bill?

Mr. MEAD. That was discussed in committee meetings and hearings. It was a much mooted question. Some believed that all policy-making positions and all positions requiring confirmation by the Senate should be eliminated from the consideration of this bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask the Senator from New York to yield on that point?

Mr. DANAHER. Of course.

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have heard mentioned several times in debate, "policy-making positions." I know that "policy-making positions" are mentioned in the Hatch bill. What is a policy-making position? I think the bill should define those who are subject to the measure and those who are exempt. I would not know a policy-making official if I met one. What is a policy-making official?

Mr. MEAD. Let me say to my distinguished colleague, the Senator from Texas, that in discussing this problem before our committee we felt that we could leave to the President, the head of the executive service, the exemption of certain employees in the executive family who he believed should be exempted from the provisions of the bill. We felt also that existing law, which required confirmation by the Senate, should be carried out.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is all right. If the President appoints and the Senate confirms an appointee, why is that not enough? Why should we have to call on someone else to bless him as well? If the President, under the constitutional power, appoints someone, and then the Senate confirms him, is that not enough? I think all such appointees should be exempt under this measure. What is the sense of calling on some little civil-service clerk to tell the Senate and the President who can be appointed and confirmed, when under the Constitution, if the President appoints him and the Senate confirms him, he has title to the office? I think it is foolish for the Senate to try to tie its own hands or tie the hands of the President in such a case.

Mr. MEAD. Under the provisions of the bill we do not tie the hands of the President. We do not make any mention of the matter the Senator has just discussed. That is contained in the existing law. But we do not prevent the President from requiring the Civil Service Commission to hold an examination for those who may later require confirmation by the Senate. It is a voluntary procedure.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me there?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; I am glad to yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Texas was not in the Chamber, I believe, a few moments ago when the Senator from New York and I discussed that very question. My contention with respect to the question of attorneys especially, it is based in part upon the argument of the Senator from New York that in a competitive examination for places under civil service, the young lawyers of the country would have a tremendous advantage over the older lawyers of the country, and probably, as a result, we would have a legal service composed almost entirely of young lawyers, for it would be necessary to appoint one of the three highest on the list. I am urging the Senator from New York further to perfect the bill—I think it will add very much to it—so that all the important lawyers, at any rate, in the service of the United States should be selected in a different way, and not by civil service.

Mr. HILL and Mr. CONNALLY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LODGE in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. MEAD. For the moment I should like to call my distinguished colleague's attention to a statement which was sent to me, as follows:

> There is no provision in the bill which can be construed to change the appointing power or to deprive the Senate of its right of confirmation with respect to any position or any group of positions.

In addition to that, the Reed commission, headed by Mr. Justice Reed, is now making a study of the attorneys in the Federal service. That commission will make its report to the President. We felt that, in view of the existing law with reference to confirmations, it would be all right for us not specifically to exempt attorneys, but to leave them subject to the provisions of the general law. If the President desires, he may carry out the recommendations of the Reed commission.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. HILL. The Senator speaks about existing law, and yet the very first language in the bill repeals existing law. The opening words of the bill are as follows:

> That notwithstanding any provisions of law to the contrary—

That repeals existing law so far as the bill is concerned. That is why the language is written into the bill; so there is no use talking about existing law if we are to pass the bill as it is written. The very first language in the bill repeals all existing law.

Mr. MEAD. There is no provision of law which authorizes the President specifically to exempt positions. There was the thought, in connection with the first civil-service law and every subsequent amendment to the civil-service law, that the President, the head of the executive department, should have the power, if and when he chose to exercise it, to bring certain employees within the civil service or to leave them out. That is what the bill does. It simply carries out the language of the prior civil-service law.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. The Senator refers to United States attorneys. They are separately commissioned by the President, who, having taken his oath to enforce the law, in terms by his commission delegates within the several districts the power to bring to book criminals and others who run afoul of the law in one respect or another, as well as the civil power which is vested by statute in United States attorneys. It may happen that in one or more of the 88 districts in this country certain United States attorneys may be out of sympathy either with a given law or with the administration, or with the policy-making Executive who happens to be in control at a given time. It seems to me that to say that a Chief Executive should be saddled with all those people down through the years under the terms of the bill would be to deny to the Chief Executive a large phase of necessary power in discharging his absolute duty to enforce the law.

I bring that matter to the Senator's attention as a consideration, and ask if there was not argument on that point in the committee, with reference to whether or not United States attorneys should be included within the bill?

Mr. MEAD. I will say to my distinguished colleague that under the existing law the President may remove attorneys. The President need not bring them under the provisions of the bill. That situation is left more or less as it is. The committee had in mind that the Reed commission might make some specific recommendation with reference to the employment of attorneys, so we did not take affirmative action. We did not take action which would compel the President to bring attorneys within the civil service. The President would be in a position to await the findings of the Reed commission.

Mr. DANAHER. Whatever the Reed commission may say or do with reference to 500 attorneys in the Veterans' Administration, or other hundreds in the Solicitors' offices in the different departments, or the Bureau of Investigation in the Department of Justice—all of which have been more or less under discussion at times—there is a very different situation, it seems to me, about which the Congress ought to have something to say, as to officers who are law-enforcement attorneys. Therefore I ask the Senator from New York if he does not feel that at the proper time an amendment to except United States attorneys should be accepted.

Mr. MEAD. In reply to that question I will say that we are not bringing them within the civil service. We are leaving the subject matter wide open. When the Reed commission makes its recommendations, and we have the benefit of study and investigation of the subject, I think at that time we shall be able to go into the subject with better knowledge of it, and with the benefit of the views of the very learned commission without developing any rigid requirement at this time. No matter what the recommendations of the Reed commission may be, it will not be able to change the existing law. Of necessity, it will have to come to the Congress if its recommendations require new legislation. It was the opinion of our committee that in the passage of a bill giving the President authority to cover certain agencies within the civil service we should omit provisions which would prevent the President from exercising an authority if he deemed it wise and prudent to do so. So it occurs to me that we might well leave the matter open.

To a great degree I am in accord with the Senator's views with reference to attorneys who might be out of sympathy with an administration. I can see that perhaps there might be an illustration of that policy if attorneys throughout the United States were given life tenure under civil service, and were entirely out of sympathy with such a law as the prohibition law. I believe they would conduct themselves in keeping with the essence and letter of the law. Nevertheless, I can see that perhaps greater efficiency might result when at least the attorneys in charge are enthusiastic in their advocacy of the policy of the administration in power. There is merit to the suggestion which the Senator offers.

Mr. DANAHER. To nail down that one point, we do not have to go outside the Senator's own State. In fact, we do not have to go outside New York County. Mr. Thomas E. Dewey became county attorney in New York County, and became the prosecutor, notwithstanding the fact that the very same culprits whom he prosecuted and convicted had been running rampant long before he became prosecutor. I cite that as a perfect illustration of why we ought to exempt United States attorneys from the operations of the bill.

I thank the Senator for his courtesy.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. In that connection I hope the Senator will have an amendment prepared along that line.

Mr. MEAD. I thank the Senator.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3929) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Memphis, Tenn.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (H. R. 10361) to provide for increasing the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes, and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE NEAR MEMPHIS, TENN.—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator from New York will yield to me long enough to present a conference report on a bill having to do with a bridge across the Mississippi River.

Mr. MEAD. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. DANAHER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	Johnson, Colo.	Schwartz
Andrews	Ellender	King	Schwellenbach
Ashurst	Frazier	Lodge	Sheppard
Austin	George	McKellar	Shipstead
Bailey	Gerry	McNary	Smith

Clark, Mo.	Hill	Pittman	White
Connally	Holt	Radcliffe	Wiley
Danaher	Hughes	Reed
Davis	Johnson, Calif.	Russell

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. McKELLAR (for Mr. BAILEY) submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3929) entitled "An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Memphis, Tenn.," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment and the House agree thereto.

That both Houses agree to the bill in the form as originally passed by the Senate.

MORRIS SHEPPARD,
CHARLES L. McNARY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

EDWARD A. KELLY,
PEHR G. HOLMES,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report.

There being no objection, the report was considered and agreed to.

EXTENDING THE CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE

Mr. MEAD. I call up the motion that is now on the desk in order that we may get to the amending stage of the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the question now pending before the Senate. The Chair will state that the question is on the motion of the Senator from New York to proceed to the consideration of House bill 960, extending the classified civil service of the United States.

POLITICS IN NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, for a long while we have heard the statement that there should be no politics in national defense. I agree with that; I feel that we should have an adequate, strong national defense, but I do object to politics in the awarding of contracts.

The other day there was sent to me a newspaper containing a very significant item, which could be duplicated, I think, in many instances. It is a newspaper published in York, Pa., and the article is headed "Heads State Drive." It reads in this way:

Appointment of S. Forry Laucks, president of the York Safe & Lock Co., as head of a State-wide organization to form Roosevelt-Wallace clubs, was announced yesterday by Dr. Luther A. Harr, Pennsylvania Democratic campaign chairman, at Harrisburg. The appointment was made by National Chairman Edward J. Flynn.

"It is my purpose to establish Roosevelt-Wallace clubs in every county," Mr. Laucks said in a statement, "and through their membership to prosecute a vigorous campaign, not only for these able candidates on our national ticket but for the reelection of United States Senator Joseph F. Guffey and for G. Harold Wagner for State treasurer and for F. Clair Ross for auditor general.

"In addition, the clubs will give special attention, too, to the candidacies of every Democratic aspirant to a seat in the State senate and in the house of representatives."

There is nothing particularly significant about that; Mr. Laucks has a perfect right to be chairman, but in the same newspaper I find this item:

Local firms get war contracts totaling $3,046,120.

This is what is said under the heading—I will not burden the Senate by reading the complete list but in naming the contracts the newspaper says:

Largest was an artillery matériel Ordnance Department contract awarded to the York Safe & Lock Co. and worth $2,914,720.

The York Safe & Lock Co. has as its president Mr. S. Forry Laucks, who, on the very day he got a contract for $3,000,000 from the United States Army, was named as chairman of the Pennsylvania Roosevelt-Wallace Clubs. It may only be a coincidence; I do not know; but it is quite an unusual thing to pick up a newspaper and see a man named as State chairman who at the same time gets $3,000,000 worth of contracts from the United States Government.

So I thought I would look a little further into the York Safe & Lock Co. I find that Mr. Laucks has a perfectly good reason to be for the ticket. I am not discussing whether he should or should not be, but here is what I find:

During the week of January 13, 1940, the York Safe & Lock Co. got a contract from the War Department for $604,188 worth of gun mounts, to be delivered on the 15th day of September. Then on the 10th of February 1940 I find the Navy gave a contract to the York Safe & Lock Co.—the Army had given them the other one—the Navy gave them a contract for $59,846.27 worth of gun mounts.

Not satisfied with that we find that on February 24, 1940, the War Department again gave the same York Safe & Lock Co. a $57,050 contract for cradle assemblies.

By the way, we find that delivery was to be made on the 2nd day of November 1940. Of course, November 2, 1940, is a very good time to have the factories going.

Here is another thing. We find that in the week of August 24, 1940, the same York Safe & Lock Co. got a contract from the War Department for gun carriages amounting to $794,300. Add to those the recent contract given to the York Safe & Lock Co. amounting to $2,914,720, and it will be seen that it pays to be on the right side.

It will be remembered that in 1937 I discussed the Democratic campaign book of 1936. I picked up the Democratic campaign book of this year with the words "Price, 25 cents" marked out. I turn to page 114, and I find a half-page advertisement of the York Safe & Lock Co. They paid approximately, I imagine, $4,000 for that. Of course that was a pretty good investment; there can be no doubt about that, because we find that in September they got a $3,000,000 contract from the Government.

AIRCRAFT COMPANIES DONATE

Talking about this campaign book, since I am on that subject, I also find in looking through it another very interesting advertisement. On page 22 here is "Grumman Skyrocket, The United States Navy Looks Ahead." I think it paid many thousands of dollars for that advertisement, and I find that the Grumman Aircraft Co. has orders for a good many months to come from the United States Navy and from the United States Government for aircraft production.

When such things happen in this country it certainly makes the American people wonder. When organizations that are producing national-defense items are required to donate money for party campaigns it is time the American people were finding out what is going on behind the scenes. If I may refer also to 1936, the last two campaign books show directors of certain corporations donating money to the Democratic Party through the campaign books. We know they could not do it under the laws of the United States but, through the subterfuge of these campaign books, they do it. What do we find? We find directors of the Boeing Airplane Co., the Bell Aircraft Corporation, the Bendix Aviation Corporation, the Eclipse Aviation Corporation buying the campaign book.

Senators have probably noticed, from the press, how many million dollars' worth of orders have been given to the Electric Boat Co. Directors of the Electric Boat Co. did not pay $2.50 for the 1936 campaign book, but paid many hundred dollars for that campaign book. We find the directors of General Motors, of United States Steel, who have received millions of dollars in orders from the United States Government, also being hijacked by a political party. Then can it be said there is no politics in defense? Who is stopping defense? Not some of us who are opposing this thing but others who have been trying to smear those of us who are opposed to these practices. We will find as we go through these campaign contributions that it pays to be on the right side.

Now let me give you a few more facts on these campaign books that may interest you. I know they interested me quite a good deal. What did I find?

The Bethlehem Steel Corporation has not been overlooked by the United States Army and Navy in their contracts. How much do you suppose they paid for that $2.50 book? You can buy them for a nickel now, but how much do you suppose they paid for this $2.50 book? Seven thousand and five hundred dollars for a book that sold for $2.50. It was a good investment.

What did the Boeing Aircraft Co. pay for this $2.50 campaign book? Two thousand and five hundred dollars—pretty good for a $2.50 book!

What did the Bath Iron Works, of Bath, Maine, pay for a $2.50 book? Two thousand and five hundred dollars.

The Chrysler Corporation got a good contract from the Government. How much do you suppose the Chrysler Corporation paid for these books? Five thousand and one hundred dollars for a $2.50 book.

The Winston Engine Co. paid $2,700 for that book.

So, as we go through the whole matter, we find that there has been a peculiar type of "patriotism." When I went to school I was taught how to spell "patriotism" as "p-a-t-r-i-o-t-i-s-m," but since I have been watching affairs here in Washington I have learned that you do not spell "patriotism" that way, but that you spell it "p-a-y-t-r-i-o-t-i-s-m" with the accent on the "p-a-y." [Laughter.] Patriotism! We find that some of these individuals are telling the world about their "patriotism," proclaiming that we must build up the national defense, at the same time that they are getting contracts. As I said over the air the other night, they are waving the American flag with one hand and stuffing a nice, juicy contract with the Government in their pockets with the other.

That is the band of "patriots" that are coming to Washington today. They have come in such numbers that, frankly, it is hard to get a room in a hotel in Washington. You can hardly get a room in a hotel here because these groups of contract vultures are here in Washington to get part of the money, and to shout their "patriotism" to the sky. As the elder La Follette said, looking over the same type of persons in 1917, "Shades of Lincoln! What a band of patriots!"

Yes; Washington has been infested with them. Let me make the charge here that they have the acquiescence and support of United States Army officials, of United States Navy officials, and the National Defense Council.

ARMY AND NAVY PROTEST PROFIT RESTRICTION

Do you realize that representatives of the United States Army and the United States Navy and the National Defense Council appeared in an executive session before the Naval Affairs Committee of the United States Senate and fought against the limitation of profits on Government contracts? Oh, no; they did not want to limit the contracts to 7 percent or 8 percent. They wanted to put the profits on these Government orders back up to 12 percent. I challenge anyone to deny that statement, and I will prove it by the testimony of the men so appearing. It is high time that the American people realized that all this yelling of "patriotism" has a few paltry dollars mixed in with it, too.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The repeal of the Vinson-Trammell Act contemplated in the tax bill now in conference to all intents and purposes removes any limitation whatever on profits from these war contracts; does it not?

Mr. HOLT. That is correct. There is no doubt about it—what are the facts? Do I find these poor companies getting ever so poor? Let us look at a few of their contracts.

EARNINGS IN 1940

We find that the Bendix Aviation Corporation in the first 6 months of 1939 made $2,162,210, but in the first 6 months of 1940 they made $4,295,419, or double the amount made in the first 6 months of the previous year.

What else do we find? The Curtiss-Wright Corporation in the first 6 months of 1939 made $3,370,804, but in the first 6 months of 1940 the same aviation corporation made not $3,000,000 but $6,235,969.

The Douglas Aircraft Corporation between the months of December and May ending May 1939, made $1,396,792. In a similar 6 months of 1939–1940, ending in May, they made $3,388,857.

Fairchild Aviation increased its net profits from $141,121 for the first 6 months of 1939 to $318,946 in the same period in 1940.

Lockheed Aircraft Corporation earned approximately $500,000 in the first 6 months of 1939 as compared to an estimated $2,000,000—four times as much—in the first 6 months of this year.

The United Aircraft Corporation made $3,678,689 in the first 6 months of 1939, and $6,228,106 in the first 6 months of 1940.

All of these figures are for net income.

The Glenn L. Martin Co., of Baltimore, in the first 6 months of 1939 made $967,624 profit, but in the first 6 months of 1940 they made $4,291,490, or an increase of 425 percent in their profits in the same period of time, over 1 year.

Some of the officials are coming here and on their knees telling how we are mistreating the companies who want national defense contracts; and the United States Senate, as the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] said, the other day took off the lid on profits. We did have a 7-percent lid on profits; and 7 percent is a pretty good profit when we are taking American boys and putting them into camp at $21 a month for the first 4 months and $30 a month for the next 8 months. When an American boy makes $100 a month, and we take him and put him in camp for a year, we confiscate from 70 to 79 percent of his wealth for that year, and then people talk about taking off the lid of 7 percent; and who advocated it? The United States Army officials, the United States Navy officials, and the National Defense Council. To be specific, who did it? Colonel Schultz, of the United States Army; Captain Krause, of the United States Navy; and Frederick Eaton, for the National Defense Council. Mr. Eaton said he was speaking for the National Defense Council, and was authorized to say that we should put the limitation back to 12 percent rather than reduce it to 7 percent as was done in a bill passed shortly before his appearance.

What do I find here in the case of a few steel companies? I have a statement of the profits of a few of them. I find that in the first 6 months of 1939 they made $21,100,397, but in the first 6 months of this year the same steel companies made $93,499,283, or an increase of 450 percent in their profits in the first 6 months of this year. If all of the companies were totaled it would be much more.

What about the United States Steel Corporation? Mr. Edward Stettinius was chairman of the board of the United States Steel Corporation. He is now Chairman of the National Defense Council, and opposes any limit on profits today. He personally opposes any limit on profits. What did Mr. Stettinius' United States Steel Corporation do? Let me tell you. In the first 6 months of 1939 the United States Steel Corporation made but $1,970,311 profit, but in the first 6 months of 1940 the same steel corporation made $36,315,003. That is not bad—an increase of profit from $1,900,000 to $36,315,000 in 6 months; and the prospect for the next 6 months points to an even greater profit than that. So we see that many individuals who are so much interested in national defense at the same time are interested in putting in their pockets all the profitable dividends that are possible.

WILLIAM ALLEN WHITE'S "WAR" COMMITTEE

We have had a committee circularizing the country known as the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies, with the front of the stuffed shirt William Allen White; and what do we find in that committee? Oh, these individuals are so much interested in America. What do I find? I find a director of the New York Shipbuilding Corporation on the committee. The New York Shipbuilding Corporation, it may interest you to know, has already received from the United States Government over a half billion dollars'—not a half million, but a half billion dollars'—worth of orders. He is a sponsor of the William Allen White organization, and a director, also, in the New York Shipbuilding Corporation.

What else do we find? We find Col. Henry Breckenridge. He was sent recently to Lexington, Ky., to tell the people why they should get behind the William Allen White committee. Of course, I do not think he told them down there the same as he did when he was put on the spot, that he wanted a declaration of war, as he did over the radio; but when he said he wanted to do that, did he tell the people of Lexington, Ky., that his money, Col. Henry Breckenridge's money, is invested in corporations which make bombers, pursuit planes, and planes that are needed in war? Did he tell them that? I do not think so. Did he tell them that he was a founder of Aeronautical Securities, Inc., and that its money was invested in making great profits out of airplane contracts? No; he did not tell them that. I shall not bother the Senate to go into that, because once before I discussed Colonel Breckenridge on the floor of the Senate, and showed that his interest was not alone the patriotism of America, but the profits that came to him as the result of the sale of airplanes in this country. Oh, yes—a great patriot—"p-a-y-t-r-i-o-t," with the accent again, let me say, on "pay"!

We can go on down through the list, and we will find that individuals who are trying to shove America a little closer to the war are the ones who are getting profit out of it. Col. Henry Breckenridge says that we should give them all the airplanes we have and then qualifies it to say which we do not need for national defense. Whenever a plane is given it means an extra plane will be built, and almost every plane that is built means more profit for Colonel Breckenridge. The William Allen White committee is loaded with these war profiteers. So we will see, and history will record, that the American people today have in Washington a group of vultures who are just standing by to dive into these national-defense contracts at the expense of the American people. The American people do not have any opportunity to protect themselves. And what do these individuals say? They say, "Let us build these things at once. Do not quibble over prices, do not quibble over contracts, do not quibble over labor conditions, because if you quibble we will be invaded tomorrow. Slip me a contract before I go outside of the door." [Laughter.] In other words, they create a scare about the German Army coming over here with one hand pointing over there, and reaching out for a contract with the other. That is the group that is around Washington today, and which is helping finance politicians here in Washington. That is the kind of defense politics we are having. Not playing politics with defense, when today we all know that orders have been given to corporations the officials of which have in turn donated money to those in control? That is playing politics with national defense, not on the part of some of us who are in favor of national defense, who want to see the American taxpayer get a dollar's worth for every dollar spent. We want a dollar's worth of guns for a dollar out of the Treasury, we do not want 80 cents' worth of guns and 20 cents in campaign contributions. We want America protected, not only from invasion abroad but from the people in Washington who are sticking their hands into the taxpayers' pockets and taking money out, proclaiming their patriotism and also their adherence to those in power.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. I was interested in the statement the Senator made that the particular advertisement was paid for by several corporations. Am I right in that conclusion?

Mr. HOLT. I did not understand the question.

Mr. WILEY. Am I right in the conclusion that when the Senator spoke of the campaign book, he stated that these corporations had paid for the advertisements in the campaign book?

Mr. HOLT. That is correct.

Mr. WILEY. It is so indicated, is it not?

Mr. HOLT. That is correct.

Mr. WILEY. If that is the case, I cannot understand why there has not been a direct violation of the Corrupt Practices Act, which was the law away back in 1925, and is still the law. I refer to section 313. This is not the Hatch Act. This is the Corrupt Practices Act:

> It is unlawful for any national bank or any corporation * * * to make a contribution * * * in connection with any election at which Presidential and Vice Presidental electors or a Senator or Representative in, or a Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, Congress are to be voted for, or for any candidate, political committee, or other person to accept or receive any contribution prohibited by this section.

It seems to me that if the Senator has made out a direct case of violation of the Corrupt Practices Act it would be the business of the Attorney General's Department to prosecute. I know that there was some "whitewash" intended in that connection, but if the record itself shows that the advertisements were paid for by the corporations—and there cannot be any question that the money that was received was utilized for the book—it seems to me a clear case for prosecution has been made out.

Along the same line I wish to say to the Senator that there came to my desk today several letters from my own State, not exactly along the line we are discussing, but indicating that politics is indeed in the saddle. These letters, from residents of my own State, indicate that folks who were applying for jobs were assured they could not get employment in the Farm Security office until they had secured political endorsement for a place in the Democratic good book, the so-called Friant list. These letters specifically asked that I get their names put on the Friant list. That would indicate that the Farm Security officers in Wisconsin are requiring Democratic political endorsement on the part of applicants for jobs in the State Farm Security Administration. This shameful political blackjacking is a violation of the spirit of the Hatch Act. It serves to sandbag jobbing applicants so that they may line up for the New Deal administration.

The Senator will remember that the Friant list was originated by the late Julian Friant, special assistant to the Secretary of Agriculture. It was a list of job applicants who received political clearance from the New Deal bigwigs. In return for joining the faith, they were promised jobs. This was indeed a flagrant example of swapping jobs for votes, a system by which the free choice of a free citizen is crucified, so that he barters his vote and political loyalty for a job. This trafficking in jobs and this political serfdom must cease.

The Senator called attention to the fact that this book had been sold page by page to corporations in this country who had paid their bit. Undoubtedly the situation is as the Senator says. It was a quid pro quo proposition. They bought; they received. But—and I say this to the distinguished Senator—the most dangerous thing in this country is the complacency with which our people at this time are receiving this information. They have apparently been educated up to the conclusion that this is all right, that this is the thing to do. Officers do not prosecute. No one pays attention. America must awake.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator that when I made a survey of the 1936 campaign book, and placed it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, a copy of the information was sent to the Department of Justice, not only listing the individuals and corporations donating, but telling how much they donated, and the days on which they donated. Nothing was done about it, not a thing. That can be found in the 1938 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, actually telling the exact dates on which the donations were made. Although I did not intend to go into the subject of the campaign book except as it affected national defense, I wish to say to the Senator that there is another interesting thing which happened in 1936. One beer company—and the Senator knows that beer companies are under pressure by the Government—donated $2,000 for the campaign book. The solicitors went to its competitor and got $10,000, then they went to another competitor and got $10,000. Then they went back to the original company and got them to ante up, in order to even up, and it had to give $8,000 for a second book.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not approve of this practice any more than does the Senator from West Virginia, but when the Senator from Wisconsin says that this is evidently a practice to which the American people have been educated and have become calloused, I call his attention to the fact that it was a practice originated in 1920 by William Barnes, Jr., the Republican boss in the State of New York, on behalf of the Republican National Committee.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield; but I wish to say that I brought this matter up, not for the purpose of discussing any party matter, but as it affected the national-defense contracts. However, I have no objection to the Senator from Wisconsin replying.

Mr. WILEY. I had no purpose, in rising and speaking, to go into ancient history. The present has enough challenge without going back even into New York or Missouri. The senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] has just spoken. But we are facing a situation now in which all these things resolve themselves into a debilitating process. The youth of this country see these things, and observe them grow, with the idea that this is the thing to do. I should be very glad to join the Senator in introducing a resolution in the Senate calling for an investigation of this situation, to see if we cannot get action within a week on the very things about which we are talking. It is about time we were cleansing the stables in America. It is about time the American people were waking up to the fact that if they are to save this country they will have to save it at the polls in November.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. What the Senator from West Virginia was getting at in regard to national defense in politics, I assume, was something like what I brought up in this Chamber some weeks ago about Mr. "Chip" Robert, the secretary of the Democratic National Committee, who in the last year or so obtained negotiated contracts for his firm to the extent of approximately $27,000,000, the fees to his firm amounting to about a million dollars. He obtained all these contracts before the new Secretary of the Navy took office except one which was arranged before the new Secretary took office. I brought this out, and so far there has been no action by the President of the United States demanding his resignation nor has there been any action by anyone in authority, the Attorney General or anyone else, and Mr. Robert is still secretary of the Democratic National Committee and I suppose is still attempting to solicit business on a negotiated contract basis for Government departments. I wonder whether the Senator is aiming at that type of politics in connection with national defense.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I am aiming just at that type. But I want to say that we will find that history will record that many of these individuals who are flaming patriots today are much more interested in their own profits than they are in the defense of America. I wish to say that if I were to accept the contracts of which the Senator from New Hampshire speaks—the one with which Mr. Roberts is connected—I would resign as secretary of the Democratic National Committee before I accepted them. I would not smear the party in accepting them. I think Mr. Roberts did the party a disservice when he accepted them while holding his present position.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator, I assume, feels also that an applicant applying for a job in connection with defense work in this country under the Council of National Defense, should not be discriminated against because of his politics when the work is done in the service of national defense and for the good of the Nation. I want to ask him if he knows of many Republicans or many conservative anti new dealers getting positions in defense work even though they may be the best qualified. [Laughter.] I will answer the question by saying I know a lot of qualified Republicans who have not got to first base and there seems to be no trouble in getting jobs if one can qualify as a new dealer.

Mr. HOLT. I could not answer that, because I am not a very good person to discuss New Deal patronage.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator is an authority on that for obvious reasons.

Mr. HOLT. I wish to say that I think it is reprehensible that an aircraft company, a builder of airships, or a builder of tanks, should be required to donate money to the Democratic committee while receiving orders from the United States Government. I think any individual who would support such procedure should have a feeling of shame. I do not know the background of it, but I do know it is a fact. I wish to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that I have opposed it in the Republican field as well as in the Democratic field. I do not care who is doing it, it is wrong. I am in a position to say when it is wrong, and I have tried to do so while a Member of the United States Senate.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. HOLT. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator, while discussing this line of patriotism and our getting into a national campaign, might be interested in some articles which I have in my hand. I have an article published in the Knoxville Journal, which is headed:

Kipling's poem hailed; Bill's failed;
Parody on Roosevelt gets him jailed.

Under that heading appears an article in the September 11, 1940, issue of the Knoxville Journal. I have since somewhat investigated it personally. It says that a man down there by the name of William Manis was placed in jail because he circulated a parody having reference to Mr. Roosevelt.

The Senator from West Virginia I believe will recognize that this is getting into about the state of affairs that are found in dictator countries and the methods used are the methods used by certain dictator countries, when a man in circulating a parody adopted from a poem by Kipling, goes to jail and pays a fine in Knoxville, which is located in the very liberal State of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR].

I wonder if the Senator from Tennessee approves that kind of justice in his State, where a man goes to jail and pays a fine simply because he circularizes a little poem, a parody on President Roosevelt? Is that the type of thing going on in this country today? Are we living under such conditions?

Mr. McKELLAR rose.

Mr. HOLT. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, I do not know anything about it except what I have just heard from the Senator from New Hampshire. I have not seen the article from which he quoted. I must say, however, that if a man has been fined in Tennessee he probably was fined for violation of law.

Mr. BRIDGES. Would the Senator consider it a violation of law if a man wrote and circulated a little parody which has nothing wrong in it, about Mr. Willkie, and that he ought to go to jail for doing so? Do they not have a sense of humor in Tennessee?

Mr. McKELLAR. I would not consider it a violation of law and I do not think a man should be sent to jail for saying the same thing about President Roosevelt. I do not know, however, that the Senator from New Hampshire has gotten all the facts in connection with the case. I do not know what are the facts. There was in Tennessee sometime ago a very celebrated trial which aroused the whole country. It was the trial of a man who was prosecuted for a violation of the so-called evolution law. Much was said about it, but nothing came of it, because the man had violated the law and he was sent to jail in accordance with the law in Tennessee.

I have no doubt that if the man to whom the Senator from New Hampshire refers was sent to jail in Tennessee it was because he had committed an offense against the Tennessee law, and under a proper application of the law he was sent to jail. All the man has to do, in such circumstances, is to appeal the case.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me state to the Senator from New Hampshire that if the incident to which he refers occurred, it is simply an evidence of the insane war hysteria which is now sweeping over the country, and which I may say the Republican candidate for President, Mr. Willkie, by such speeches as the one he made in San Francisco Saturday, is doing as much as anyone else in the United States to encourage, except for that little group headed by William Allen White. If a man is put in jail for circulating a parody which is libelous on the President of the United States, that is certainly nothing compared to the thing that happened during the last epidemic of war hysteria in this country when a man in Texas was actually arrested for reading the Declaration of Independence.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. I dislike to take up the time of the Senator from West Virginia, but I think this matter ought to be clarified a little.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator be good enough to read the poem?

Mr. BRIDGES. I certainly will. Here is the poem for which the writer was sent to jail. Of course they may have trumped up other charges against him to cover it up.

Mr. HOLT. Is the Senator going to read it in my time?

Mr. BRIDGES. It will only take a moment, quoting from the article Here's Part of Bill's "Rejected," which got him jail:

A stranger stood at the gates of hell,
And the devil, himself, had answered the bell.
He looked him over from head to toe,
And said: "My friend, I'd like to know
What you have done in the line of sin
To entitle you to enter within."
Then Franklin D., with his usual guile,
Stepped forth and flashed his toothy smile.
"When I took charge in thirty-three,
A nation's faith was mine," said he.
"I promised this and I promised that,
I calmed them down with a fireside chat.
I spent their money on fishing trips,
And fished from the decks of their battleships.
I gave them jobs on the P. W. A.,
Then raised their taxes and took it away.
I raised their wages and closed their shops,
I killed their pigs, I burned their crops."

Bill's poem, which was attached to the habeas corpus petition, continued through several more verses, and wound up:

Now Franklin talked, both long and loud,
While the devil stood, and his head he bowed;
At last he said, "Let's make this clear,
You'll have to move, you can't stay here,
For once you mingle with this mob
I'll have to hunt myself a job."

That is the poem.

Mr. HOLT. Does the Senator mean they sent him to jail for circulating that poem?

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator mean that he got off with a jail sentence for writing that sort of stuff? He is certainly lucky to get off with merely a jail sentence for writing that sort of thing.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think a man who will deliberately tell a falsehood about the President of the United States such as that contained in the poem which the Senator from New Hampshire read got off very lightly with a $10 fine.

Mr. BRIDGES. I simply wanted to take the time of the Senator from West Virginia to find out and to indicate what the trend in the country is with reference to the matter of freedom of speech, when a man who circulates a simple parody about the President of the United States, which has nothing wrong in it, is put in jail and brought before the courts and then fined $10. Of course, they attempted to cloud the issue by trumping up other charges, too.

That appeared in the Knoxville Journal of September 11, 1940, in the State of the Senator from Tennessee. That is my authority for the statement.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, all I can say is that there is no doubt about that good, lifelong Republican newspaper being very angry at the present popularity of the President of the United States. It maligns him all the time. It is simply one of the things they possibly printed when they ought not to have printed it. I do not know what the law is with respect to such matters. If what was done was against the law, the man who did it ought to have been fined.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I do not know that Congress has passed any law covering such matters. It might have been a local or a State law. He might be fined and jailed on some other offense as an excuse. But what was done was done under the Democratic judicial system down there, and I simply bring it up to show that we are getting into a certain trend here in this country.

Mr. McKELLAR. We have a Republican Federal judge there who might look after the matter for the Republican Party.

Mr. BRIDGES. I will say that the Senator from Tennessee is going to help them as much as he can and as fast as he can by adding judges.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; we are going to add them when appointment of judges is necessary to be made in a Democratic administration, in precisely the same way that the Republicans added Republican judges when vacancies arose under Republican administrations.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am afraid, however, that the poetic trend, as indicated by the poem the Senator from New Hampshire read, is nothing to boast of.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, of course, when I started to discuss this matter I did not realize that I was going to have a discussion of the political situation. Four years ago I placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an article opposing the idea of blackjacking corporations. I think it is an insult to good American government to do so. I opposed it then, so my opposition to it now is not anything new. I say it is worse now when blackjacking is done in connection with national-defense contracts.

What do I find on page 164 of this year's book? I find a quarter of a page ad by the Fairchild Aviation Corporation. I do not know how much of a contract was gotten for a quarter of a page ad, but the York Safe & Lock Co. received a $3,000,000 contract and a half-page ad. Remember my comparison of the profits of the Fairchild Aviation Corporation in 1940 as compared to 1939.

The Fairchild Aviation Corporation advertised in the campaign book:

Aerial cameras and instruments for national defense.

I say those are things which are pointing to something very important in this country. I think it is time the people were finding it out.

WAR HYSTERIA

As to the case referred to by the Senator from New Hampshire, I wish to agree with the Senator from Missouri that we in America are entering today the path of war hysteria, and every day we continue down that road the hysteria will get worse. We will see American liberties wiped out by so-called patriots, men who want to defend America, and at the same time we will destroy the Bill of Rights of the Constitution, which protects the individual.

We have started the wheels going. We have started them by preaching hate. I do not speak of that in a domestic sense, but I speak of hate for nations across the sea, and hate for everything.

When we continue the process of hate we destroy the reasoning power of individuals; and when we destroy that we destroy justice within man's own mind. We shall not suffer as the Senator from New Hampshire spoke of the man from Tennessee suffering; but if we go down that road much farther the time will come when there will be no free speech, no free press, and no free assembly in this country. We have already seen signs of it. If a man dares to question national-defense contracts, he is accused of being against national defense, as I have been accused merely because I want the American people to get a dollar's worth for every dollar spent.

This is only the start. The trend was started in Congress by hysterical emotions, and the American people have gone down the road with us. Let us realize that the contracts to which I refer are a symptom of an attack on democracy in this country and makes us wonder whether or not we are facing a serious problem within our own borders.

When we corrupt government we destroy it. The practice of "blackjacking" corporations which are receiving national-defense contracts is a corrupt practice which should be prosecuted by the United States Government; but you know and I know that it will not be prosecuted. There is but one way out. The people themselves can understand and can speak with greater authority than those in power today.

EXTENDING THE CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE

The Senate resumed consideration of the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 960) extending the classified executive civil service of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD].

Mr. BURKE obtained the floor.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	Johnson, Colo.	Schwartz
Andrews	Ellender	King	Schwellenbach
Ashurst	Frazier	Lodge	Sheppard
Austin	George	McKellar	Shipstead
Bailey	Gerry	McNary	Smith
Barkley	Gibson	Maloney	Stewart
Bilbo	Gillette	Mead	Taft
Bridges	Glass	Miller	Thomas, Idaho
Bulow	Green	Minton	Thomas, Okla.
Burke	Guffey	Murray	Thomas, Utah
Byrd	Gurney	Neely	Townsend
Byrnes	Hale	Norris	Tydings
Capper	Harrison	Nye	Vandenberg
Caraway	Hatch	O'Mahoney	Van Nuys

Clark, Idaho	Herring	Pepper	Wheeler
Clark, Mo.	Hill	Pittman	White
Connally	Holt	Radcliffe	Wiley
Danaher	Hughes	Reed
Davis	Johnson, Calif.	Russell

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 960.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the pending motion submitted by the junior Senator from New York to take up what is called the civil-service bill, and I feel that, at least, a few words in explanation of my position are necessary, for the reason that normally one opposing a motion to take up a bill is, of course, classed as an opponent of the particular measure; but I am not in that position. I am open minded on the Mead civil-service measure. I hope that before the Senate adjourns it may be brought up for discussion, and I shall listen very carefully to the argument and then make up my mind whether to support or oppose it. The reason I rise in opposition to the motion to take up that bill at this time is well known to those who have followed the proceedings and requires an explanation. Let me say, first and preliminarily, that if the majority leader would indicate a willingness to permit the Senate to consider and do what it will with another measure, namely, Senate bill 915, the Logan-Walter bill, I would say nothing at all on the pending motion, and in fact would vote to take up the measure; but because for a year and a half, we, a subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee have been endeavoring without success, to bring before the Senate for consideration the highly important measure known as the Logan-Walter bill, it seems necessary now that, as we approach the end of this session, we should oppose the motion to take up any other measures, one after the other, until we are successful in bringing the Logan-Walter bill before the Senate for consideration. So I propose, within such a reasonably short time as I may express my thoughts, to give something of the history of this particular measure and a comparatively brief statement as to the merits of the proposal itself.

Something more than 16 months ago, the Senate Committee on the Judiciary favorably reported Senate bill 915, which went on the calendar, and appears there under the number 475. It is described as a bill "to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes."

Question has been raised by opponents of the measure, who are largely outside of the Senate and clearly outside the other body, because the House passed a similar measure by a majority of more than 3 to 1 many months ago. Opponents of the measure, largely in some of the administrative agencies, found a great many objections to the measure. The first question they have raised is as to the title. I say in reference to that that if the title which I have stated, namely, "a bill to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes," does not properly and adequately describe the measure, let the title be changed. Call it, if that is preferred—and it seems to me the new title would be more adequate—"a bill to establish essential curbs on administrative tribunals for the protection of the rights of the citizen when engaged in controversy with his Government."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator will remember that the title can always be changed after a bill has been passed.

Mr. BURKE. Yes; I think we ought not to waste any time about the title. I referred to it only because a very learned discussion was recently printed on the subject in a publication in which several pages at least were given to the defective title which this bill bears. So I say it seems to me a more adequate title would be "A bill to establish essential curbs on administrative tribunals for the protection of the rights of the citizen when engaged in controversy with his Government."

The bill was reported, as I have said, almost a year and a half ago, and when the Senate Calendar was called on June 13, 1939, the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] objected to its consideration at that time. The measure was known as the Logan bill because it was introduced and sponsored and carried through the hearings and through the committee by the late junior Senator from Kentucky, Mr. Logan. When it was called for the first time on June 13, 1939, the senior Senator from Kentucky then objected to its consideration. He stated, as the RECORD will show, that he had been requested by the then Attorney General to have the bill passed over until a committee theretofore set up by the Attorney General had completed a study of the agencies involved, a study in which it was then engaged, on June 13, 1939.

A few weeks later, when the calendar was again called, no objection was raised, and the bill, therefore, passed by unanimous consent. I was on the floor at the time, and was somewhat surprised at the failure of any Senator to object to the passage of the bill. I had no doubt if the Attorney General and his committee, in the interim since the objection was first made, a period of 2 weeks, had applied themselves to a study of the measure in the same spirit of fairness and determination to help correct a bad situation, the same spirit with which the problem had been approached by the subcommittee and the full Committee on the Judiciary, that they would have reached a like favorable result and would have had no occasion to ask that the objection be renewed. My surprise at the absence of objection was occasioned by the apparent demonstration that the committee had completed its study in 3 or 4 weeks, whereas I had expected it would take 3 or 4 months for it to accomplish the task. In that respect I did not misjudge the committee, for it is now disclosed that, instead of doing its job in a few weeks or a few months, the Attorney General's committee, after the elapse of much more than a year, has still not made its report, and we are now told that possibly in a month or two the committee will be ready to report. But it turned out that the failure to object to the passage of the bill on that occasion was due to mere inadvertence. A motion to reconsider was promptly entered, and, of course, agreed to.

The proposal, after all, is of such far-reaching importance that it certainly ought to be thoroughly debated and carefully considered on its merits; and it seems to me that the time has now come for that. It would be even worse for the Congress to postpone consideration until some committee, with the appointment of which it had nothing to do, a committee which is not responsible or responsive to it in any particular, may be ready to report. After all, as Mr. Justice Holmes once said:

> Something must be conceded to the shortness of human life.

In connection with the acceptance of the favorable action on the motion to reconsider the passage of the measure by unanimous consent attention was called the other day to the statement made by our distinguished leader at that time. I mention this not by way of criticism at all, as I know that what he then stated was what he expected to be done, and that he feels the fact that the Attorney General's committee has not yet made its report is a sufficient reason to permit the Congress to adjourn without any action, but, as was called to my attention the other day by the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], when I had the floor and was speaking on this matter, what amounted to an agreement was made between the senior Senator from Kentucky and the then junior Senator from Kentucky before consent was given to reconsider the passage of the bill which had taken place by unanimous consent. The language of our leader, as quoted from the RECORD, was that the bill should go back on the calendar—and this was toward the close or late in the last session of Congress—"with the understanding that the measure be taken up at some date early in the next session."

We cannot take it up early in this session; we have had practically 9 months of this session now; but we will overlook the use of the word "early," and still say that there was a gentlemen's agreement that the bill certainly should be taken up at this session of Congress. It may be voted up or voted down. I have no idea what the Senate will do with the measure when it comes to consider it; but it seems to me very plain that giving consideration to fair dealing, under those circumstances certainly no objection ought to be made to submitting this matter to the Senate for its consideration at this session. That is all we are asking; and it is the fact that we have been unable to secure consideration of the bill in this session, and have the assurance that we cannot secure it unless we fight for it, that we are now taking these steps in reference to the pending motion.

I do not know whether or not a sufficient number of Senators will be willing to vote against the motion of the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] in order that we may accomplish this purpose; but certainly the Senators who are not on the Judiciary Committee and are not familiar with this bill are entitled to have some explanation of it, how it came into being, and what it is, before they are called upon to pass upon that question. Those who are interested in the civil-service bill need have no fear, if they vote against its immediate consideration and permit the Logan-Walter bill to be discussed, that there will be any difficulty on the part of the junior Senator from New York in receiving recognition again, and renewing his motion, and having very prompt action upon it.

It has been reported by the press, and I assume with accuracy, and my own observation would tend to bear it out, that on last Friday, when we were about ready to have action on the final conference report which was listed to be taken up on the Export-Import Bank, our good friend the majority leader took pains to go to the then occupant of the chair to be sure that he would not overlook recognizing not the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] or the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] or myself to move to bring up this bill, but instead the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD]. Of course we understand that that is the policy, and that it will be followed for whatever number of days we remain in session; so we have no alternative now except to explain the bill, and try to persuade a sufficient number of Senators to join with us in saying we will consider nothing else, however much we may favor it, until there has been an opportunity to discuss the Logan-Walter bill.

So I proceed.

Students of government have watched with mingled feelings the rapid expansion of the administrative process. On the one hand, there has been a sense of satisfaction that a method has been found to relieve Congress and the courts of functions which all admit they are not so organized as properly to carry out. On the other hand, the process has been viewed by others with a sense of alarm at the lack of restraint shown by a very considerable portion of the personnel of these administrative bodies, a grasping for power, a disregard of long-established and cherished procedures which the average citizen believes to be essential in safeguarding his individual rights and privileges, particularly when he finds himself under attack from his own Government. The problem has long been clear, how to preserve the undoubted good in the administrative machinery and at the same time provide adequate safeguards against a continuation of abuses the existence of which no intelligent and honest-minded person dare deny or minimize.

It seems to me that little help is given toward finding a solution for this problem by those who attack administrative law as a cancerous growth, by those who would destroy it root and branch if that were possible. Plenty of justification for hostility to administrative boards has been supplied by short-sighted, narrow-minded, prejudiced administrators who have deluded themselves into believing that they are the chosen people to bring to an end in large part the judicial process developed through centuries of effort. These zealots have no faith in courts—at least, not in the kind of courts which we have heretofore had in this country. They recognize no merit in the separation of legislative, executive, and judicial powers. This attitude, I say, affords considerable justification for those who would like to go the full length in curbing and shackling an instrumentality which they consider to be a serious threat to our liberties. But that is not the way of progress. It may as well be recognized by all that the administrative tribunals are an essential part of modern governmental machinery. Our task is not to weaken or destroy, but to make them useful servants instead of unbridled masters.

It seems to me also that just as little help is offered by those who would make idols out of these administrative boards, who are eager to engage in a holy war against anyone who would touch them, restrain them, insist upon safeguarding the citizen who is haled before them for the determination of his personal and property rights. They do not serve well who would prevent or unduly delay consideration of the serious questions here involved. Any temporary success they may have in preventing needed reforms may very easily result in such a rising tide of opposition as to sweep away the good along with the bad.

In 1932 a significant volume was published under the title "Our Wonderland of Bureaucracy." It was the work of the then Representative and former Solicitor General, James M. Beck, of Pennsylvania, in collaboration with Col. O. R. McGuire, now chairman of the committee on administrative law of the American Bar Association. The growth of bureaucracy in this country was there set forth with supporting facts and figures which have never been successfully denied. So startling was the picture which these two students of American Government painted that thoughtful citizens throughout the country were deeply stirred.

In the 8 years that have elapsed since the publication of that volume the problem of checking bureaucratic government, preserving the good in it and eliminating the evil, has had the constant attention of a great number of American citizens. Those who now plead for delay in consideration of the Logan-Walter bill on the ground that it covers a new field and must be studied for a few months, or a few years, perhaps, before any action can properly be taken, speak in ignorance. They themselves may have been asleep. Others have been wide awake, and are ready for action now.

Almost immediately after publication of Our Wonderland of Bureaucracy the American Bar Association created a committee on administrative law. To it was assigned the task of making a thorough study of the entire subject with recommendations for necessary legislation—legislation, as was well said, whereby the governors themselves would be governed and the regulators themselves regulated.

In 1933, 1934, 1936, 1937, 1938, and again in 1939 this committee filed comprehensive reports with the association setting forth the unsatisfactory situation that had developed in many of the administrative tribunals. In 1937 the committee submitted a draft of a bill designed to bring about the necessary corrections. This bill was debated ably and thoroughly in the house of delegates of the American Bar Association at the convention of 1937 in Kansas City. It is worth while to note that the house of delegates of the American Bar Association is a democratic organization, consisting of at least two members from each State, one of whom is elected by the members of the American Bar Association in that State, the other by the State bar association. In addition, the larger city bar associations each choose one or more delegates. Finally, there are represented certain affiliated organizations, such as the American Law Institute, the American Judicature Society, the Federal Bar Association, and the National Association of Women Lawyers.

One of the greatest legal authorities of our time, a former judge in Nebraska, and for many years dean of Harvard Law School, was at that time made chairman of the committee on administrative law. I refer, of course, to Roscoe Pound. Before continuing with the story of that committee let me say that in the 3 years that have passed since he was chosen as chairman of that committee Dean Pound has devoted his superlative talents unceasingly in the effort to secure legislation that will insure that administrative tribunals function in accordance with American standards of justice and fair play. To that end he has written, and lectured, and appeared as a witness in the hearings conducted by the Logan subcommittee, to which I shall later make reference. Those hearings commenced on April 1, 1938. On the first day of the hearings there was presented and printed in full in the record the bill drafted by the committee of the American Bar Association.

At this time, since I have mentioned the name of Dean Pound, I wish to read a letter which I recently received from him:

LAW SCHOOL OF HARVARD UNIVERSITY,
Cambridge, Mass., May 18, 1940.

Hon. EDWARD R. BURKE,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR BURKE: I have looked over the bill for an act to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes, as it has been passed by the House of Representatives, and must say I think the bill has been distinctly improved by the changes made in the House.

I may interrupt the reading there to say that since the House took the action the Senate Committee on the Judiciary has made further changes which we think still further improve the bill. Former Dean Pound continues:

While this bill has been attacked severely by certain law professors in the legal periodicals, I remain firmly of the opinion that it ought to be passed and that it represents a great step forward in administrative law in this country. There is crying need of providing for a simple, expeditious, nontechnical mode of review of administrative determinations which will insure that there is a real record of administrative action in determinations made in quasi-judicial proceedings, and that upon that record there can be a judicial review to insure that the administrative action is within the limits of the Constitution and the statutes and has afforded a full and fair opportunity to all interested parties to present their case and be heard upon the matter upon which the administrative determination is based. It seems to me it is equally necessary to insure that judicial review shall not replace the discretion reposed by law in administrative agencies by the discretion of a court.

That of course is a vital point which must be emphasized, that Dean Pound, who approves the bill in its present form, insists that we must "insure that judicial review shall not replace the discretion reposed by law in administrative agencies by the discretion of a court."

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Is there anything in the bill which would have the effect of substituting the decision of a court for the discretion of the administrative body?

Mr. BURKE. I am very sure there is not, and I am equally sure that when we come to a discussion of the bill the senior Senator from New Mexico, who has from the very beginning been one of the closest students of the whole problem, will agree with the subcommittee and the full committee that there is nothing in the bill which will be before the Senate for consideration if we succeed in our efforts, which will substitute the discretion of a court for that discretion which Congress has wisely reposed by law in the administrative agencies.

I proceed with the letter from Dean Pound:

As things stand today, where review so often has to take the form of a suit in equity in which the testimony has to be taken over again, or at most the case reviewed as a whole de novo, the danger of substituting the court for the administrative agency is very real. The act in question avoids this by making the judicial review what it ought to be, confining it to its real function.

No less important are the provisions with respect to ascertaining the validity of administrative rules by declaratory judgment. Every consideration which calls for administrative guidance in advance rather than prediction of the legal aspects of the conduct of enterprises, action at peril in advance of determining the law, and judgment of the conduct of enterprises after the event, calls equally for giving assured validity to that guidance by determining the validity of administrative rules wherever controversial in advance of their operation.

It is an intolerable situation that a suit upon a promissory note to recover $50 is hedged about with every sort of safeguard, while administrative determinations which may involve millions of dollars are without any effective checks in many particulars and those involving very serious individual interests in the case of some administrative agencies are not subject to a review which is practically available to the persons aggrieved. It is equally intolerable that while legislative lawmaking is hedged about with requirements of reading of bills in extenso, printing them, having committee hearings, and a final review by the executive, and legislative-made rules are published and readily accessible, no such checks operate upon administrative rulemaking which may affect interests of the highest importance. In the case of judicial rulemaking ample provisions for publicity exist. There can be no reason why a rule of court with respect to the technicalities of taking a deposition should be subject to checks, while administrative rule making affecting vital interests should not.

I have read diligently the arguments by certain law teachers directed against the bill, and feel assured that the objections raised are not serious. It cannot be that administrative rule-making power is unduly hampered. The power of rulemaking carries with it a power of amending or abrogating rules, and experience may develop administrative rules exactly as it develops judicial rules. But an unrestrained power of rulemaking pending experience is as contrary to the fundamental ideas of American government in the one case as in the other.

Most of the argument against the bill proceeds from those who believe that administration should be a fourth department of government combining legislative, judicial, and executive authority and runs counter to ideas of government which have been at the foundation of our institutions from the time when following the Declaration of Independence our American States, which had had a bitter experience under the colonial regime of the royal governor and council as legislature, court, administrative authority, and executive in one, set up frames of government based upon a separation of powers.

Yours very truly,

(Signed) ROSCOE POUND.

I refer now to one sentence only in Dean Pound's letter, a single sentence in which is set forth practically the entire case for passage of this bill. He calls attention to the need for "a simple, expeditious, nontechnical review of administrative determinations which will insure"—

First. A real record of administrative action in determinations made in quasi-judicial proceedings.

Second. Upon that record a judicial review to insure that the administrative action is within the limits of the Constitution and the statutes.

Third. A record that must show that a full and fair opportunity was afforded to all interested parties to present their case and be heard upon the matter upon which the administrative determination is based.

There is the heart of this proposed legislation. A record of the proceedings leading up to administrative determinations, a record which must disclose that the action is within the Constitution and the statutes, a record which must show that the action was taken after notice and opportunity to interested parties to be heard. That is substantially all there is to the Logan-Walter bill. It is difficult for me to believe that there is a single Member of this body who is willing to be classed as opposed to the fundamental propositions which I have just laid down.

I have proceeded to the point of the designation of Dean Roscoe Pound in 1937 as chairman of the committee on administrative law of the American Bar Association. It will be worth while to note the other members of that committee: James R. Garfield, former Secretary of the Interior; Col. O. R. McGuire, who has already been mentioned as a joint author of Our Wonderland of Bureaucracy, who has been a member of the committtee since it was established in 1933, and at different times has served as its chairman; Walter F. Dodd, former professor at Yale Law School; Robert F. Maguire, former president of the Oregon State Bar Association; and Julius C. Smith, twice president of the North Carolina bar.

It was largely through the efforts of this very representative and capable committee that the original draft of a bill was completed to protect the rights of the citizen who becomes involved in a controversy with his Government before an administrative tribunal. The draft of the bill was submitted to all the judges of the circuit courts of appeal and to many other judges and lawyers for comment and suggestion. Letters were sent by the committee to teachers of administrative law and to others throughout the country who might have special knowledge of the subject. As an example, I have before me a copy of a letter bearing date of September 16, 1938, addressed to the then Attorney General, Homer Cummings. It reads:

AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION,
SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON ADMINISTRATIVE LAW,
September 16, 1938.

Hon. HOMER CUMMINGS,
The Attorney General of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. ATTORNEY GENERAL: This committee submitted with its 1938 report to the Cleveland convention of this association a definitive draft of bill. We realize that the draft is not perfect—but we are sincerely desirous of making it as nearly so as possible.

Having regard—and high admiration—for your capabilities as an administrator, I should like for you to give me entirely unofficially your comments and suggestions as to how we may improve the draft of bill as to insure, if at all possible, a greater measure of justice between the United States Government and the individual. We realize that there are here involved conflicting interests. While we are opposed to administrative absolutism, as set forth in the report, nevertheless we wish to avoid a state of administrative chaos.

It will be so much better, if it is at all possible, to secure substantial agreement with the terms of the draft before it is introduced in the Congress, and I do hope that as a member of the association you will see fit to have this draft examined by your experts and that you will advise me frankly of your views; also, whether I am to treat such views as confidential, or whether I may use them with certain members of the association.

Very respectfully yours,

O. R. MCGUIRE, Chairman.

Before the above letter was written, the committee held a joint meeting with the committee on administrative law of the Federal Bar Association, whose chairman was then John Dickinson, former Assistant Attorney General of the United States, who is a recognized authority on administrative law.

In that connection, Mr. President, and interrupting my statement, I wish to refer at this time to excerpts from an address delivered to the American Bar Association in its annual meeting at Philadelphia last week, by the same Mr. John Dickinson to whom I have just referred as being in 1938 chairman of the committee on administrative law of the Federal Bar Association. Mr. Dickinson, it will be remembered by us all, came into this administration as Assistant Secretary of Commerce. A little later he became Assistant Attorney General, and he had a most distinguished record in the Department of Justice. He is the author of one of the most authoritative volumes on administrative law, and all who have any knowledge of this important subject recognize that the words of John Dickinson are entitled to the very greatest attention. I will take this opportunity to read these remarks into the RECORD so that our colleagues who are now otherwise engaged, but will, of course, read the RECORD carefully before voting on the pending motion, will have the opportunity to have the benefit of Mr. Dickinson's views. This is a portion of the address which he delivered in Philadelphia last week:

The considerations which have been summarized as expressing the view that judicial review as available under present law is in certain respects too restricted are those which are responsible for the provisions of the so-called Logan-Walter bill, endorsed by this association, and now pending in Congress, insofar as those provisions deal with the question of review. All things considered, they would appear to justify the changes proposed by the bill and the action of the association in recommending it. It may well be that the bill, if enacted into law, would from time to time be found in need of amendment in matters of detail. Specific varieties of administrative action might be disclosed to which its provisions would not be properly applicable, or as to which its protection would not be needed. If this should prove to be the case, there is no reason to suppose that the necessary correctives would not follow either from a reasonable judicial construction of the act or, if necessary, in the form of amendments.

I will say for the benefit of any Senators who may have come to the floor in the last few minutes, since I started reading, that I am reading excerpts from an address delivered to the American Bar Association at Philadelphia last week by John Dickinson, who came into the present administration as Assistant Secretary of Commerce, and later had a most distinguished record as Assistant Attorney General, and who speaks with authority on the subject of administrative law, having served, as I said, as chairman of the committee on administrative law of the Federal Bar Association, and who is likewise the author of one of the most authoritative volumes on this important subject. Mr. Dickinson prcceeds:

In considering the desirability of the legislation, two illuminating facts stand out from the prolific debate and controversy which it has engendered. The first is that, leaving aside its possible inapplicability to special and exceptional situations, it would ensure the minimum requirements of review in a way in which they are not now ensured, and would supply those minimum requirements with uniformity in all the cases where they are needed. This would appear to be a desirable result. The second fact is that, in spite of the attempt to concentrate attention upon the alleged impropriety of applying uniform standards of review to special and exceptional situations, the attack upon the bill does not rest fundamentally upon this criticism of its provisions, but penetrates to far deeper considerations which go to the root of the whole theory of government, and an understanding of which is essential to any consideration of the problem of judicial review.

In the first place, a view is beginning to crystallize, largely among Government officials and those more immediately associated with them, to the effect that administrative action in the field of private conduct, and more particularly business and economic conduct, is not, as has hitherto been generally supposed, for the purpose of policing and regulating such conduct so as to make it conform to a standard of legislative requirements, but, on the contrary, is for the purpose of superimposing governmental management over, and in substitution for, private management.

On this view, the guiding consideration of administrative action is not to secure, through the flexibility incident to such action, more effective conformity by individuals to lines of conduct prescribed by the legislature, but is instead the far broader one of making the inividuals who are subject to the regulation do from time to time whatever the administrative body regards as conducive to the proper management of their affairs. Clearly, if such a view is taken, most of the thinking which has hitherto been applied to the scope of administrative action and the relation of that action to its statutory basis becomes irrelevant. A far broader field of discretion opens up before the administrative agency that would be permissible if its functions were regarded as confined within the four corners of particular legislative mandates, no matter how vaguely stated. Clearly, for example, if a body empowered to regulate rates conceives its mandate as not merely to establish rates which are fair as between the utility and its patrons, but rates which in its managerial judgment will accomplish some result that for the time being it regards as for the good of the industry, the type of considerations which it will then be entitled, and, indeed, required to apply include little or nothing that can properly be passed upon by a court whose function is to delimit spheres of competing interests in accordance with principles of justice and fair play between man and man.

Associated with this new conception of administrative power, and closely related to it, is a novel and interesting conception of the relation of the administrative agency to the statute from which it derives its authority. The hitherto accepted view upon which all the decisional law has been based is that a statute, no matter how broadly and vaguely expressed, does not merely carve out a field of action for the administrative agency and prescribe a direction or directions for its activity, but also sets an end limit to those activities beyond which they may not lawfully go. To adhere to the figure, the agency is circumscribed on all sides by a boundary of law, and the courts, in the exercise of their power of review, have the function of defining these boundaries and restraining the agency within them. The newer theory is a different one. To change the figure, it views the statute as an open-end instrument which brings the agency into existence, projects it in a certain direction, and then authorizes it to go as far in that direction as it pleases in its own unfettered discretion. Obviously, if this view is taken there is again little if any function left for judicial review. The only limitation upon the administrative authority is the supposed purpose of the statute, which is so broadly conceived as to lay no basis for judicial reasoning, and to convert all issues into issues of policy which are clearly more proper for decision by the administrative agency itself or by the legislature than by the courts.

So far these views have attained no wide acceptance, either in the profession or among the public generally, which hardly knows of their existence, but they are already widespread among governmental administrators themselves. Their adoption would render the discussion of judicial review simply irrelevant; but it would at the same time render irrelevant and obsolete, at least in the field of governmental action, most, if not all of what has hitherto been understood as law.

There is a final view which discounts efforts to broaden the availability and increase the effectiveness of judicial review of administrative determinations for another reason. This view, which finds some support among the bar and may well be described as defeatist in character, has been well expressed by Mr. John Foster Dulles in a widely circulated article, as follows:

"As to the right of review by the court, the lawyer should not be under great illusions. As a practical matter it is only in rare cases that court review serves any substantial purpose."[1]

Mr. Dulles goes on to speak discouragingly of the delays and expense of a review proceeding and of the significant fact that the individual who brings such a proceeding loses the good will of the administrative body with which he must continue to deal. He then quotes the following sentences from an address by Mr. Chester T. Lane, General Counsel of the Securities and Exchange Commission:

"Candor compels me to admit that the remedy of judicial review in most cases has no practical content. Business transactions cannot wait upon the exigencies of appeal. The overwhelming mass of administrative determinations are never reviewed by the courts. Time is of the essence. Even appellate procedure within the administrative by no means insures that the unfortunate results of action unwise or arbitrary will be cured."[2]

The fact stated by Mr. Dulles and Mr. Lane may be admitted in full without requiring the conclusion that court review does not serve a substantial purpose. It is, of course, quite true that relatively few administrative determinations can be, or will be, brought to the test of such review, but to draw from this fact the conclusion that review is therefore of no avail is precisely like saying that because relatively few disputes regarding contracts find their way into the courts, the right to enforce a contract in the courts is therefore unimportant. The point which such a view ignores is that it is the possibility of review which counts, rather than the question of whether or not any particular determination is taken into court for actual review. The possibility of review suspended over the administrative agency, like the possibility of bringing suit against a party to a contract, operates in actual experience as no other tool which social invention has discovered to restrain the tendency to arbitrary action by keeping vividly before the mind of the administrator the fact that he is supposed to conform to requirements which the courts have laid down in previously decided cases and to confine his activities within the sphere which such decisions have marked out for him. In other words, the effectiveness of review is not so much that it will be applied in the particular case as that it creates an administrative attitude which minimizes the necessity of its being applied.

The comments and considerations suggested in this paper are those which appear to be consistent, and the only ones which appear consistent, with the assumptions and presuppositions on which the body of our decided cases depends; and not merely the body of decided cases but the governmental practices and institutions to which we have been accustomed. It may be that those practices and institutions after continuing their development for a good many hundred years are now suddenly on the verge of being overturned almost without our being aware of the catastrophe; but if they are not, and if they are to continue their orderly development in the future as in the past, then judicial review of administrative determinations must, I am convinced, develop in the direction outlined.

That concludes the statement by Mr. John Dickinson. Of course, when he refers to "the direction outlined," he is referring to the curbs, limitations, and provisions with respect to administrative absolutism and denial of effective judicial review—the curbs contained in the pending Logan-Walter bill.

Before I digressed to read the remarks from John Dickinson I had just come to the point of saying that when the first administrative procedure bill was drafted, it was submitted by the committee—I am now referring to the special committee on administrative law of the American Bar Association—to the committee on administrative law of the Federal Bar Association, whose chairman then was the same John Dickinson whose statement I have just read. As I stated it was also submitted by the chairman of the committee to Mr. Homer Cummings, the then Attorney General. Having read the letter from the chairman of the committee to Mr. Homer Cummings, the then [1] Administrative Law, an address given on January 14, 1939, at Langdell Hall, Cambridge, under the joint auspices of the Bar Association of the City of Boston and Harvard Law School, by John Foster Dulles, p. 17.

[2] Dulles, p. 19.

Attorney General, I think I should read the reply. The reply is signed by the then Assistant Solicitor General, Mr. Golden W. Bell. The letter is addressed to the chairman of the special committee on administrative law of the American Bar Association. It is dated Washington, October 18, 1939.

Your letter of September 16, 1938, to the Attorney General relative to the proposed bill, entitled "A bill to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes", contained in the report which the special committee on administrative law of the American Bar Association made to the 1938 convention at Cleveland, Ohio, has been referred to me for attention.

Mr. President, I call particular attention to this correspondence with the Attorney General and his assistants back in the year 1938, when this measure was submitted to them, and their comments were asked, and some of them were received. I call attention to that fact because the only objection now urged to permitting the United States Senate to consider the bill, which has already so overwhelmingly passed the House, and has been before us for so long, is that the Attorney General has not yet completed an examination which he is making. I believe there are Members of this body who do not look altogether with favor upon the idea that the Congress of the United States should not act upon an important matter of this kind until some committee outside the Congress, not responsible to it or responsive to it in any way, has carried on its own investigations.

I think the Congress, through its standing and special committees, is well able to make whatever investigation is needed, certainly within the field covered by this particular legislation.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator is now discussing the point which has been suggested by many of those who are opposed to the Walter-Logan bill. They oppose it on the ground that it is an invasion of the executive branch of government by the judicial branch of government. I am sure the Senator has heard that argument made.

Mr. BURKE. Very often.

Mr. HATCH. What does the Senator think about the legislative branch of government being compelled to await advice and suggestions from the executive branch of government? Is any invasion involved in that suggestion?

Mr. BURKE. I think the point made by the Senator from New Mexico is exceptionally well taken, as is usually the case when he rises to make a point. Certainly, as was said in the course of a recent debate on this floor, here again is a matter which should be a two-way thoroughfare. I fully agree with the contention that the legislative branch of government should not encroach upon the field reserved to the executive branch, or, for that matter, the field reserved to the judicial branch. Certainly the reverse of that proposition should be true. The executive branch ought not to encroach upon the field reserved to the legislative branch. After all, the administrative agencies are arms of the Congress. They are vested with the authority which we give them. I am speaking particularly of the rule-making power. In a sense, we permit them to write legislation by implementing statutes which we pass.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. BURKE. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. Of course, under the Constitution there is a connection between the executive branch of the Government and the legislative branch, by which the Executive—that is, the President—transmits messages and makes recommendations to the Congress; yet, so far as I know, I have never before heard that the Congress must wait until some committee appointed by the Executive has had time to advise the Congress what the Congress should do.

Mr. BURKE. Again the point is well taken; and I reiterate that this matter has been before the Attorney General's Department in the proper way in which it could come before it. The proposals were submitted to the Department of Justice by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate when they came to consider this legislation; but even before that an outside agency which, of course, had no authority at all in matters of legislation, but, being composed of lawyers of the country, would have the same right as any other group, and more reason for it in their case, to study this question—went to the trouble also of submitting their conclusions and the first draft of a proposal which they hoped some Senator or Member of the other body would lay before Congress for its study; but before doing even that they submitted the proposal to the Attorney General and asked for his comment. That was more than 2 years ago.

I have already read the letter to the Attorney General, and was starting to read the answer sent to the chairman of that committee by the Assistant Solicitor General. I shall read this letter because it indicates that the Attorney General's Department at that time had given some study to the question. This letter is rather critical of some provisions which were in the original bill, and possibly of some which may be in the bill as it is today.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BURKE. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that the Senator has not concluded his remarks, and is willing to suspend now and conclude them tomorrow.

Mr. BURKE. That will be satisfactory.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am perfectly willing to stay here if the Senator wishes to finish tonight; but if he is indifferent about the matter I think probably we might suspend at this time.

Mr. BURKE. That is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. BARKLEY obtained the floor.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. I send to the desk a series of amendments to House bill 960 and ask that they be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendments will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILEY in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting the nominations of Bernard J. Flynn and August Klecka, both of Maryland, to be United States attorney and marshal, respectively, for the district of Maryland (reappointments), which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. HATCH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Charles Fahy, of New Mexico, to be Assistant Solicitor General of the United States, vice Golden W. Bell, resigned.

Mr. MILLER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Maurice M. Milligan, of Missouri, to be United States attorney for the western district of Missouri.

Mr. VAN NUYS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the following nominations:

Tobias E. Diamond, of Iowa, to be United States attorney for the northern district of Iowa, vice Edward G. Dunn, term expired; and Frederick Elliott Biermann, of Iowa, to be United States marshal for the northern district of Iowa, vice John B. Keefe, term expired.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

That concludes the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, September 24, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate, September 23 (legislative day of September 18), 1940

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 23, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou living and glorified Saviour, the cornerstone of God's great temple, as we go forth to meet the challenge of these turbulent times vouchsafe Thy presence unto us. We pray for the power of a faith that shall be in us, making a profound assurance that life is a venture with God. Clothe us with those spiritual values that reach highest, last longest, and make human life most memorable. In our hearts we pray that there may be no unforgiven sins, no cherished grudges, and no aching jealousies. Heavenly Father, many there are who are disturbed by doubt, others there are with broken lives walking the lonely road in fear and dread. Oh give to all questioning minds and tired hearts that peace and rest that come to those whose lives are hid with Christ in God. Become unto us all a fresh vision that will bring us to humility and penitence. Arm us with a high ethical religion, going deep into our convictions and spiritual lives, thus becoming an inspiration to the restless and distracted. Oh stand before the broken, aimless shuttles of our weak endeavors and weave the tangled threads into perfect patterns. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, September 19, 1940, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by, Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10361) entitled "An act to provide for increasing the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1379) entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress to the Mackinac Straits Bridge Authority to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, across the Straits of Mackinac at or near a point between St. Ignace, Mich., and the Lower Peninsula of Michigan."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3550) entitled "An act to make unlawful the transportation of convict-made goods in interstate and foreign commerce."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. Con. Res. 54. Concurrent resolution authorizing a change in the enrollment of the bill (S. 3550) to make unlawful the transportation of convict-made goods in interstate and foreign commerce.

The message also announced that the Senate agreed without amendment to a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H. Con. Res. 88. Concurrent resolution authorizing the printing of additional copies of Public Law No. 785, entitled "Transportation Act of 1940."

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 4088) entitled "An act to amend the Commodity Exchange Act, as amended, to extend its provisions to fats and oils, cottonseed, cottonseed meal, and peanuts," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. BULOW, Mr. HATCH, Mr. NORRIS, and Mr. CAPPER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 1450. An act to provide funds for cooperation with school district No. 13, Froid, Mont., for extension of public-school buildings to be available to Indian children.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House:

OFFICE OF THE CLERK, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., September 20, 1940.

The SPEAKER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Pursuant to the special orders agreed to on yesterday, the Clerk of the House received the following message from the Senate:

That the Senate had passed, without amendment, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 607) making additional appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941.

That the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, the bill (H. R. 10413) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the aforementioned bill, requests a conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and appoints Mr. HARRISON, Mr. KING, Mr. GEORGE, Mr. CAPPER, and Mr. TOWNSEND conferees on the part of the Senate.

Respectfully yours,

SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.
By H. NEWLIN MEGILL.

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT FOR THE FISCAL YEAR ENDING JUNE 30, 1941

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to authority granted on Thursday, September 19, 1940, the Chair did on Friday, September 20, 1940, sign the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 607) which previously had been examined and found truly enrolled by the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

EXCESS-PROFITS-TAX BILL

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to authority granted on Thursday, September 19, 1940, the Chair did on Friday, September 20, 1940, appoint as managers on the part of the House to attend the conference on H. R. 10413, the excess-profits-tax bill, the following Members of the House: Mr. DOUGHTON, Mr. CULLEN, Mr. MCCORMACK, Mr. COOPER, Mr. TREADWAY, Mr. CROWTHER, Mr. KNUTSON.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY] be granted permission to extend his remarks by inserting a speech made by Archbishop Spellman before the American Legion committee.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 10539) making supplemental appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 2966), which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a brief statement by the State administrator of W. P. A. in Kansas.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[Mr. GUYER of Kansas addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

PATRICK-VORYS DEBATE

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I know everybody in this House has been standing on tiptoes since I challenged Mr. Willkie to debate. You certainly wish to know how it is turning out. Well, I want to report that that challenge resulted in a debate between the gentleman from Ohio, JOHN VORYS, and me. We speak tonight at the Burlington Hotel here in Washington. We want everybody, Democrat and Republican alike, who has anything to say to send in topics they think ought to be discussed between now and November 6. Our discussions are bound to result in some all-round good.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. I yield.

Mr. HOUSTON. Did the gentleman set a dead line within which Mr. Willkie had to accept the challenge?

Mr. PATRICK. Yes; and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS] won by just a nose.

Mr. HOUSTON. By a hair?

Mr. PATRICK. Yes; by one nose. Won by one.

Mr. HOFFMAN. We may read it if we cannot get down there?

Mr. PATRICK. It will no doubt be reported in full in all the newspapers.

[Here the gavel fell.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the regular order of business on the Speaker's desk I may be allowed to proceed on Wednesday next for 30 minutes to discuss some of the fallacies of the New Deal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY]?

There was no objection.

THE CONGRESSIONAL RECORD

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I again rise to call attention to the Appendix of the RECORD. It seems to me we are justified in asking the various Committees on Printing of both Houses to do something to stop the abuse.

The most ridiculous example will be found on pages 5672 and 5673 of the Appendix of the RECORD, where two Members received permission to extend their remarks; both inserted the same editorial and both extensions appear on the same pages.

ADJOURNMENT OF CONGRESS

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES]?

There was no objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, there has been considerable discussion through the press and otherwise, to the effect that Congress expects to adjourn and go home the last of this week or the first of next. In view of world conditions, and considering the situation in our country, I just do not believe Members of Congress should adjourn and not expect to be in session again until next year. I know the Members want to go home. I am just as eager to get back to my district as any of you. I see no objection to a recess for a few weeks, but if we adjourn, Congress will not be in session again until January, unless the President sees fit to call us back for a special session.

In the last few weeks, Congress has spent millions and billions of dollars for defense purposes. We have provided for increases in the various branches of our armed forces. We have authorized an increase in our standing Army so that by January 1 we will have more than 1,000,000 men under arms. We have been asked to pass legislation without giving it the consideration to which it was entitled, because we were told these measures were so important and imminent that we did not have much time during which to fairly consider them. Mr. Speaker, I really believe, in view of the situation as it exists this afternoon, it is not the time for Congress to abdicate and walk out on the American people. There is plenty of work to be done. Furthermore, it will be a wholesome thing for Congress to keep its hand on the situation during these trying times.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. Yes; for a question.

Mr. HOFFMAN. What good do we accomplish if we stay here and follow every lead that comes up here from the administration?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I appreciate how the distinguished gentleman from Michigan feels about it, but I think the people of the country will feel better if the Congress stays on the job.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a prize-winning address entitled "Public Works," by Mrs. F. L. Renick, of Odessa, Mo.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. NELSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an address I made to a group of sawmill employees at Dee, Hood River County, Oreg.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table and at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDOWELL]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on farm income and to include tables from certain departments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by including a short statement made by M. W. Thatcher.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN]?

There was no objection.

[Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include a speech by Paul V. McNutt, Federal Security Administrator, at Cleveland, Ohio, on September 17, 1940.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SCHULTE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include an article appearing in the Los Angeles Examiner by George Rothwell Brown.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include a short editorial entitled "Bright Lights of Willkie's High Lights."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include a statement entitled "Principles and Purposes."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARENDS]?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary may be permitted to sit during the session of the House this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a statement appearing in the Detroit Jewish Chronicle.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an excerpt from the Detroit News headed "Turners launch campaign to train American youth."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial from the New York Times of this morning.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial from the Washington Times-Herald.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, the press shows that Washington is one of the few cities in which we have had a large increase in population during the past 10 years. Undoubtedly this defense program, or war program, I should have said, will bring down here another large group of people. I want to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SCHULTE], Are you going to keep this milk market closed so all these people coming in here have to pay tribute to Maryland or Virginia milk producers, or are you going to let us get a good grade of milk from outside, from Michigan, Pennsylvania, Indiana, and other places in the country? Let our farmers have a share in the market and lessen the price to the Washington consumer? Are you going to give them this whitewash out here to drink or are you going to give them some real milk and cream at a fair price? Why not end the "hold-up" of the milk drinker?

Mr. SCHULTE. I may say to the gentleman from Michigan that I am very much concerned about the situation myself. We have asked the aid of the Federal Trade Commission to help us to break down the most vicious wall that exists any place in the United States. I do hope that when we come back next year we may be able to do that.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Are you working a closed shop on the cows? [Laughter.] Can only Maryland and Virginia cows give milk fit for Washington citizens, or is the purpose to give dairymen of those States a monopoly of the milk market? The latter seems to be the case.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD in regard to the dedication of the Federal building at Indianapolis, Ind., on Saturday, and include a brief address by myself and one by the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, Mr. Purdum.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

GOVERNMENT SPENDING

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, we are going to bring in here another deficiency appropriation bill. It seems to me that every Member should be kept on the floor of the House during the consideration of this bill. When you look at the Treasury statement of the 18th you find that we have gone in the red $733,474,669 since the 1st of July, and have gone in the red over $25,000,000,000 since this administration came in, March 3, 1933. Now the Appropriations Committee is bringing in here a bill with a lot of things in it that are not worth a tinker's whoop, and we ought to keep them out. The only way we are going to do that, if you want to go back to your constituents and tell them you are for economy, is for you to vote out about half the things they have in this appropriation bill. It is time that you cut them out. If you do not, it will not be far in the future until this Nation breaks down financially. You are blaming all these expenditures now on war. It seems to me it is time that we get busy here and stop these ruthless, unnecessary expenditures. [Applause.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day, and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short article by ex-Senator Robert L. Owen.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I have two requests. First, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SABATH. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana has asked unanimous consent to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SABATH. If they are his own remarks, I do not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, my second request is to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein excerpts from the press.

Mr. SABATH. I object to that, Mr. Speaker.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, there are rumors that the House may adjourn this week or next week. I merely want to take this minute that has been allotted to me to say to the Members that if the emergency is as emergent as we are led to believe, it is the duty of every Member to remain in Washington and the duty of Congress to remain in session. No one is more anxious to get back to his district or to get back to his family than I am, but I believe that now is not the time to talk about adjournment. You recall that in June when adjournment was first discussed the President said, "Congress will do nothing but talk if they remain in session." I should like you and the country to look over the program the President has sent us since June and which we in the Congress have so expeditiously and carefully legislated. That program constitutes the backbone of this Nation's emergent national-defense efforts. Our national-defense system has not yet been totally perfected, and the emergency which existed in June is just as great today. I sincerely hope, no matter what our personal wishes may be, that we vote against adjournment and remain here on the job. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short article by my colleague, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JONES].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein two editorials from the Oregon Journal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one moment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, a third of a hundred years is a long, long time, but lacking two of it in years, "BILL" BANKHEAD and I were friends.

Since I first met him in 1909, long, long ago, as man measures time, but so short when one is confronted by an eternity of absence, we have been friends. So short a time it seems now, looking back and looking to the future, as to make almost incomprehensible to me, with my finite limitations and circumspection, the power and wisdom of an infinite God, as evidenced in the premises. Why he had to go, I do not undertake to know, or attempt to understand.

My friend, as I knew him, was an ardent and a pugnacious partisan—but, above all, just and fair. Yet, after all is said and done, I am reminded that so immaterial are our human disagreements; so trivial are they, when Death looks in at the door, and one of us is called.

Over the years in our friendly disagreements with regard to policies and partisan politics and programs, I know we gave each other credit for sincerity of purpose, and a desire to obtain the greatest good for the largest number; though each thought and believed the other mistaken with respect to the methods and means to be employed to obtain the ends sought so divergently.

It takes a "big man," in the language of the street, to recognize that intense partisanship for what one considers to be right is the only mark which compels recognition by a would-be worthy opponent. Such a man was WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD.

Men more able than I will pay tribute to his great and enduring service to his party, to his State, to his district, and to the Nation; and in all they may say I most sincerely and heartily concur. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD was bigger than any party, and because of what he accomplished, and by reason of his innate ability and sturdy strength of character, he will be included, by those who write history coldbloodedly, among the really small group of truly great men who have presided over this body as Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Hail and farewell, my friend. Here's my hand—with my heart in it. I know full well you are the last who would wish me to indulge in an effusive eulogy.

To have known you; to have enjoyed your confidence; to have indulged in your friendship over the years, is an intangible something the value of which is incommensurate and immeasurable, something to be treasured so long as I shall live and left to my children as a priceless heritage.

And, friend of mine, I shall remember you always as the fair fighter for what you believed to be right; as the just judge and impartial presiding officer who knew the precedents and followed the law; as the scholar, who seldom made any exhibition of your profound learning based on hours of study; and last, best, and most intimately of all, as a dreamer—as one who felt, as so well I know, that had fate and circumstance and environment not intruded, possibly a boyhood ambition might have been realized, who knows?—but always a a dreamer, for—

He whom a dream hath possessed knoweth no more of sorrow,
At death and the dropping of leaves and the fading of suns he smiles,
For a dream remembers no past and takes no thought of a morrow,
And strong in a sea of doom a dream sets the ultimate isles.
He whom a dream hath possessed treads the impalpable marches,
From the dust of the day's long road he leaps to a laughing star,
And the ruin of worlds that fall he views from eternal arches,
And rides God's battlefield in a flashing and golden car.

In the years to come I will find myself oft repeating, and over and over again, as I recall you and the years and the days and the place where you sleep.

Warm summer sun
Shine kindly here.
Warm southern wind
Blow softly here.
Green sod above
Lie light, lie light.
Good night, dear heart,
Good night, good night.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to place in the Appendix of the RECORD a letter from the Civil Service Commission on the question of whether employees of State soldiers' homes are subject to the Hatch Act or not.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD a story of the life of our late Speaker, as told by himself to Mr. William H. Hendrix, and published in the September number of a magazine a few days before his death?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

TRANSFER OF MILITARY AND NAVAL EQUIPMENT

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I call up the resolution (H. Res. 599) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 599

Resolved, That the President of the United States, if not incompatible with the public interest, is requested to inform the House of Representatives whether in the negotiations of the arrangement between himself and the Secretary of State, representing the Government of the United States, and the British Ambassador at Washington, representing His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom, for the acquisition by the United States of naval bases in the Western Hemisphere and the exchange therefor of certain vessels of the United States, said arrangement contemplated further delivery to Great Britain of additional naval and military equipment and material as would appear from the letter of the British Ambassador to the Secretary of State, dated September 2, 1940, wherein it is stated that certain islands in the Caribbean and in British Guiana will be leased to the United States by the British Government "in exchange for naval and military equipment and material which the United States Government will transfer to His Majesty's Government," and whether the reply of the Secretary of State to said letter of the British Ambassador that "the United States Government will immediately transfer to His Majesty's Government 50 United States naval destroyers" meant that additional naval and military equipment and material would follow.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the letter of the Secretary of State may be read.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I shall not object because the Secretary of State gives the information for which I asked in my resolution, but unless the information is sent to the Congress in the democratic way, the American way, before these measures are taken by the President, it creates a very bad impression with the country, and I have numerous requests that we be consulted before any such action is taken. Many persons ask me if the President is giving up even the semblance of doing things in the American way. Americans appreciate their form of government, they are intensely loyal, they love their country, they demand that America be kept free and safe.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the letter, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, September 19, 1940.

The Honorable SOL BLOOM,
Chairman, Committee on Foreign Affairs, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. BLOOM: I have received your letter of September 13, 1940, requesting a report on H. Res. 599, "Requesting information from the President of the United States concerning transfer of military and naval equipment to Great Britain." The resolution proposes that the President be requested to inform the House of Representatives whether the recent agreement for the acquisition by the United States of naval bases in the Western Hemisphere contemplated further delivery to Great Britain of additional naval and military equipment other than the 50 naval destroyers mentioned in my note of September 2.

The answer to the inquiry in the resolution is "No."

It is not believed, therefore, that the adoption of the resolution would serve any useful purpose.

Sincerely yours,

CORDELL HULL.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, after the reading of the Journal and the legislative business of the day and any previous special orders, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] may be granted permission to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

TRANSFER OF MILITARY AND NAVAL EQUIPMENT

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the House has just heard the letter from the Secretary of State answering the question in my resolution as to whether more equipment or more patrol boats would be transferred to Great Britain in exchange for bases in certain islands. Mr. Speaker, I maintain, as do thousands of others, including England herself, that the reason Great Britain has made such an amazing stand against Nazi invasion, or against Hitler, is because her civilian population and her army and navy were informed by Winston Churchill as to what they might expect. Mr. Speaker, I maintain that the people of the United States and the Congress in particular, should be informed as to what the President plans to do which may involve us in future wars and, certainly, what he plans to do for the protection of our country. At Fort Devens, an army post in my district, I saw thousands of persons on Sunday afternoon, and talked with many of them, and there was not a person there who did not think we should be kept completely informed, and that in order to safeguard the United States and watch our national-defense program and to make our Nation strong we should remain in continuous session.

Mr. Speaker, on May 10, 1940, at the beginning of the German drive, I introduced House Concurrent Resolution 63, calling upon Congress to remain in continuous session in order to be in readiness to meet any eventuality that may arise that would require the exercise of its authority as representatives of the people.

Mr. Speaker, the international situation today is far more grave than when I introduced this resolution. I maintain the need for Members of Congress to stay on the job is more vital now than then. Following the introduction of my resolution, many editorials were written of the importance of keeping Congress in session, and hundreds of letters have been received from persons who are fearful of the Nation's safety if we do not remain at our work and do everything in our power to keep America out of the terrible conflict. The people at home will ask many embarrassing questions of those who vote to adjourn. The country demands we remain in session. I am just as anxious to return to my especially fine district, to be among my splendid constituents as anyone here, but we have a solemn obligation to perform. We have the greatest Nation in the world. In order to keep it great we must be prepared.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include quotations from the press.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT OF CONGRESS

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, rumors are current that Congress is going to adjourn in the very near future. It seems to me this would be most unfortunate. It is true that much of our national-defense legislation has been enacted into law and that the remainder is well on the way, but it is also true that the crisis which has kept Congress in session during the summer is as real today as ever.

Personally, I would like to return to my own congressional district, but I feel it my duty to urge and insist that we remain on the job. The actual emergency is little clearer today than it was 6 months ago. Our problem will take shape when present conditions change or crystallize in Europe. The changed conditions should require the united study and cooperation of the Executive and Congress.

The legislative branch of our Government should remain in continuous session. It is and should be a stabilizing influence in our international affairs. Let us not adjourn. [Applause.]

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA LEGISLATION

The SPEAKER. This is District of Columbia day. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH] is recognized.

AMENDMENT TO UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION ACT

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I call up the bill (H. R. 10322), to amend further the District of Columbia Unemployment Compensation Act, and I ask unanimous consent that the same be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the District of Columbia Unemployment Compensation Act, approved August 28, 1935, as amended, be, and is hereby, further amended, as follows:

Substitute the following paragraph (4) for the present paragraph (4) of section 1 (b):

"(4) service performed in the employ of the United States Government or of an instrumentality of the United States which is (A) wholly owned by the United States or (B) exempt from the tax imposed by section 1600 of the Internal Revenue Code of the United States by virtue of any other provision of law: Provided, That in the event that the Congress of the United States, on or before the date of the enactment of this act, has permitted, or in the event that the Congress of the United States shall permit States to require any instrumentalities of the United States (except such as are (A) wholly owned by the United States, or (B) exempt from the tax imposed by section 1600 of the Internal Revenue Code by virtue of any other provision of law), to make contributions to an unemployment fund under a State unemployment compensation law, then, to the extent so permitted by Congress, and from and after the date as of which such permission becomes effective, or January 1, 1940, whichever is the later, all of the provisions of this act shall be applicable to such instrumentalities in the same manner, to the same extent, and on the same terms as to all other employees, individuals, and services: Provided further, That if the District of Columbia should not be certified by the Social Security Board under section 1603 of the Internal Revenue Code for any year, the payments required of any instrumentality of the United States or its employees with respect to such year shall be refunded by the District Unemployment Compensation Board in accordance with the provisions of section 4 (f) of this act."

SEC. 2. This act shall be effective as of January 1, 1940: Provided, however, That any employer required to make retroactive payment of any contributions shall be given 30 days from the enactment of this act within which to make such retroactive payments without incurring any penalty for the late payment of such contributions and all interest charges shall commence 1 month from the date of the enactment of this act.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for recognition.

Mr. Speaker, this measure proposes to correct a condition that exists in the District of Columbia with respect to national banks. The national banks find themselves in the position of being forced to pay into the Federal Treasury the 3-percent tax just the same as other employers in the District of Columbia and throughout the Nation, but the employees of those national banks in the District of Columbia receive no benefits. The proposed amendment would extend to the employees of the national banks doing business in the District of Columbia the protection of unemployment compensation which at present is denied them, although the tax is actually being paid by them.

This measure has the approval of the District Unemployment Compensation Board, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and has been favorably reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with approval by all members, both Republican and Democratic.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

VETERANS' HOSPITAL FACILITY, MEMPHIS, TENN.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 9989) authorizing the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to transfer certain land to the city of Memphis, Tenn., for street-widening purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain what the bill provides?

Mr. LANHAM. This bill, introduced by the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS], provides that the Federal Government will grant an easement for street-widening purposes on a small strip of land in Memphis, Tenn., adjoining the veterans' hospital facility. It involves no expense whatever to the Government. The improvement is to be made entirely at the expense of the city of Memphis.

Colonel Ijams, of the Veterans' Administration, appeared before the committee and recommended the passage of the measure and said that it would in no way interfere with the operation of the veterans' facility, but would very greatly facilitate traffic conditions in that section.

Mr. MICHENER. The report is a unanimous report from the gentleman's committee?

Mr. LANHAM. It is a unanimous report.

Mr. MICHENER. And the gentleman understands that the minority members understand the gentleman is calling the matter up today?

Mr. LANHAM. They may not understand that I am calling it up today, but the committee authorized placing it on the Consent Calendar, and inasmuch as it is uncertain when that calendar will be called, I am asking for its consideration now.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation of objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is authorized and directed to transfer by quitclaim deed to the city of Memphis, Tenn., for street-widening purposes, a strip of land along the western boundary of the Veterans' Administration facility in such city, described as follows:

Part of the homestead lot and the north part of lot 50 of the Barnett Graham subdivision, beginning at the point in the south property line of Lamar Avenue, ten feet east of the east property line of Dudley Street, running thence south and parallel to the proposed new center line of Dudley Street, as widened, a distance of six hundred and twenty-two and one-tenth feet; thence continuing southwardly a distance of one hundred and fifty-one and one-tenth feet to a point, which said point is seven and two-tenths feet east of the old east property line of Dudley Street; thence west a distance of seven and two-tenths feet to a point in the old east property line of Dudley Street; thence north with the old east property line of Dudley Street, a distance of seven hundred and seventy-three and one-tenth feet to a point in the south property line of Lamar Avenue; thence east with the south property line of Lamar Avenue a distance of ten feet to the point of beginning, containing an area of approximately eight thousand three hundred and fifty-three square feet, and being all of that property lying within the described limits twenty-eight and five-tenths feet east of the new centerline of Dudley Street.

SEC. 2. Such grant shall be conditioned upon the agreement by the city of Memphis to set back and restore as nearly as possible to their original condition the fence and gate bordering such land, at no expense to the United States. If such land shall ever cease to be used for street purposes, title thereto shall revert to the United States.

With the following Committee amendments:

Page 1, line 4, strike out "transfer by quitclaim deed" and insert "grant and easement";

"SEC. 2. Such grant shall be conditioned upon the approval by the proper authorities of the city of Memphis of an agreement to (a) construct a concrete wall with stone coping along the facility limits on Dudley Street in accordance with specifications to be furnished by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs so as to provide a wall identical with the one now existing along the Lamar Boulevard, (b) move the existing chain link fence and gates, and place the fence on top of the wall, (c) move and replant such trees and shrubs as have to be removed from their present locations, replace such trees as will not stand moving and replace any such trees and shrubs that do not survive, and (d) restore all areas within the reservation affected by this work as nearly as possible to their original condition including any necessary sodding; all without expense to the United States. The easement authorized by this act shall contain the express reservation that should the land cease to be used for street-widening purposes then all right, title, and interest therein shall immediately revert to and revest in the United States."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which is simply a correcting amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LANHAM: Amend the title by striking out the word "transfer" in the first line and insert in lieu thereof "grant an easement in."

Page 1, line 6, after the word "proposes", and the comma, insert the word "in."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to grant an easement in certain land to the city of Memphis, Tenn., for street-widening purposes."

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER NEAR MEMPHIS, TENN.

Mr. KELLY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 3929) to extend the time for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Memphis, Tenn.

The Clerk read the conference report.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3929) entitled "An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Memphis, Tenn.," having met, after full and free conference, having agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment and the House agree thereto.

That both Houses agree to the bill in the form as originally passed by the Senate.

EDWARD A. KELLY,
PEHR G. HOLMES,
Managers on the part of the House.

MORRIS SHEPPARD,
CHAS. L. MCNARY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3929) entitled "An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Memphis, Tenn.," submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

The bill, as it passed the Senate, simply provided in regular form for an extension of the times for the commencing and completing of the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Memphis, Tenn. The House amended the bill by adding a new section which amended the original authorization act for the construction of the bridge to specifically provide for the eventual operation and maintenance of the bridge free of tolls.

The conference committee agreed that the inclusion of this new provision was unnecessary in this instance and recommend that the bill as passed by the Senate be now agreed to by both Houses.

EDWARD A. KELLY,
PEHR G. HOLMES,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. KELLY. Mr. Speaker, this authorizes an extension of time on the original authorization act of 1939. It is granting an extension of time, with the consent of Congress, to the bridge authority of those States.

Mr. MICHENER. Does the conference report abide by the House decision or the Senate decision?

Mr. KELLY. By the Senate decision.

Mr. MICHENER. And the members of the House committee are agreeable?

Mr. KELLY. The members of the conferees of the House are agreeable.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

FIRST SUPPLEMENTAL CIVIL FUNCTIONS APPROPRIATION BILL, 1941

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10539) making supplemental appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes; and, pending that, I ask unanimous consent that general debate proceed for 2½ hours.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 10539, the first supplemental civil functions appropriation bill, 1941; and, pending that, asks unanimous consent that general debate may proceed for 2½ hours. Is there objection?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think the gentleman should ask for more time.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Does the gentleman have a lot of requests for time? I do not have many requests for time.

Mr. TABER. I have a large number of requests. We shall do well to keep within an hour and a half.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I modify my request and ask unanimous consent that debate be limited to 3 hours, the time to be equally divided.

I may couple with this request the statement that I do not think I will use all my time, so that nobody will be under any misapprehension.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is it the purpose to complete this bill today?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The bill, of course, cannot be completed today if anyone raises a point of order. There are some items in the bill that would require a rule to make them in order. I spoke to the gentleman from New York, and it was my understanding that he would have no objection to considering a rule which the Rules Committee might report out, without requiring the rule to lay over for 24 hours.

Mr. MICHENER. The Rules Committee has called a meeting for 1 o'clock. Assuming that the Rules Committee should report out a rule with reference to points of order on the bill, would it be the purpose then to have debate on the rule today?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. If we can get unanimous consent for that purpose, yes; but I would not attempt to do it if we could not.

Mr. MICHENER. It would not require unanimous consent; it could be done by two-thirds vote.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I would not ask for that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 10539, the first supplemental civil functions appropriation bill, 1941, with Mr. BLAND in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the bill and the report are available. I do not care to take a lot of the time of the committee.

The total amount of direct appropriations in the bill is $207,475,727.02. The amount of the contract authorizations is $60,258,001. The bill is $4,394,144.93 less than the Budget estimates of direct appropriations and $5,050,000 less than the requests for contract authorizations.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. What is the total of the bill?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I just got through stating that. The total amount of the bill, direct appropriations, is $207,475,727.02.

Mr. REED of New York. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. This is one of the smaller bills that comes along in the concluding days of a session.

You will find set out on pages 2 and 3 of the report a very clear picture of what is involved in the bill.

Of the total amount carried in the bill, the sum of $153,855,660 is in items for civil agencies directly related to the national-defense program. They are national-defense items, but not directly appropriated to the Army and the Navy or the Marine Corps. The amount of $40,232,100 is due to new laws and $12,791,140.07 is due to changed conditions. There are several matters in the bill that might be mentioned briefly. I do not want to take a lot of time unless some member of the committee is especially interested in a particular item.

We had a Budget estimate of $500,000 for the Civil Service Commission for the enforcement of the Hatch Act. At the time the Civil Service Commission appeared before the committee they had only six complaints worthy of consideration. No one, of course, could tell what the future would bring forth, but there seemed to be no reason at this time for appropriating half a million dollars to set up a new division of 155 new employees. So we gave them $100,000, which the committee felt would be amply sufficient to take them through until Congress should meet in January, or before that time, possibly.

Some change was made in the appropriation for the Civilian Conservation Corps, not in the size of the corps or the amount of money appropriated for its maintenance, but some change in the division or allocation of funds which the director of the corps stated was necessary in order to permit them to operate on the funds which Congress has already appropriated. This matter is fully set out and explained on pages 5 and 6 of the report.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. The suggestion has been made, in view of the heavy expenses being incurred by the Government for national defense and of the fact that perhaps some of these men who are drawn in the draft will be assigned to nonmilitary operations, that possibly the Civilian Conservation Corps should not be continued in its present form, but that certain of the operations they carry on might be continued by those drawn in the draft who are not available for military service either because they are conscientious objectors or otherwise. Perhaps here is a chance to save some money for the Treasury. Has that been brought before the committee?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Our committee did not consider anything of that kind. I cannot conceive of such a suggestion receiving serious consideration. The functions of the Civilian Conservation Corps was primarily to take care of the unemployed youth coming from needy families and to give them employment in useful conservation projects. The purpose of the Conscription Act is to take men and train them to be soldiers.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Under the compulsory selective-training service bill that we passed some of those drawn will not be required to have military training and service on the ground that they have conscientious objections.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I may say there are many places in the Army where men can perform military duty and service that is not combatant in its nature. As I understand it, that is where the conscientious objectors will be placed, those who have conscientious objections to combatant military service. I cannot conceive of mixing up the functions of the Civilian Conservation Corps and the conscriptees, because one is for the purpose of affording employment and the other is to train an army to be called upon in an emergency as a reserve to supplement and add to our Regular Army.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. The presence of these men in the C. C. C. will not exempt them from conscription?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Not at all. Of course, the physical and mental training that they get in the C. C. C. makes them splendidly equipped to answer military duty if they are called upon to do so.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. An appropriation is carried in this bill which I think will meet with a good deal of interest. There is the sum of $30,000,000 direct appropriation and $50,000,000 contractual authorizations for development, construction, improvement, and repair of airports and other landing areas. With the large expansion of air forces in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard, to say nothing of the advance of civil aviation, it becomes increasingly evident that we do not have airport facilities in this country sufficient to take care of the situation. There are only 38 civil landing fields in America where you can land every type of Army or Navy planes. So Congress is making provision to start a program here that will provide for the development of local civil airports.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. The title to those airports to remain with the community?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It will remain with the community. The authorization provides that no land shall be purchased nor buildings erected except where the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy certifies that it is absolutely necessary for defense purposes.

That is to meet this situation: There might be an area far removed from a community or a city where the Army or Navy would want an emergency landing field and they would have to go there, buy the land and build it, but ordinarily they will go into a community, take the civil airport and build the needed facilities, such as runways, and so forth.

Mr. GIFFORD. The city profits by that full amount. The Government gets nothing?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The Government gets a place to set down its planes, which is very important.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Do I understand that an interdepartmental committee, from the Army, Navy, and Civil Aeronautics Authority, will administer this money?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. They will recommend the selections.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Will this expansion take care of the training of the civilian pilots and the military needs, or does the gentleman know?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. These are civil airports, and most of the civilian pilot training is done in civil airports, so it will make those fields available for that purpose.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. In many places the airports are not large enough to house high-speed military planes; at the same time they could be made available for pilot training which ordinarily ought not to go on where there are a lot of military or commercial operations. Was there any discussion about taking care of such needs?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The purpose is to expand the civil airport facilities. Most of the civilian training is done at civil airports, not at Army or Navy airports. So it makes those fields available for civilian aviation training.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. As I understand, the cost of improving these airports is borne entirely by the Federal Government?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. There is no set rule in the law about that. The Department stated where they could get help from a community, they would expect the community to furnish the land and whatever help the community could give besides that.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Suppose the Army desires to develop a place where we already have a civil airport to be used by the Government, then what is the procedure?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The Government will do that.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. May I ask another question? I have not had an opportunity to study the hearings, but would the gentleman indicate to me whether the development of any airports is contemplated in the western territory?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. There is an extensive program, as the gentleman will find in the hearings, all over continental United States for the development of civil airports to make them available.

Mr. O'CONNOR. In the Middle West and far West?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. I am very much interested in what the gentleman states, because a delegation headed by the mayor of my city, St. Louis, will come here tomorrow to discuss this very question.

They have enlarged the National Guard aviation branch and they have also enlarged the Naval Reserve aviation branch in St. Louis. St. Louis gave the Naval Reserves 14 acres of ground adjoining the airport a few weeks ago. A private plant is going to be greatly enlarged, adjoining the airport. Will this money be allocated by the Civil Aeronautics Authority?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It will not be allocated, it will be used on projects which have been selected by an interdepartmental committee from the Army, the Navy, and the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

Mr. COCHRAN. The three of them will agree?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is right.

Mr. COCHRAN. The Works Progress Administration will not enter into this at all?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It has nothing to do with this program.

Mr. COCHRAN. It is not going to be done by W. P. A. labor?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It may be, but not necessarily.

Mr. COCHRAN. How about the Public Works Agency? Is that going to enter into it at all?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It may, but not necessarily.

Mr. COCHRAN. But they have the power to bring them in if they can use their facilities?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is right.

Mr. COCHRAN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. I wanted to pursue that thought because I want the gentleman's help a little later. A great many localities are after this "gravy", and that is what it is, of course. Having in mind certain properties now already owned by the Government, they seem unable to get the Government even to consider them. This is a great opportunity for landing fields located in places where they should not be placed, perhaps, for defensive purposes, to come in on that program. I hope the gentleman will watch that situation; and I know he will. If I may give him some information on that point, I shall be glad to help him.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I shall be glad to have that information.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I believe the gentleman has made it clear to all of us that this program is in addition to the work which has been carried on throughout the past few years under the Work Projects Administration, under which the local communities, in cooperation with the Federal Government, have built and improved airports. Is it not a fact that this item is specifically asked for at this time due to the real need, the pressing need, for airports that will fit into the national-defense picture of this country? Is it not further the fact that there should be no so-called "gravy" but that we should keep a close check, and certainly ask the departments of Government to go forward with the one end in view of strengthening our airport system for national defense?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I think that is right. May I say that, speaking of it as "gravy", Congress has approved a program of tremendous airplane expansion in the armed services—the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps—reaching up to 35,000 planes in the air. Even with the limited number of planes we have today, if any emergency should happen which would require a mobilization of the General Headquarters air force on the Atlantic seaboard, there would be no place to set those planes down, using all the civil airports we now have available.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Referring to this "gravy" business, there is no such thing as "gravy" in the national-defense program about which we are speaking.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not feel that there is, I believe that it is a very pressing necessity.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I call the gentleman's attention to this matter, and I expect to try to enlist the gentleman's services later. We have very fine airports at Livingston, Billings, Great Falls, Lewistown, and other cities in Montana, and Sheridan in Wyoming, where extensive use is made of airplanes crossing that long stretch of country from the Middle West to the coast. I hope that if the gentleman has anything to say about the location of these various Government ports he will bear in mind the locations of which I am speaking. If war should occur either from Europe or Asia, there would be a tremendous movement of planes across the region I mention and there would be dire need of Government airports at these points.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I shall be very glad to bear that in mind, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Is it not true that many of the smaller airports in the United States today have only 2,500- or 3,000-foot runways?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is right.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. The large, modern bombers we are constructing take at least 5,000-foot runways in order to make a safe landing or take-off.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman is quite correct.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. I believe we all recognize that there would be no justification for the expenditure of money to establish airports throughout the country at this particular time——

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. May I correct the gentleman? It is not to establish airports but to enlarge and expand existing airports.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; to enlarge or expand existing airports, unless it was a matter of national defense. Are there any limitations or requirements in the bill as to the regulation, the lighting, and the providing of a field so that it may be used as a field for national defense?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes; funds are also carried for that part of the facilities.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. I have two questions I wish to ask the gentleman. The gentleman used the words "enlarging and expanding existing fields." Do I correctly understand that this money is to be confined to a present site, where there is presently a small field that cannot be enlarged? Is it possible in connection with this fund to abandon such a field and choose a new site and build an entirely new field?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I think there would be that authority, but the primary purpose of it was to enlarge or expand existing airports where the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy certify that a field at a certain spot is necessary for national defense. I believe you might buy the land and establish an airport there.

Mr. PACE. The second question is, I should like to differentiate this fund, if there is any difference, from the $25,000,000 fund that was carried in the appropriation bill passed the early part of this year. In that bill W. P. A. funds were to be used where the Army and the Navy certify that a defense feature was involved in the W. P. A. project. Some of this $25,000,000 has been used for airports. Is this money going to supplement that fund, or is that fund going to join this one, or are they going to continue as two separate funds?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I understand the $25,000,000 has been allocated.

Mr. PACE. It has been exhausted?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It has been exhausted. It has possibly not all been spent, but all of it has been allocated. The $25,000,000 fund, as the gentleman knows, was administered through the W. P. A., after having been certified by the Army and the Navy. This fund does not have any connection whatsoever with the W. P. A., although there is nothing to prevent them from using relief labor on a project where it is possible to do so, but it is not tied up to the relief program in any way.

Mr. RANDOLPH. If the gentleman will yield for a further observation, I do feel that under the Work Projects Administration priority should continue to be given to the construction of airports because we do know that eventually all of these airports, even the ones in the smaller communities, will have a definite place in our aviation development and will fit into the national-defense picture.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I feel sure that is the case.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I am asking this question for information. Do I understand that if the Secretary of Commerce determines that an improvement or addition to an airport is necessary for national defense and for the training of air pilots, including areas essential for safe approaches and so forth, he will recommend improvement of those airports without any requirement of contributions from the community?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. He may do so, but it is not just the Secretary of Commerce. It is an interdepartmental committee composed of representatives of the Department of Commerce, the Army, the Navy, and the Civil Aeronautics Administrator.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I am glad to have that information, and if that committee makes the determination as I have indicated, it will not call for contribution from the community, but the committee will recommend the allotment of the money necessary to do the work.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It may construct the whole program, or it may negotiate for such assistance as the community may be able to give.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I thank the gentleman very much, and one further question, if the gentleman will pardon me. If the airport has been recognized as being of importance in the national-defense program and an allotment of funds has been made to it under a W. P. A. program, that fact does not in any way prejudice that airport from receiving additional funds under this program if it is determined that it is proper that it should receive them?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is my understanding of it, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. JOHNS. Is there any provision in this appropriation here for markets for air fields?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes; there is a fund carried in the bill for lighting and for other facilities that go with airports.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 more minutes.

The sum of $2,091,000 is carried for corresponding facilities for airports.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. PLUMLEY. I would like to submit this interrogation with respect to the fields in New England, because I am going to be asked concerning them, as I have already been asked with respect to this proposed legislation. Are these extensions of fields going to be allocated on the basis of political strategy or on military necessity and strategy? [Laughter.] Are those fields heretofore somewhat developed to expect nothing or may they expect something? I mean—you know what I mean [laughter], I will leave that to the gentleman.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I may say to the gentleman, without getting into the academic question of the fine, clear-cut distinction between what might be considered a political necessity and a military necessity, certainly we would expect that these funds would be used entirely for defense purposes, and I have no doubt but what that will be the case.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Seriously, and to bring it right down to my own State, we have the Burlington Airport, 20 miles from the Canadian border, and we have the Barre Montpelier Airport, 65 miles from the Canadian border, and we have others which I shall not undertake to enumerate, such as the Swanton Airport, and they are concerned to know whether under this large appropriation any consideration will be shown with respect to their necessities for expansion.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I feel sure that very grave consideration will be given to them, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. HORTON. The gentleman has indicated that the W. P. A. will not necessarily do the construction work. Does that also mean that a private construction company would have an opportunity to bid and get a contract?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Exactly so; we did not want to tie their hands with the W. P. A. program, because there might be localities where W. P. A. would not be available.

Mr. HORTON. Do I understand that this program has very largely been completed at the present time or is it in process of being completed?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. None of this program has been completed.

Mr. HORTON. So it is all wide open.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. On the question of the Coast Guard, the gentleman will recall that I appeared before the committee in support of the items for Curtis Bay. I am very pleased to find that the committee has recommended the major part of the program, especially the floating drydock, building quarters for personnel, and other items listed in the hearings, but I note that the major reduction in the Budget estimate as found in the bill is $812,000, the item for shipbuilding ways at Curtis Bay.

I hope the gentleman will find it possible to make a statement that that item is temporarily laid aside.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The committee felt that very large sums are being expended all over the United States in the expansion of shipways and that perhaps it would not be necessary at the present time to go forward with these shipways at Curtis Bay, although the committee was very much impressed with the fine job which the Coast Guard had done at Curtis Bay. They have done a splendid job and have a wonderful plant up there. As you may know, some of us went to see it.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Will the gentleman explain what is contemplated under the National Youth item, the sum of $30,000,000?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It is additional funds for the National Youth Administration, for work projects, where the youth can be put to work at skilled trades that may be useful to the defense program.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Is there any chance that this may set up a competitive system to our Office of Education?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No. I will say that we had the Director of the Office of Education, Dr. Studebaker, and Mr. Aubrey Williams both before the committee at the same time, and I think we have ironed out all of those difficulties and that there is now absolutely no conflict between the functions of the two agencies.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. And there will be no overlapping whatever?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. They have assured us there will be no overlapping whatever. I would be glad to have the gentleman refer to the hearings on that point.

Mr. ANGELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. ANGELL. In my district in Portland, Oreg., there is an airport partly finished. Under this bill, if it is found necessary in the interest of further development for military purposes, will it be possible to get an additional allotment from this fund?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Undoubtedly it will have proper consideration.

Mr. Chairman, I now reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM].

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, on August 27 I made a statement to the press. I desire to make the same statement now to this Committee. The Permanent Canadian-American Joint Board of Defense, recently decreed by President Roosevelt, is an alliance, and under the Constitution such an alliance must be submitted to the Senate in the form of a treaty for ratification.

The negotiations in relation to this proposal have been secret. Secret negotiations of this character are wholly abhorrent in a republic and wholly opposed to democratic processes.

It is said that the proposal is a defensive alliance. As Canada is not now in a position to defend the United States, this means, in substance, that we are to defend Canada; and as Canada is, as a British Dominion, now engaged in the European war, this obviously exposes us, to all intents and purposes, to all the chances of the present armed conflict as far as Great Britain's enemies may think it expedient to involve us.

This commitment, therefore, plainly nullifies the power of the Congress to declare war and is a flagrant circumvention of the Constitution in this respect.

If this commitment is not submitted to the Senate in the form of a treaty for ratification and stands unchallenged, then President Roosevelt has as much dictatorial power in the United States in relation to peace and war as Hitler and Mussolini have in Europe.

The immediate and imperative business of the people of the United States is not to put down dictatorship in Europe or Asia but to put down dictatorship here and now with a heavy hand.

This is not the first time that President Roosevelt has secretly negotiated an alliance with a foreign power.

A few days ago Winston Churchill, speaking in Parliament in relation to the proposed cooperation between the United States and Great Britain, stated:

> The principles of association of interests for common purposes between Great Britain and the United States had developed even before the war in the various agreements reached about certain small islands in the Pacific Ocean which have become important as air fueling points. In all this line of thought we found ourselves in very close harmony.

Mr. Churchill had reference to a joint agreement between the United States and Great Britain, secretly negotiated in 1938 and relating to joint control over strategically located islands in the Pacific Ocean. This agreement was never submitted to the Senate in the form of a treaty for ratification. Yet it committed the United States to joint action with Great Britain in the Pacific, just as the recent agreement in relation to Canada commits the United States to joint action with Canada, a British Dominion and a belligerent in the present war, in the Western Hemisphere.

If these alliances are allowed to stand without being submitted to the Senate for ratification by the representatives of the people, as provided by the Constitution, the lives, fortunes, and future of the American people are committed to war by one man, President Roosevelt, and the United States is under the heel of a brazen dictator. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY].

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, I am going to address my remarks to a particular item in this bill.

Among the many millions of dollars that are here involved there is a small item of $20,000 for the Bureau of Mines. It is an item supplementing appropriations previously made to the Bureau of Mines for the purpose of further carrying on experimental work in a metal that is quite new to American industry. In 1917 it was selling for $3.50 per pound, and there was no domestic production. If the experimental work now going on at Washington State College proves that this new metal can be produced upon a commercial scale, it would almost revolutionize the metals industry, because it takes the place of aluminum. It alloys with aluminum and then supplements it. It is a superior metal to aluminum. This metal is known as metallic magnesium, and it is produced from magnesite ore.

We now have in the metals industry a metallic magnesium made by the Dow Chemical Co. from salt brine, up in the lake country, around Lake Michigan, and they are expanding that production by installing a $25,000,000 plant down in Texas. However, the metal that is produced from salt brine is produced under a patented process, and is a metal that of necessity has to sell for a sum so high that it is not in the competitive field with aluminum.

Aluminum is a monopolistic production metal. I am sure no one would attempt to gainsay that. The average Army or Navy plane requires 10,000 pounds, or 5 tons, of aluminum in its construction. If we can find any other metal that will serve the same purpose or that will supplement aluminum and that can be produced cheaper, naturally it will result in a tremendous saving to the Government.

Likewise, if this experiment, that we know has been carried to complete success in the laboratory, can be carried to success in the commercial field through pilot-plant production, then we can produce a new metal, new to American industry at least, to sell at about half the cost of aluminum. It will sell at about 10 cents a pound, whereas aluminum sells for 18 or 20 cents a pound.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. I gladly yield to my able and distinguished colleague, who is always present on the House floor and ever alert to the interests of our State of Washington.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Does not the gentleman, who has performed such a signal and magnificent service for Grand Coulee in promoting its logical development and expansion, believe that every aid and encouragement be accorded by our Federal Government to the development of magnesium as a formidable factor in national defense? Is not magnesium a mineral of tremendous potentialities in connection with airplanes and related military and naval equipment?

Mr. LEAVY. Emphatically yes. I thank my eloquent colleague for his contribution.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. I yield.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Is the metallic magnesium made from magnesite, which you propose to do at the Pullman plant, equal to the metallic magnesium made from salt or magnesium chloride?

Mr. LEAVY. It is not only equal generally, but it is superior to it. The metal made from the magnesite ore is 99.9 plus pure.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. It seems to me the gentleman is making a statement of tremendous importance. I would like to compliment him upon the very important work he has been doing in this field. I would like to ask him whether he can tell us anything about the situation with regard to patents and patented processes in the preparation of magnesium for commercial and practical use today, and whether this effort that he is making has anything to do with the situation that pertains with regard to those patents?

Mr. LEAVY. Certainly the effort I am making ties in rather closely, I think, with the patents in the metals field. I do not know the number of patents and the variety of patents and their purpose held by the Aluminum Co. I do not know how extensive they are. The Dow Chemical Co. have their patents, and they use their processes exclusively. The Germans in 1938 developed a method of producing metallic magnesium from magnesite ore, and they kept their patents a secret. They are treated as a military secret. Hitler under this secret process produced in 1938, which is the last record we have of their production, 40,000 tons of metallic magnesium made from ore against our production of 3,800 tons of magnesium made from salt brine. The Geran planes today are constructed of magnesium alloyed with aluminum; and, plane for plane, they are substantially lighter for the same carrying capacity than either the American or British planes.

This preliminary survey work in metallic magnesium from magnesite ore at our State college has been carried on by the Bureau of Mines cooperating with the State College of Washington at Pullman, Wash., for the last 7 or 8 years. About 3½ years ago a representative of the Bureau of Mines, cooperating with representatives of the State school of mines, made the laboratory discovery that by the use of electricity they could take from the magnesite ore the metallic magnesium. This experiment has been done over and over time after time and is now a scientific fact. I wish to exhibit to the Committee a sample. The base of this exhibit which I hold in my hand is magnesite ore. There are more than 10,000,000 tons of it known to be in the immediate vicinity of the Grand Coulee Dam. The material inside this bulb is metallic magnesium produced from the magnesite ore at the State college laboratory. Metallic magnesium, as I said, weighs just two-thirds what aluminum does. It is of equal or greater tensile strength. With electric power at the rate at which it can be sold by the Government at Grand Coulee, there can be produced not thousands but millions of pounds of this wonderful metal at 10 cents a pound, and our airplanes could be constructed in part or in whole of this metal at much less cost and with much greater carrying capacity.

The discoverers of this metal have patented the process, and the patents are not going to be held exclusively, nor are they going to be kept from the trade, nor is there any thought in this appropriation to further this pilot plant work, that it will in any way interfere with the metal trade or private industry but, on the contrary, will encourage it, because there is no thought of the Government going into the production of this metal. There is the purpose, however, of not permitting anyone to monopolize these patents.

The laboratory experiments that we seek to prove in the commercial field through the Bureau of Mines and the State school of mines by the construction of a pilot plant that will turn out from 50 to 100 pounds of this metal a day is all that is needed now to prove the possibility of mass production. Any producing concern will have the right, if they are satisfied that this is a profitable undertaking, by paying a fixed royalty—and it will be fixed by the State College of Washington—anyone may use these patents and there will be no opportunity of their being monopolized or anyone taking undue advantage of them or in any way exploiting them, as has been done with other metals too often.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LEAVY. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Could the gentleman tell us what the present situation is with regard to patents in this and related metal fields? My understanding has been that there did exist today a substantial monopoly in these patented processes with regard to aluminum and magnesium. My question a few moments ago was directed to the possibility of, by the successful development of this patent, breaking the monopoly.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. LEAVY. Answering the gentleman from California, I may say that I have not gone fully into that matter.

I have been informed and I have seen in the papers frequently the statement that there is a corporation here in this country known as the Magnesium Development Co., 50 percent of whose stock is held by some Swiss interests who succeeded to such stock through the German Dye Works or some German corporation, and 50 percent of this stock is held by American corporations. This corporation has patents by which they are doubtless reducing this ore into metal to the advantage and benefit of the Germans today.

The only place on the North American Continent where magnesite ore is found in large quantities is in the State of Washington in my congressional district. The important thing about this whole situation is that with this enormous expansion in airplane production it is highly essential that we should at least in part free ourselves from the grasp that the Aluminum Trust of America has upon American plane production. I am not charging here that they are dishonest, and I am not indicting them. I do state they have an absolute 100-percent monopoly on practically every pound of aluminum produced, and we cannot build a plane without paying their price and doing what they desire us to do.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Has the gentleman ever heard of anyone questioning the truth of his statement that the material called aluminum is absolutely in the hands 100 percent of the Mellon interests of this country? And the Government has no other source to look to in the construction of the airplane production.

Mr. LEAVY. No. On the contrary, I have had it verified time after time that those interests have absolute control of aluminum production and the Government has no other source from which to get this metal.

Mr. GEYER of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. GEYER of California. I am very much interested in the statement the gentleman is making. It seems there is a remarkable contribution that can be made by this House to our national defense. I hope we do something about it.

Mr. LEAVY. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. PLUMLEY. I would like to make this contribution as a member of the Subcommittee on Appropriations for the Navy having to do with strategic minerals and metals. I do not care how much you attack the Aluminum Corporation of America, and I do not think that is the basis or reason for the gentleman's assertion that he needs this appropriation because he would need it anyway, and should have it.

Mr. LEAVY. I thank the gentleman. I did not make the statement based on the theory I needed it for the purpose of breaking up a monopoly. I made it for the purpose of establishing the fact that here we have for American industry a new metal, at a price one-third of what we now pay for an inferior metallic magnesium and at a price 50 percent of what we pay for aluminum.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The gentleman would be willing to say, in substantiation of his own position on this matter, that to the extent it has been successful, if there is a monopolistic control over patents in this particular field this development would help to break it open for possibilities of greater production?

Mr. LEAVY. It certainly would.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Why start a row over it?

Mr. LEAVY. I am not interested in starting a row. Of course, I am interested in stating a fact and I do state that in my own opinion, and it is only an opinion, we are paying an exorbitant price for the aluminum that goes into American planes when we have doubled and trebled the output and when we are selling Bonneville power at 2 mills a kilowatt to produce it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. I yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the appropriation included in the bill that he is talking about is limited exclusively to the investigation of magnesite?

Mr. LEAVY. This $20,000 is supplemental to a $20,000 appropriated earlier so that this pilot-plant experiment at Pullman, Wash., can be hastened, and it is limited to that particular purpose.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Limited exclusively to magnesite?

Mr. LEAVY. This $20,000 is limited to speeding up pilot-plant construction at Washington State College.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Does not the gentleman think that by limiting the appropriation exclusively to magnesite, instead of being beneficial, as it should be to our national-defense program, we should tell the Bureau of Mines not only to look at the availability of magnesite as a substitute for aluminum but it should also be looking to other sources of aluminum, instead of limiting it to one metal?

Mr. LEAVY. I may say to the gentleman from Utah that there are very substantial sums for the purposes the gentleman now suggests. I feel the alunite found in large deposits in both your State and mine should be given much greater consideration.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. That is what I wanted to know. [Applause.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I had intended no remarks on the pending bill until a situation in the Appropriations Committee this morning addressed itself to my attention which I think in the interest of fundamentals requires some observation.

The other day we observed the one hundred and fifty-third anniversary of the signing of the Constitution, a fact that has been immortalized by that canvas which hangs over in the rotunda of the Capitol. The idea of that document, of course, is first, a form of government epitomizing the only real representative republic on the face of the earth. One needs only to lift his eyes to look at and evaluate the democratic processes in some other countries, and he can tell at once that this is the only country where you can say we are still articulating the processes of democracy. If we want some estimate of how fitful the thing is, look at what Manuel Quezon did in the Philippines. Now, he used to serve in this body with a great many of the present Members. He got his political training sitting in the front row of this body. About 6 weeks ago he recommended to the Phillipine Legislature the necessity for a one-party government in the interest of efficiency in the Philippines. That is after all only symbolic of the rule of fascism.

It is only 8 weeks ago that a physically weak premier of Japan recommended to his country the necessity for embracing the totalitarian theory and set up a one-party government in that country. So fascism becomes complete there.

The whole theory of Italy, Germany, Russia, and all the rest of the world is so well known that it requires neither emphasis nor recital from me. That is why I am more interested in our own country in the separation of powers provided in the Constitution and in the articulation and translation of those powers in a very dignified and meticulous way.

It is the only thing in this feverish world to which we can look forward with any degree of comfort. Now let us see how we are gradually leeching it away. We take first the things which were alluded to in the United States News this week. The chairman of an executive agency, the National Labor Relations Board, made confession that their lobbying activities in order to get more out of this Congress are in contravention of a statute. Was he indicted? No. Was he removed by the President of the United States? No. Was any remonstrance addressed to him by his chief officer, the President of the United States? None of which I am aware. So here is an agency and the head of an agency which ignores and spurns and flouts the solemn law of the land, and nothing is done about it. It is one of those petty things, but just let it run on and finally it leeches away this whole structure and impairs the very integrity of representative government.

Secondly, how blindly we accept, for instance, a violation of the Corrupt Practices Act. It is a known fact that our friends on this side of the aisle, speaking through their national committee—and they are not responsible for it but their national committee is—received $150,000 in contributions to a campaign book, all of which was obtained from 170 corporations. There is not a man who knows anything about that law who will stand up and defend that kind of a practice. Well, what is done about it? Oh, people laugh. They shrug their shoulders. They regard it as a great joke. Is it not funny? Why, you get away with it so merrily, and why not? After all, maybe that is the new language, maybe that is the new moral climate of America. I do not know, but it is a tragic moral climate if it is.

Now consider for a moment the essential facts of the recent exchange of overage destroyers for Caribbean naval bases.

I have examined Attorney General Jackson's opinion from start to finish, and I cannot yet find anyone who will stand upon that opinion outside of the Attorney General and the President of the United States.

There you have three separate instances, one involving the Attorney General and the President, one involving a political committee that is seeking now to obtain the suffrage of the people of this country, or a majority, in order to continue the present administration in power, and finally, the chairman of an agency who freely admits that they did flout a law, and nothing has been done by way of discipline or disciplinary action.

How long do you think that can go on without completely leeching away the morality and the integrity of this country and sending our Government down to the forgotten dust?

I allude to it today because in this bill the matter is again presented. We had an appropriation bill in this session of the Congress whereby a subcommittee recommended that some $43,000 or $45,000 be taken away from the National Labor Relations Board and that a bureau which they had there, known as an agency on economic research, be disbanded as not particularly necessary, and maybe not conducive to the objectives for which public money ought to be spent. What happened? I read the report. They did disband that particular agency or group, but they transferred all the employees to a new agency—not quite all, but most of them—and they called it the Division of Technical Service, for which they get $34,000.

Let me submit this matter to you as Members of Congress, members of an independent branch of this Government to whom the Constitution entrusts the power of the purse. This Congress solemnly says to the chairman of that agency: "You do not need that division. It is not serving a useful purpose, and you have some people down there whose philosophies and ideologies are not quite in line with what we deem the democracy of this country to be, so there will be no money for that." So what does he do? He says: "Oh, I will fix that Congress. I will just give the division a new label; that is all. But it will be the same can with the same contents, so we will spend the money for the same purpose we are spending it for now." He in essence, along with those who were subordinate to him, is saying, "The hell with Congress, the hell with them." Excuse the inelegance of that term, but what other explanation can you place upon it? If Mr. Madden would flout the intent, the purpose, the will, and the expressed mandate of the Congress—and here sits the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE], who, with his subcommittee, had Mr. Madden come up and make confession of that fact and confession of other facts—then who are we to complain when other statutes are violated?

Suppose they do not send this Congress a report on national-defense expenditures, as provided by law, and we say, "Now, send us a report," and they say, "Oh, well, there is hysteria in the country; everybody is for national defense; the devil with Congress; we will make no report to them." Suppose some other desirable objective should be achieved and it required the flaunting of a law.

They might say, "Oh, well, hysteria is running in the country and people are so singly minded on this thing called security that they are not particularly concerned whether the integrity of the law and the institutions of the country are preserved and defended even as they were 153 years ago, when they launched this great experiment in government."

Here are three instances. Here comes the fourth instance, where apparently the power of the Congress, under the Constitution, seems to mean very little to some of these executive agencies. Do you not understand how that dangerous virus moves out? If the chairman of an agency feels that way, can you blame him if a stenographer down at that agency feels that way? Can you blame him if a clerk receiving $1,440 feels that way? Why, that conversation will go along, and they will say, "Here we are, we are an agency, 400 people here. Our boss apparently ignored an act of the Congress this week and nothing was done about it. Maybe we can do the same thing." So little by little, where integrity fails at the top, it percolates down to the bottom, and in a little while—and this is the premise I started on—you have leeched away the very substance of this thing that we cherish so dearly and which we observed in its anniversary only a few days ago.

I say it is such a tremendously important thing in this rather fitful and feverish hour, that I propose to make my protest as we go along, because I have found that the people out in the hinterland, out in my country 900 miles away, are still intensely interested in preserving the structure and the processes that made this country great. It is a great responsibility in an hour of trial and despair, when the whole world is filled with madness.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am glad the gentleman has made the remark about morality, but what can we expect from the rank and file of the people when high officials from the President down violate the mandates and laws passed by the Congress? Does not the gentleman feel that the morality of the people themselves is being destroyed under the example of our Executive leadership?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I recognize the pertinence of that observation, and I do not want to put it on personal grounds. I am thinking in terms of the country; I am thinking in terms of the consequences of this war; I am thinking in terms of the organic act under which we operate, and if we sit idly by and fail to make our protests, what kind of accounting are we going to make of our stewardship when we get home? The people will be very much interested. Make no mistake about that.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. I regret to say that I had expected on tomorrow to make it a little more on personal grounds, but

I want to ask the gentleman, is this any recent discovery he has made? I thought I knew about the abject surrender of Congress some few years ago. I thought we had surrendered some time ago. Why do we not deserve the actual contempt of the Executive? Why should he not have contempt?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Frankly, I do not know what sort of rejoinder to make to that observation.

Mr. GIFFORD. I will make it tomorrow.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I recognize that in the celebrated hundred days of 1933 we first delegated power, and we have been delegating power ever since. So what will the ultimate score be, particularly in an hour like this, when we recognize the necessity for making this Nation secure against that which menaces from without and that which menaces from within. Now, let us look at it just a little more realistically, perhaps, from within.

Mr. GIFFORD. If I may suggest something there, I have asked for time on tomorrow and I may say, if it will interest the gentleman, my subject will be "Our own problem of dictatorship."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let me just allude to that in terms of the situation from within. I have been tracing down some appropriation figures and expenditures this morning, insofar as they have gone, and they have not been entirely tabulated yet—first, fix this in your mind. According to the Secretary of the Treasury, the deficit for the fiscal year will be approximately $5,500,000,000. That is fifty-five hundred million dollars. That is a lot of money. If we expect to gear up and get away from constant borrowings, in the degree in which it is being done today, we will have to put this country on a $12,000,000,000 annual cash basis; and where are we going to get the revenues for that? It will mean a 100-percent increase in taxes over present revenues. Present taxes are 100 percent higher than in 1932. Meanwhile we are going along under contract authorizations and direct appropriations, with a $50,000,000,000 debt immediately ahead and we are shooting in the direction of a $60,000,000,000 national debt. If you will examine the figures of the Secretary of the Treasury you will find that the lowest interest rate now prevailing is 2.59 percent.

Expressing it on the basis of a $60,000,000,000 debt, your annual debt service will be over $1,500,000,000. When I was born, in 1896, they ran this great country, including the Post Office, pensions for Indians, the Army, the Navy, and all the regular responsibilities of the Regular Establishment of Government for $340,000,000. So here comes a debt service charge, coming on soon, that will be three and a half times the whole cost of Government only 2 generations ago.

Now, what will be the ultimate result? Will we finally get to that point where we will do what they have done in other countries, when out of the crucible of debt and despair they say, "Oh, well, I guess maybe somebody has got to be invested with lots of power to get us out of this difficulty."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 more minutes.

Someone must be invested with lots of power to keep the old prow of the ship heading into the wind, and when you have done that you have virtually signed the warrant to undermine the democratic processes of this country.

I have never been persuaded that any one man, I do not care who he is, wants to be a dictator in this country. I have never been persuaded that any one man, and I do not care what his name is, can reach out just casually, in a perfunctory way, and take over dictatorial powers. No; there has to be a condition out of which it is bred. There must be something to spew it out and set the stage.

So gradually we are setting the stage and adding to it certain disrespect for the law of the country as solemnly written by the Congress and signed by the Presidents of other days. If that tendency persists, gentlemen, look out. We are walking on dangerous ground in an hour when republics and representative governments and democracies so easily succumb to the totalitarian ideology.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. PLUMLEY. If the gentleman will permit an observation, to the effect that without regard to what you may believe from the standpoint of partisan politics, it is nevertheless a fact that what you have said is true with respect to the usurpation and surrender of the prerogatives of this body. And else both sides of this aisle wake up to the fact that it does confront them, in view of the fact, as the gentleman has stated, that a man who sat here so long as the representative of the Philippine government has suggested that we need only a one-party government, and one of the most distinguished members of another body has advocated and established in his State a unicameral legislature, it will soon be that we will not be.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That may be true. Let me add this: There is just as much interest in preserving this Government on one side of the aisle as on the other side of the aisle. It is not a partisan matter, but we are all responsible for this. So often we become indifferent; so often there are other things to be done in the office; so often there are realistic things that go to make up the job of representing a constituency in the country, and we become slightly indifferent to what sometimes seems to be an academic matter. But it is not academic. It goes to the very vitals and the very heart of the perpetuity of this Government. What is to be done about it? I do not think I have ever expressed any alarm on this floor in the years that a constituency has kindly indulged me to be here, but you cannot view the world situation today, the pressure from the outside and the pressure of unsolved problems from the inside, without cherishing some degree of alarm. You cannot divest yourself of it any longer.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. Because you have said what you have, did you not hear those reassuring words from Philadelphia on Friday afternoon, "No dictator ever dared to subject himself to a free and untrammeled electorate"? Did you hear it?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I did not hear it. I read it.

Mr. GIFFORD. Well, I listened carefully and the great precedent breaker is about to break that precedent.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That may be.

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes; he is about to break that precedent.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Perhaps I should apologize to the membership today for suggesting this matter in a rather casual manner. Yet it is something over which we must study and take heart. It is a time for quiet and undramatic courage as we address ourselves to the task of preserving both the form and substance of representative, constitutional government. When we find that our own processes are not fast enough or expeditious enough to meet the situation, then we are apt to say "More power in the interest of more efficiency." That was the gospel that Manuel Quezon sold to the Philippine Legislature not so long ago when he used the word "efficiency." He said, "We have to be more efficient." Oh, what a poor pupil he was of the tutelage that he got in this Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CREAL].

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, you have just listened to a very able address, in different words, but you have been hearing it for 5 years, and you are liable to hear it much more between now and November 5. Not much more thereafter.

There is an appropriation here for $100,000 for the enforcement of the Hatch Act, one of those things that was passed by a bulldozing, high pressure, and mental coercion that would have never passed either body of this Congress on a secret ballot. It took away the constitutional rights of the freedom of speech and the freedom of press of many in the country, where political knowledge and the dissemination of political knowledge is presumed to be the basis of a democracy. Departing from that un-American principle, our good Republican friends may well have all the credit for the passage of that act. I want to call their attention to one thing, that the Civil Service Commission just recently asked the Department of Justice for an interpretation of the various phases of the Hatch Act and how to enforce it. One of them was that anyone receiving any money from any source, however small, from the Federal Government could not haul a voter to the polls. Now, of course, that forces you to leave your grandmother or your mother-in-law at home if she wanted to go to vote. If she wanted to go to do some shopping, she could slip out of sight and go to the polls and vote, but you could not haul her to the polls to vote if that is what she said she wanted to go for. Your boy could not go down the road and get granddad or Uncle Ben, who had the rheumatism and no way to get to the polls. He cannot do that at all if he is a postmaster and gets only $60 a year. He has got to let the old man walk or hint around to somebody and let somebody go back to pick him up. That is the ruling. As that is the ruling, I want to call your attention to the fact that there are Republican State organizations here in Washington. I have seen letters from some of them to civil-service employees in Washington asking: "Are you going home to vote? If you are, do you have room to take another in your car? If not, if you have no car, we will let you ride with somebody who has one." If the interpretation of the Department of Justice is correct, and if you cannot haul a voter to the polls even in a rural section where it has been the custom for years, then you cannot haul somebody back home with you from Washington to your district. I think the Republican Party, which is responsible for passing the Hatch Act, ought to send word back to these State Republican headquarters that what they are doing in the matter of absentee voters is contrary to the interpretation of both the Civil Service Commission and the Department of Justice. Why has not some Republican guardian of the Hatch Act called attention to this violation? [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, it has been rumored that we may obtain the joint use, with Great Britain, of the naval base at Singapore, out in the Far East. I do not know whether this is true or not. At any rate I do not believe we are showing enough vision or enough ambition with regard to the so-called national defense. We are restricting and confining ourselves to hemispheric and Far East defense. I say this is not enough. I say Congress is lagging behind on this question of national defense. What we really need is interplanetary defense. We speak of Great Britain as being our first line of defense. This, I believe, again indicates a lack of vision and ambition on the part of the servants of the people. Our first line of defense is not Great Britain. Our first line of defense is the milky way and therefore we ought to see to it that we get a base on Mars and Jupiter.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield briefly.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman remembers perfectly well, does he not, that a year or two ago, because of a radio broadcast the people thought that in New Jersey we were suffering an invasion from Mars?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Oh, yes; and it was not so long ago that the mayor of that town was defending it against an invasion from the Bill of Rights.

Mr. FISH. Anything can happen in the State of New Jersey.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. And it can happen right here in the Well of this House. We have had many Orson Welles-like demonstrations right here since the first one took place on May 16.

Why confine ourselves to just a two-ocean Navy? What we really need is a nine-ocean navy. If you tell me there are only seven seas on which men can sail ships I say that all we have to do is to put the American boys we are conscripting to work digging two more oceans. What better way is there to toughen them up? After they have dug these two extra oceans then we can build two more navies and thus we shall have a nine-ocean navy.

Our defense program therefore should be based on an interplanetary defense with the Milky Way as our first line with a nine-ocean navy. With all this how can we miss protecting this so-called American way of life in the name of which we are now destroying the lives and liberties of the American people? [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, we are here to consider the first supplemental civil functions appropriations bill for 1941. This is not the first deficiency appropriation bill this year. We have passed many appropriation bills during this session of Congress. The fact of the matter is that a greater proportion of the bills we have passed since the 1st of January have been appropriation bills. We have spent more of the time of the House considering the spending of money than possibly any other subject, and this is probably the longest peacetime session of Congress in the history of this country.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question.

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Appropriation bills produce bigger and better deficits, do they not?

Mr. RICH. That seems to be the theory we are going on during this session of Congress, under the New Deal. The more appropriation bills we pass the greater the deficit.

There is much truth and hard common sense in the statement made by the gentleman from New York. I am a member of the Committee on Appropriation bills, but I have heard little said in the committee and hardly anything on the floor of the House as to where we are going to get the money. During this session of Congress we have appropriated and authorized over $20,000,000,000. According to the estimate of the President our expected revenues during the coming year will be about $5,600,000,000. That was before we passed the first tax bill this session. We passed one tax bill early this session that is supposed to raise $1,007,000,000 additional revenue, then we passed an emergency tax bill a week or two ago which we called the excess-profits tax bill or war preparation tax bill which is supposed to bring in $230,000,000 this year. Where are the New Deal spending tax bills, we should have had several of them. Anticipated revenue deducted from the items appropriated and authorized so far this session will leave us in the red next year somewhere between $12,000,000,000 and $15,000,000,000. A New Deal record. They have not balanced the Budget 1 year since they took office. They are from a billion and one-half to four and a half billion in the red each year the past 7 years, notwithstanding the fact the President promised a balanced Budget by 1936. He is getting worse off each year. All they know is—spend, spend, spend. Soon it will be crash, crash, crash, or wreck, wreck, wreck.

The reason I cannot say it is going to be twelve billion or twelve and one-half billion dollars, is because nobody knows what this Congress is going to appropriate before it adjourns, and they are talking about adjourning next Saturday night. They do not know one day what will happen the next.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. We have heard a lot about the Appropriations Committee, but we do not hear very much about some of the other committees that help contribute to the deficit. For instance, the Banking and Currency Committee has authorized large sums of money for the R. F. C. that are just the same as appropriations, and may run into the billions of dollars.

Mr. RICH. I suppose our contingent liabilities now, including all appropriations that have been made the last 2 or 3 years, will run in the neighborhood of four or five billion dollars. If we add that to our national debt which on September 18 amounted to $44,060,797,000, you will see what it is—about $50,000,000,000. You will also remember that when they devalued the gold dollar from $20.60 an ounce to $35 an ounce they made $3,000,000,000, and that $3,000,000,000 was charged off. So if we add that to the deficit, we would be over $53,000,000,000 in the red now. We increased the national debt from forty-five to forty-nine billion dollars and if we do not get out of here pretty doggone quick we will be over fifty-five billion before we adjourn the end of this week. It is terrible, it is a terrible situation I say. No business in the New Deal.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. PLUMLEY. The gentleman from New York has called attention to the fact that the Appropriations Committee is not alone to be held responsible for the expenditures, in view of the fact, as he suggests, that the Committee on Banking and Currency has authorized certain other expenditures. But is it not true that other committees of the House and the House itself by its vote have authorized tremendous expenditures, as I say unjustified, which the Appropriations Committee has had to undertake to cut down. Why not pay the devil his due? We have had to meet a situation. We have had to meet authorizations made and voted. We have tried to eliminate from those authorizations every expenditure that we thought was unwise. The gentleman as a member of this committee is attacking his own committee.

Mr. RICH. If the gentleman is trying to defend this committee, why he has got a real job. I know that the committees of the House of Representatives, the President, and everybody associated with the New Deal Congress are responsible, but you Republicans cannot stop them, and you will not stop them until the people of this country back home realize on November 5 that they have to clean house. They have got to clean out the house down there at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, which is the White House. That is the first place they will have to start. Then they will have to watch these New Deal Senators over there. Then the people of this country must say to the Congress: "You have gone so far and you cannot go any further." You must give the people a sound Republican administration. No more New Deal.

The point I want to make is that if the people of this country do not clean house, then your responsibility as members of the Appropriations Committee is to refuse to give the New Deal something that we have not got to give. If that is not a good point, then I would like to know what other point you can make? The Appropriations Committee must refuse to give the New Deal these extravagant funds that they are asking for. We have got to get rid of some of these bureaucrats that we have. Let me say to the gentleman from Vermont that he is one of the most intelligent men we have in the Congress. Does he not know that the President of the United States had 563,847 employees in the Government when he came into office on March 3, 1933? The number of employees he has put on the roll since then has been tremendous. On June 30 we had 1,066,011. That is more than we had at the highest peak of Government employees during the World War. At that time we only had 799,736 employees.

Just think of it, the President stated that he would consolidate the bureaus and cut down in his department. He increased them almost 100 percent. I am speaking now to the gentleman from Vermont: Does he not think that is a terrible travesty on the word he gave the American people at that time?

Mr. PLUMLEY. I admit that.

Mr. RICH. Why, certainly. I knew the gentleman would.

Mr. HAWKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HAWKS. Are we not between the devil and the deep blue sea? The longer we stay here the more money we spend, but if we go home we may come back here and find that they have given the dome of the Capitol away to a foreign nation.

Mr. RICH. I would not trust them with anything. Congress has put in peacetime conscription to raise 1,000,000 or 2,000,000 men in order that we might have an army so that a dictator can take over a great mass of people at one time. We ought to have a sound man in the White House, one that we are not afraid of. The worst thing that Congress ever did was to establish peacetime conscription. We could have had all the volunteers we needed for $35 a month and 1-year enlistment. When you go back home and take the record of all these fellows who voted for peacetime conscription, when they see how close we are coming to dictatorship, they will wake up, and if that time comes, and it is just a short distance away, the people will wake up, but it will be too late.

I warn the American people now to keep their eyes open and remember these things on November 5. The Congress of the United States has authorized the President, after he got behind them and drove them to it, to create an army of a million men. Who is afraid of Hitler? He is not coming 3,000 miles across the Atlantic Ocean. He is not going to attack this country. Any man who is in the White House should not be able to say that Mussolini stuck us in the back. We ought to have somebody in the White House who is friendly to the people all over the world if we want to be a good neighbor. Mr. Roosevelt has lost the confidence of most European nations.

Now, let us get to this bill that we have under consideration, which is a supplemental civil-functions appropriation bill. If the House of Representatives wants to do the right thing, it will cut out a whole lot of appropriations that appear in this bill; cut down on useless Government expenditures.

Let us just see what some of them are. Here we have $38,167,000 for the reduction of interest on farm-mortgage payments to the Federal land banks and the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation. What is that for? You passed laws reducing the interest rate to the farmer. That might be all right, but when the time comes that the Congress of the United States passes a bill—and this is what the gentleman from Vermont was referring to a few moments ago—and makes certain conditions, you ought to know exactly what the conditions are and how you are going to handle the situation. What are you going to do? You are going to pay $38,167,000 to the bankers of this country. Think of it. You are not going to pay that to the farmers. The farmers are going to get a reduction in their interest rate, to be sure, but this is a refund to the bankers. How will the taxpayers like that?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right on that point?

Mr. RICH. You get this point. You are going to pay that $38,167,000 to the bankers of this country. Who is going to do it? The taxpayers—the people in need that are out over the United States—men and women who are making $1,000 or $500 a year, or whatever they are making. Those people are going to pay the greatest amount, and they are going to pay that money to the bankers of this country just because you pass some laws that are not justifiable and that cannot be substantiated.

Mr. COCHRAN. Now will the gentleman yield on that subject?

Mr. RICH. Just wait until I give you a little more information here.

Mr. COCHRAN. I mean on the very point the gentleman is making.

Mr. RICH. I am going to make the point now.

Take the fellow who makes $1,000 a year, he pays $190 a year in taxes. The fellow who makes $2,000 a year pays $335 a year in taxes. The fellow who makes $5,000 a year pays $1,060 in taxes. The point I make is that the smaller the salary a fellow gets the larger the percentage of his earnings that goes into taxes. But that is not all. This is the crux of the situation. The fellow who paid $190 out of his $1,000 salary under the tax plan we have had up to this time is going to be compelled to pay twice that much, because you are going to be more than twice that much in the red this year over what you were last year, and last year you were in the red over $3,600,000,000. If you can go back to your constituents and satisfy them that that is a wise thing for Congress to do, then I should like to know how you can camouflage them like that. You will have to have more taxes or bust the Government?

Now come on with your question.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman is blaming everything on Sixteenth and Pennsylvania Avenue. Now let me ask about the $38,000,000 about which the gentleman is making a lot of noise. Is that the fault of Sixteenth and Pennsylvania Avenue?

Mr. RICH. I do not yield any further, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman knows that he voted to override the President's veto.

Mr. RICH. I want to show you that I am blaming things on 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue. You are right. When that man took his oath of office on March 4, 1933——

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman is right when he says I am blaming this on Sixteenth and Pennsylvania Avenue. That is the White House, for the benefit of anybody who does not know what it is. Franklin D. Roosevelt lives down there. He is the man who is being interfered with now by a third-term candidate by the name of F. D. Roosevelt. He wants to break down that precedent of two terms for a President. He is the third-term candidate who said in Philadelphia the other day that he wanted free and untrammeled elections. When you had the convention out in Chicago you did not have a free and untrammeled election. He said who was going to be the Presidential candidate as well as the Vice Presidential candidate and you had to take it. It is a pretty bitter pill for a lot of you, too, on the Democratic side of the aisle.

Mr. COCHRAN. I am asking the gentleman if he voted to override the President's veto?

Mr. RICH. I do not yield to the gentleman. I want to answer his first question.

Mr. COCHRAN. Answer "Yes" or "No." Did the gentleman override his veto?

Mr. RICH. I have tried to override it a good many times, and I have sustained his veto many, many times. He whips you into line, and nobody can override him on the New Deal side of the aisle. When he licks you into line you always walk down the chalk mark and you say, "Well, we will have to take it because we are good rubber stamps here, we have given him everything he wants, and we will continue to give it to him."

Mr. COCHRAN. How about the gentleman? Did he take it?

Mr. RICH. No; he never told me how I should vote; I would not obey him. The only thing you have to do is to get rid of him. Now, wait until I tell you. When he took office I thought he was an angel sent from heaven. I told the people back in my district I would support him. When he made the pre-election promises that he did, they were some of the finest statements that any man ever made before he got into office, but when he came into office he was not here 6 months until he started to repudiate his word. When a man tells me one thing and repudiates his word and does not carry it out, I do not have any time for him, and I do not care where he lives, what his name is, or where he comes from. A man who is not as good as his word is not worth a whoop.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. RICH. I yield now.

Mr. COCHRAN. I asked the gentleman to tell the House whether he voted to override the President's veto of this act that requires the payment of this $38,000,000.

Well, did you do it? Did you vote to override the veto?

Mr. RICH. Wherever he has acted to cut down expenses and save this Government money I have supported him in most every instance.

Mr. COCHRAN. What did you do in that instance? That is what I am asking the gentleman now.

Mr. RICH. Oh, sit down.

Mr. COCHRAN. So now you refuse to say "Yes" or "No."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania declines to yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. I will look up the RECORD and see how the gentleman voted.

Mr. RICH. I want to call your attention to some more of these things.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield for a question.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The gentleman speaks of paying money to the bankers. Has the gentleman made any computation of what the bankers are collecting for the circulation of Federal Reserve notes in this country?

Mr. RICH. When the President took the gold over here and paid from $25.60 to $35 an ounce he lost many billions. He also went out into your State and into other Western States and gave you big premiums for silver, and he has gone into all the countries of the world and paid them big premiums for gold and silver, and the taxpayers of this country have got to foot the bills. Is that right? Is it just to tax your people for something that the foreigners are going to get the benefit of?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] was asking the gentleman if he voted to override the President's veto on the $38,000,000 for the reduction of interest upon farm mortgages. I understand the facts are that the President vetoed that proposition last year, but that this is election year and he has signed it.

Mr. RICH. Well, he does a lot of things like that. You know, he is the greatest politician that ever came into office, and he will do anything to get political favor in this country. A clever politician for F. D. R., but a mighty poor businessman.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The gentleman asked me a question. Will he yield for an answer?

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield for a question to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. LEAVY. The gentleman has repeatedly said in the course of his remarks that he would get rid of the gentleman down at the White House, and, of course, that implies displacing him with somebody else.

Mr. RICH. That is right. I certainly would replace him.

Mr. LEAVY. Whom would the gentleman put in his place?

Mr. RICH. Well, there is one fellow we can try, because we can try anybody but F. D. R. A gentleman over in the Senate said the other day it does not make any difference whom we have in the White House so long as we do not have the present occupant of the White House. We cannot have anybody half as bad.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Pennsylvania 5 additional minutes.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I cannot yield any further. I want to talk about Grand Coulee.

Mr. LEAVY. If the gentleman will just let me ask this one question. If you mean that we should put Mr. Willkie in the White House, he is for the selective service and just as much so as Mr. Roosevelt.

Mr. RICH. Let me tell you this. Mr. Willkie might be for the selective service, and I am against it, but Mr. Willkie is not going to tell me how to vote; at least I will not vote that way. The people of my district sent me here to use my head and I am going to tell you that neither Mr. Willkie nor Mr. Roosevelt nor anybody else is going to tell me to do something wrong. That is the answer, if that is what you would like to have.

Mr. LEAVY. I agree with the gentleman and I think we all are just as much——

Mr. RICH. Now, I want to get back to this bill. When you have a subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee on the Interior Department, the bureau heads come in here and ask for a lot of funds without the chairman of the Appropriations Committee calling on the members of the subcommittee to see whether the appropriations are justifiable. They do not do that. There is not the business organization to the Appropriations Committee that there should be, because if a subcommittee is supposed to handle the appropriations for the Interior Department they ought to be kept informed at all times of just what is going on. They are in better position to advise the full committee. That is what you have them for. Why do you not use them? That is the business way to do it.

Let me now call your attention to some of the things that we have put in this appropriation bill which I claim are not justifiable items and should be stricken out of the bill. You have added $137,000 to the appropriation for the Bituminous Coal Commission. The Bituminous Coal Commission has been working for 5 years and they have spent $10,000,000 or $12,000,000 and it was just recently that they established the price of coal; some expense for such an item. It took them 5 or 6 years to establish the price of coal. They cut down on a lot of their offices and we could have cut out that $137,000 very easily and it would not have made any difference to that Commission, and that is the point I want to make. We should keep our eyes on the pennies and the dollars will take care of themselves. Save, save, save, should be our motto; not spend, spend, spend. Save means thrift. Spend means recklessness or break-down. We could save here and there hundreds of thousands of dollars if we had the will to do it in this bill.

Now, take the next item, the Bonneville power project; you are giving $3,850,000 in this bill. That Bonneville power item could have been kept out of this bill, because they have had enough money to buy all the transmission lines that they could have judiciously purchased or erected this year.

The amount that has been put in for the Bureau of Indian Affairs should not have been in this appropriation bill.

Here is the Bureau of Reclamation. They gave to the Pine River project in Colorado $400,000. That does not need to be appropriated for now.

The Colorado River project in Texas, $2,500,000. That is not necessary for national defense. It is not necessary to make appropriations now for the Biological Survey.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. RICH. The National Park Service: Here they are going down into Virginia and putting an addition on the building at the Jamestown Museum costing $10,000. That has no place in this bill.

Photographic Mat Service, not to exceed $6,000. That is for making mats for pictures to be put out over the country when they have appropriated money for these various departments for their advertising.

Here they are giving not to exceed $3,000 for additional mats. That has no place in this deficiency appropriation bill. Why the committee granted it I do not know. Poor business for the committee to do so.

Government of the Territories: They give $3,000 to take care of the insane in Alaska. We took care of all of the insane in Alaska, according to the wishes of the Department, when we made that appropriation bill 3 or 4 months ago. Now, they come in here and want three or four thousand dollars more.

The Virgin Islands Co., $8,450. I do not know how the gentleman in charge of this bill, or any other gentleman, can justify that amount. That is the place where all the people in this country are in the rum business; where they are selling 500 cases of rum up in New England, giving away 200 cases free; where the Government has started in the rum business and bought these old, worn-out rum mills, trying to take care of these people in the rum business when the people in this country do not want it. It is of no more use than the fifth wheel on a wagon to give that much money to the Virgin Islands Co. at this time. They always have been an expense to our Government. We need new management. We need to take the Government out of business, especially the rum distilling that you put all the American people in against their will and in competition with the rum manufacturers of America and the wost possible kind of unethical competition. The rum people of America do not like it and the taxpayers do not like it.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL].

BONNEVILLE POWER AND NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Chairman, there is one item in this deficiency bill—first supplemental civil functions appropriation bill, 1941—which I desire specifically to call to your attention. It is the appropriation of $3,850,000 for additional extension facilities for the Bonneville project on the Columbia River in Oregon. The President and the Bureau of the Budget transmitted a Bonneville supplemental estimate of $3,850,000 covering this which is divided as follows:

Item 1. Grand Coulee-Covington transmission line, initial materials, right-of-way, and clearing	$1,500,000
Item 2. Covington-Seattle line	200,000
Item 3. Substation additions	1,600,000
Item 4. Feeder connections	500,000
Item 5. Tools and equipment	50,000
Total	3,850,000

In view of the President's Executive order the first two items are necessary to start work on outlets to permit the sale of Coulee power. No direct Coulee outlets have been authorized to date, and it is obvious that they are necessary. Grand Coulee will bring in three generators totaling 324,000 kilowatts within the next year. This is 50 percent more firm power than was assured by the $65,000,000 T. V. A. appropriation bill but will not be fully available within 3 years. I might mention in this connection that Bonneville Dam is completed and Coulee will be within a year. All that is needed hereafter at both sites to acquire any amount additional capacity is the installation of machines—water turbines and generators with a roof above. For the capacity included in the T. V. A. appropriation, these Bonneville or Coulee machines could have been secured for about one-sixth of the amount necessary for a full hydro development with steam auxiliaries. I have been advised that the three Coulee machines I mention cost less than $10,000,000. Columbia power does not require a steam support.

Mr. Chairman, I might also state that additional Bonneville or Coulee capacity can be secured for one-half of the cost of any steam plant, and thereafter there would be no fuel costs involved. Bare fuel operating costs on the basis of T. V. A. reports range from about 1.6 to 3 mills per kilowatt-hour, depending on the distance from the fuel source. In the northwest, Columbia power costs, including all charges, interest, and amortization, are less than the bare fuel cost.

The remaining items of this estimate come within the scope of my investigations, and I desire to comment on the strategic metal and defense contribution that the northwest can make. The last three items of the submission can fit directly into such a program in my State. The submission is flexible enough to permit the use of these funds, wherever defense industrial requirements arise. Bonneville and Grand Coulee will within the next year have over 500,000 kilowatts of available low-cost power. The advisory commission in their appearance before the Appropriations Committee on the T. V. A. matter, stated in effect that there was a shortage of power capacity required for defense, and there was no private company in the United States capable of supplying even 200,000 kilowatts. I could add to this statement by saying that there are no power sources in America that can approach the Columbia River plants in low cost.

POWER COSTS AND ELECTROLYTIC PROCESSES

Inquiry and investigation develop the following over-all power facts: The hydro power that the Aluminum Co. is purchasing at the T. V. A. costs about 50 percent more than Bonneville delivered power. The T. V. A. steam power, with low coal prices, will cost over two times as much as Bonneville power. The Holston Reservoir hydro power will cost, if fully amortized, like the estimate before you, nearly one and nine-tenths times as much as Columbia power. Niagara industrial power sells for 50 percent more than Bonneville power. Eastern and midwestern steam power will cost nearly three times as much. All of these comparisons are made on a kilowatt-hour basis for the purpose of pointing out the base economics behind the electrolytic processes, on which the defense program must rest. Electrolytic metal processes cannot economically stand power costs above 3 mills per kilowatt-hour unless there is a Federal subsidy in the metal price paid. This economic fact precludes steam power from consideration from such process use. Columbia power derives its advantage from the gifts of nature in the form of high-average river flows, steadiness of flow, high waterfalls, low-cost reservois sites, and advantageous dam sites with solid floors. As a power producer, the Columbia tops the list of high-class power streams, like the Niagara, St. Lawrence, and Colorado.

THE DEFENSE PROBLEM

Modern warfare is one of machines. Machines require metals and modern machine electrolytic metals. I have stated before that the Detroit automobile industry would not have been possible without the superior electrolytic metals produced by Niagara 3-mill current. The two bottlenecks of the last war were power and strategic metals. As time goes on we will see these bottlenecks develop unless remedial measures are early adopted. The Northwest has both. All that is needed is to harness them together. It is apparent that we cannot afford to isolate such a block of power capacity at this time.

STRATEGIC METALS

Mr. Chairman, on May 8 last, before the present Defense Advisory Committee was created, I addressed the House on the metal and power situation. Originally I started this investigation as an aid to unemployment, and in the course of this investigation I discovered our great national-defense weakness from the standpoint of vital metals and power. I found that we are importing nearly $200,000,000 annually in vital metals. This importation represents an employment displacement nearly equal to the total metal-mining employment in the United States. To feel absolutely secure we must declare our independence from foreign material sources. For example, our steel industry would be helpless if the foreign supply of manganese were to be cut off. Large deposits of manganese ores exist in the West, notably in the Olympic Peninsula in Washington. Our western ores are more complex than the ores of other sections, but these can be reduced by electric processes. The Bureau of Mines has developed an electric process for the reduction of western manganese ores. The same situation exists as to magnesium, aluminum, from western alunite, chrome, tungsten, antimony, mica, and mercury.

DEFENSE INDUSTRIES

Civilization today would grind to an abrupt stop if the products of the electric furnace and the electrolytic cell should cease to be available. Our automobiles require the high-grade steel and steel alloys made in the electric furnace. The modern transport and military planes of today would be nonexistent if it were not for aluminum and magnesium metal products of the electrolytic cell. The examples can be multiplied as to cover every phase of modern industrial life—and, consequently, the importance of electric power becomes self-evident, especially if we note that these electroproducts require huge quantities of cheap power.

It is not easy to find cheap sources of dependable power in the Nation. Present plants are fast becoming loaded up to maximum capacity. We must not be subject to the almost disastrous power shortage of the last World War, and, gentlemen, we need not; the Columbia River projects at Bonneville and Grand Coulee are ready now to furnish ever-increasing quantities of the lowest-cost electric power in the United States. But great as this availability may be, we need the transmission lines to carry the energy from the power plants to the sites where industry will locate.

Ripe fruit can rot and fall to the ground unless we provide the baskets with which to collect the bounties of the fruit tree and transportation facilities to carry it to the markets.

Bonneville is ready to deliver 65,000 kilowatts to the Aluminum Co. of America's plant at Vancouver, Wash., which began operation September 3 of this year for the production of 30,000 tons a year of aluminum which we need in the production of sheets, rods, and structural shapes for our airplane program.

Bonneville is ready to deliver power to the Pacific Carbide & Alloys Co. in Portland for the production of calcium carbide, a chemical important in peace and war.

And Bonneville is in active contact with manufacturers and industrial groups contemplating northwestern production of high grade steel and steel alloys, ferrochrome—so important for armor plate—electrolytic zinc and manganese, aluminum from western raw materials, chromite, and chlorates. All these are electroindustries whose power demands will aggregate many tens of thousands of kilowatts.

Mr. Chairman, I call your attention to a timely report, just made public, prepared by the Bonneville Power Administration on industries important to national defense feasible of establishment in the Pacific Northwest. This report analyzes the specific contributions which the Northwest can well make to the national-defense program. It lists industries, a basic requirement of which is cheap and large blocks of power, industries whose products can provide some of the sinews for the defense of the west coast of our Pacific outposts, industries that are needed in the normal economic development of the Oregon country. I am told that if all these interested industries were to be established in the Northwest, their total initial power requirements would be in excess of 250,000 kilowatts. Where else in this Nation can such power be provided, especially in an area where most of the necessary raw materials can be found or readily made available from contiguous areas?

SELF-LIQUIDATION

Under the terms of the Bonneville Act this appropriation will be fully recovered. The act is mandatory in this requirement, and the rates to insure repayment are subject to periodical revision and check by the Power Commission before becoming effective. Manifestly this is strictly a business proposition, and also a worth-while contribution to our defense program.

Mr. Chairman, I sincerely urge my colleagues to approve this appropriation for providing these transmission facilities for the Bonneville and Grand Coulee projects so that this large block of much needed electric power may be made available at the very earliest time for use in our defense program.

There are a number of concerns that are engaged in manufacturing various articles going into our armaments that are now negotiating for plants in the Columbia River area in order to take advantage of this low-cost hydroelectric power. The Federal Government has a large investment in these projects and good business judgment dictates that the investment be put to use in furthering the early completion of our national defenses.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I want the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH]. He refused to answer my question, but I have the RECORD of June 15, 1938, before me. The President vetoed a bill that requires the appropriation of $38,000,000, and among those voting to override the veto is the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH]. There is the gentleman's name. Do you want to have the RECORD corrected? [Laughter.]

Mr. RICH. Now, you look here. We wanted to give the farmers the advantage of that, but why did you wait until the time came and then not permit the farmers to get the advantage of it, but pay it to the bankers? [Laugher and applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] has made a mistake this time, because the bill under which we are proposing $38,000,000 was passed this year, election year, and was signed by the President. [Laughter.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, this supplemental civil-functions appropriation bill contains an item for the Washington National Airport. I know that in recent weeks, especially, there has been considerable discussion of this project and certain individuals have stated publicly that it appeared that excessive amounts were being spent in the construction of the airport. Money should, of course, be carefully expended, but we must realize that the airport in Washington deserves to serve as a model for the metropolitan terminal throughout the United States. I feel that I should speak briefly about the fine work which has been done, under the tireless efforts of Col. Sumpter Smith, chairman of the Interdepartmental Engineering Commission. It was just a little less than 2 years ago that construction started. On Wednesday afternoon President Roosevelt will lay the cornerstone of the Terminal Building. At this point we should note the committee recommends the sum of $2,700,000, in lieu of the Budget estimate of $2,750,000, for use in making available proper facilities to take care of the operating transport air lines using the airport.

This money is to be used for the construction of five additional hangars and necessary improvements thereto. Under the Public Works Administration and Work Projects Administration there was provided a sum necessary for the construction of one hanger, but we find today that it is absolutely necessary to have constructed at the Washington National Airport sufficient hangar space to take care of the ever-increasing flow in and out of Washington of the operating lines that are handling passengers, express, and mail in the ever-growing transport system of the United States.

I think that all of us, regardless of the section of the country from which we come, understand full well that in the United States today we are developing a great system of air transportation. It is right, and it is proper, and it is necessary that at Washington, D. C., we have every possible facility to go with the actual airport itself, to take care of this ever-developing and ever-enlarging flow of traffic. Increasingly, Washington is the mecca for citizens from all sections of the Nation. They are coming here by all means of travel, but in greatly increased numbers by air each year.

We do know that this Washington airport is going to be a vital factor not only in the life of the Capital itself but in the life of the Nation as well.

It is fortunate that the location of the airport is but a 10- to 15-minute drive from the center of the Capital.

At present the airport being used here accommodates 144 scheduled landings and take-offs every 24 hours, making it already the third busiest in the country.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to touch briefly on another item in the pending measure. It is the amount which is to be appropriated for domestic air mail in this country, under which we shall have the expansion of the air mail pick-up system.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I asked the gentleman to yield at this point because I want the RECORD to show that the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH] is entitled to a distinctive place in the aviation history of our country. He is the father of the air mail pick-up service. It was through his splendid initiative and farseeing vision that this service was originally established on an experimental basis. As the chairman of the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee dealing with post-office appropriations, I early came under the spell of his persuasive influence. Years ago when the idea of a pick-up service was regarded as more or less fantastic the gentleman from West Virginia was its faithful and determined sponsor. He stuck to his guns and prosecuted his plea with such force and impressiveness that the Congress eventually provided funds to test it on an experimental scale. The period of test ended last May at which time the value of the service had been so well and conclusively established that the Post Office Department formally endorsed it as a regular and permanent postal activity never to be abandoned, and to be extended as wise administration and the national finances would permit. It is a wonderful and successful service and when we contemplate its promising future we may very properly pause to pay our tributes in the annals of Congress to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH] as the father of the pick-up service. [Applause.]

Mr. RANDOLPH. The gentleman from Indiana is very kind. I am sure his words are undeserved, but I do appreciate his thoughtfulness and graciousness in calling attention to my efforts in connection with the air mail pick-up system.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, under this system we are going to serve approximately 150 cities and communities of the United States served by the air mail pick-up system. Prior to the proving of this system we had just a few major cities served by air mail through the regular channels of transport lines which have access to airports. Now we have this new service in some seven States. In this method of operation you will recall that the plane swoops down, drops the mail for delivery, and picks up the outgoing mail. No airport is needed. Thus hundreds of communities in this country where the terrain will not allow the construction of airports or where the local communities do not have the money for construction are going to receive the benefits of this pick-up service. I ask all Members of this body for active support in seeing that this service is not limited to 150 communities, but that eventually it will spread to 1,000 and possibly 2,000 communities that the people at large may be served by this great boon to aviation in the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise,

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLAND, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 10539, the supplemental civil functions appropriation bill, 1941, had come to no resolution thereon.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, after the completion of the legislative program for the day, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes, speaking to a resolution I shall then offer ratifying the action of the President in acquiring certain air bases.

The SPEAKER. With the understanding that the gentleman's time will follow other special orders heretofore granted, is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

FIRST SUPPLEMENTAL CIVIL FUNCTIONS APPROPRIATION BILL, 1941—RULE

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following report on the bill (H. R. 10539) making supplemental appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, which was read and referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

House Resolution 609

Resolved, That during the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10539) making supplemental appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, all points of order against the legislative provisions of the bill are hereby waived.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Resolution 609.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That during the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10539) making supplemental appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, all points of order against the legislative provisions of the bill are hereby waived.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, this is a special rule waiving points of order against certain legislative provisions in the bill H. R. 10539, the supplemental civil functions appropriation bill, 1941.

Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to take up the time of the House, but I do yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, there is no apparent objection to this rule that makes in order certain provisions of the first supplemental defense appropriation bill for 1941. The words "first supplemental civil functions appropriation bill" are sort of new terminology to me. It probably means a deficiency bill under another name, it is a sort of alias for a deficiency bill. A rose by any other name smells just as sweet, and a deficiency bill under any other name smells just as rotten; but as far as I know there is no objection to the rule making these provisions in this bill in order.

Mr. Speaker, I have taken these few minutes not to defend myself on the floor but rather to defend the 207 Members—140 Republicans and 67 Democrats—who voted for the amendment I introduced allowing 60 days in which to give volunteers an opportunity to enlist under the conscription bill. Every Member of Congress, whether for or against my amendment and regardless of its merits or demerits—and I agree they are all honest men and women—knows that my amendment would not have delayed the draft by a single hour or a single minute. I provided for 60 days for volunteers on a call to be issued by the President so as not to interfere with the draft; otherwise I would have provided 90 days, which was my preference and more desirable. A provision was written into my amendment that nothing in the subsection should interfere with the registration, classification, or induction into service of any of the draftees. Nevertheless, the New York and Washington newspapers deliberately falsified my amendment and carried large headlines perverting the truth, stating that it would delay the draft by 60 days.

As all Members of Congress know, under the draft law no one is to be called into service before November 15. This has since been changed to delay it another 2 weeks. There would not have been a minute's delay under my amendment. The call by the President for volunteers would have gone out and 400,000 might have volunteered in advance of November 15. It would have expedited enlistments but not possibly delayed it.

Mr. Speaker, I make this statement, not in defense of myself but in defense of a majority of the Members of the House who may be maliciously and viciously attacked because of their vote for my amendment on account of the deliberate lies that have been carried in the big eastern interventionist newspapers. I had two opponents in a primary election only last Tuesday. I made no campaign for myself in spite of the deliberate falsehoods in the eastern press and in some of the papers in my own district. I spent $88 for postal cards and $50 for workers and cars. I had two opponents against me, both of them benefiting from the falsehoods about my amendment, which the New York press stated would delay the draft. I made only one radio speech in my district, yet I carried the district by a vote of 10 to 1 in the primaries against these two opponents. I have not taken this time to defend myself but to keep the record straight on my amendment, and to defend the record of this House. I have from the very beginning, and I shall continue to lead the fight to keep America out of foreign wars unless we are attacked or the Monroe Doctrine is violated. If this be treason to the Amerian people let the interventionists and warmongers make the most of it. I received something like 7,500 votes, while my two opponents received approximately 700 votes each. I say to you Members who voted for my amendment that you have nothing to apologize for; a majority of this House on two occasions voted for it. It did not provide for a single day's delay, and I want it to go in the RECORD that these New York newspapers deliberately and maliciously falsified the truth and perverted it for their own selfish purposes. My amendment might have resulted in securing 100,000 or 400,000 volunteers weeks in advance of the induction of a single draftee.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. ENGEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. ENGEL. May I say to the gentleman that the day after the Fish amendment passed in the Committee of the Whole I called the attention of the House to the speech made on the floor of the House by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] who introduced the bill, in which he opposed the Fish amendment. He said not one word about delay. On the contrary, his opposition to the Fish amendment was directed to the fact that that amendment would bring volunteers to the Army so fast that the Army could not handle them. If that be true how could we have delay?

Mr. FISH. I am very much obliged to the gentleman. This is simply a matter of getting the record straight. It has nothing to do with the merits or demerits of the proposition.

It was further stated in the New York papers, and this is a direct attack on every Member of the House of Representatives, that the 60 days' alleged delay was aimed to carry it over election day, that it had to do with politics, and with votes. It was just another contemptible lie. The 60-day amendment was put in so that it would not interfere with the draft and had nothing to do with election day. I am not a rubber-stamp Member of Congress and even my bitterest opponent has never questioned my political independence or courage. This is my answer to those false charges and also to uphold the prestige, dignity, and honor of the House. I have faith in our free institutions and representative form of government, and I believe in the loyalty of the Democrats just as much as I do the Republicans in maintaining a decent respect for majority rule and the right of the Congress to legislate without being denounced and misrepresented in the eastern interventionist press. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot resist congratulating the gentleman upon his renomination. I presume his renomination was brought about mainly because he has supported the President's program of national defense and preparedness. The gentleman has been loyal and has cooperated with me in the Rules Committee in support of all rules that would tend to hasten the preparedness and defense program.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FIRST SUPPLEMENTAL CIVIL FUNCTIONS APPROPRIATION BILL, 1941

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10539) making supplemental appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further cosideration of the bill H. R. 10539, with Mr. BLAND in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, first of all, may I say that I am gratified to find in this bill there are carried appropriations for the payment of the Philippine travel pay, a matter which has been of great interest to many of the veterans of the Spanish-American War for many years.

I want to say a few words about the paragraph in the section relative to the National Labor Relations Board which would require the abolition of the Division of Economic Research.

It is clear as crystal that it is now more important than it ever was for Congress to exercise the most careful scrutiny over the expenditure of the money it appropriates. In a previous appropriation bill, I understand, a cut was made in the N. L. R. B. appropriation, and that in the report it was stated that this was intended to bring about the abolition of the Division of Economic Research. I understand further that such a situation has always been taken by executive agencies as evidence of the intent of Congress, but that in this case it was not so taken. I realize there is something important at stake here; and although I think the abolition of this Division is a mistake and have opposed it, I am frank to say I do not see what else the committee could do under the circumstances except to specifically write into this bill the instructions which undoubtedly represent the views of a majority of the House.

So I shall offer no amendment, although as I say I do think this action is a mistake in judgment. I think it is a mistake, first, because I believe that that division is important to the effective and proper functioning of the Board in the discharge of its duties. I think Members will find that to be true if they examine the work that has been done there or if they consult the organizations that have been affected by the work of the Board, such as the American Federation of Labor.

I realize, as I have pointed out this afternoon, that there can be no question with regard to the relationship of Congress to an executive agency, or the right of Congress to determine how the money it appropriates shall be spent. On that point I will say that generally I am in hearty agreement with those who have taken the position that executive agencies ought to carry out the intent of Congress carefully and cooperatively. I do want to say, however, that in this case there are certain other considerations that are important.

I presume, although I do not know, that there are Members of the House who are still laboring under the impression that the head of that division, Mr. Saposs by name, is a man who is subversive and a Communist. I say to the House that that simply is not true, that, on the contrary, the one group of people in this country who will be most delighted if this division is abolished and if Mr. Saposs is gotten out of the National Labor Relations Board are the Communists themselves, and that, as a matter of fact, due to his knowledge of the labor movement and all related fields, he is now and has been one of the most effective opponents of communism or the Communists in any form that we have. I am not meaning to say that I stand sponsor for Mr. Saposs' ideas, nor that I would agree with him on many things. But I believe that the fundamental test is the test of a person's loyalty, the test as to whether his first loyalty belongs to the United States of America without question of a doubt, rather than what his particular views on particular questions may be. There is no doubt that he passes that test, nor is there any doubt that he is one of the most effective opponents there is in this country of those who do not pass that test.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. May I recall to the gentleman the fact that the majority of the committee did find him to be subversive and that in the minority report it is the one thing upon which the minority did not disagree with the majority.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I do know that but I wonder whether the committee ever examined him and gave him an opportunity to state his own case. Did they?

Mr. ROUTZOHN. I can answer that. We not only did that, we had him up just the other day again on an examination which proved conclusively that he is a Communist. Besides that, we had his writings which cannot but convince anyone that he has been communistic for a great many years.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I know about the argument that has taken place regarding some of those writings. I do not agree with them, but I do think it is true that in one case, most frequently quoted against Mr. Saposs, he was not stating his own views at all but he was reporting on the views of a group with which he himself was in sharp disagreement.

I do not propose to enter into a controversy with the gentleman and if the gentleman feels it is the thing to do, it is all right with me, but I do say that what I said is true, that if you do this thing the Communists of the United States will be delighted at the move that has been made.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY].

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, while the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Missouri were indulging in their discussion with respect to matters and things, I had in mind making a speech superinduced, as they say medically, by the situation that then obtained. I have got more or less over being excited and mad since that time, nevertheless I do want to say that this bill, which is an attempted alibi and a poor excuse for a deficiency bill, has no more business before the Deficiency Committee than a polynesian amazon would have in Aztec, Mexico, on Christmas. It is no more a deficiency bill than I am; as such it absolutely is not.

It contains so many items which have been directly or indirectly presented to the regular subcommittees of the Appropriations Committee, which proves it not to be a deficiency, and/or turned down as to be almost innumerable, or else have not been presented at all, and they are now presented to this so-called deficiency committee, who are doped or misled into a sense of permitting the enactment thereof into law. They are fooled into approving appropriations that the progenitors and proponents would never dare to present regularly to the lawful and legislatively authorized subcommittees of the Appropriations Committee.

None of us submerged and junior members of the Appropriations Committee are jealous of the ability of any of these members who constitute the so-called and self-constituted deficiency committee by reason of the fact that they are chairmen and ranking members. There is no man on this floor who holds in higher respect the ability of any of those men than do I. But after I have spent 11 months and 10 days down here studying a particular matter, for them in a week to go over my head and approve something which after 11 months and 10 days of study I have said was absolutely no good, is nothing short of an insult to my supposed intelligence; and I am telling them, whether anybody else dares to or not, that I represent the substantial sentiment of all those who are not ranking members of the Appropriations Committee, whether they like it or not.

All this talk in another body about conference committees and their usurpation of legislative prerogatives is inconsequential when one takes into consideration what the ranking members of the Appropriations Committee, as an alleged deficiency committee, are doing or undertaking to do to their associates on that committee under the silly and easily discernible alibi of "deficiency." Deficiency! Bologny!

The name of the bill condemns it. It is neither deficiency, fish nor fowl, nor red herring, and never a deficiency.

If the House Appropriations Committee is top-heavy, reduce the number of members. If all the brains are to be found in those who by reason of service happen to be at the top, then let us make the most and best of it. Let us stop this useless waste of time by men sent to Congress who have tried for 11 months to help do the work of the Committee on Appropriations and of Congress to eventually be ignored because somebody who could not get their pet measures considered by them has appealed to—and deliberately so—this misnamed, overofficious, and parliamentarily irregular, as well as legislatively illegitimate deficiency committee.

If that is treason, make the most of it. The people should know, and will if it takes me till doomsday to iterate and reiterate this statement, which, after all the trimmings and oratory are discounted, cannot be controverted, as everybody not on the so-called deficiency committee can substantiate.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL].

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in the little argument between the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] regarding the Presidential veto of the 3½-percent farm loan interest bill. On the day that that veto came before this House, by which the President vetoed the reduction of the interest rate on the Federal land-bank loans to 3½ percent there passed through this House a bill which made appropriations and provided for the purchase of land for the farm tenants under the Farm Tenant Act. That bill provided for a 3-percent interest rate. I called attention in the House at that time that in the Farm Tenant Act—under which, by the way, loans are made of 100 percent of the value of the farm at 3 percent—the President was trying to make farm owners out of farm tenants, and by vetoing the 3½-percent rate bill he was making farm tenants out of farm owners.

I want to discuss here today, in the few minutes allotted to me, the question of the C. C. C. appropriations. In doing so I want to emphasize the fact again that I am not opposed to the C. C. C.

The subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee, which had that bill under consideration, worked very hard. They came out with a unanimous report, 4 Democrats and 2 Republicans, on this item and every other item in the C. C. C. bill. In 1939 the C. C. C. had an authorization of 300,000 men with approximately 90 percent of the enrollment filled, or 270,000 men actually enrolled, 10 percent being usually unfilled through enlistments, and so forth. They asked for $1,000 per man, $600 of which went for pay, subsistence, clothing, and doctors' bills, and the other $400 going for overhead. If the House intended, as I believe they did, by increasing the amount on the floor, to put the bill back where it was in 1939, they would have put it back to the actual enrolled strength of 270,000 men, which at $1,000 per man would have required $270,000,000. The House increased the amount to $280,000,000, $10,000,000 more than was necessary to carry on the whole program on a 1939 basis. In doing so they threw the bill out of balance and added more to pay and subsistence items and less on the overhead item. The subcommittee, in considering this original appropriation, and after careful consideration, was unanimously of the opinion that we ought to give them the $600 per man for pay, subsistence, and clothing allowance, but felt that the $400 per man was too much for overhead and that the extra money ought to go to the boys themselves. We therefore cut the overhead from $400 per man down to $350 per man, and put the balance of that money into the pay and subsistence item. I submit that that was a fair adjustment between the pay and subsistence item and the general overhead item in this bill.

Now, this deficiency committee comes back, Mr. Chairman, and restores that item to $400 per man to where it was before. They put in the $600 per man for the pay and subsistence item, and put back $404 per man for the overhead item in the face of the committee adjustment of $350.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Michigan 5 additional minutes.

Mr. ENGEL. I want to call attention to the way they have juggled those figures in 1939. For instance, we gave them for repairs and alterations about $8,000,000, and they spent $15,000,000. Of course, it was put on a 1,200-camp basis, and they should have a proportionate increase, of course, but they used more than double the amount they justified on a 1,200-camp basis, when this was only a 25-percent increase in camps.

At that time, Mr. Chairman, in speaking on the floor of the House, I called attention to the fact that they had 32,406 civilian employees, most of whom were political, and a great many of whom were appointed from the Friant list. A person can only get on the Friant list by having the endorsement of a Democratic Congressman. I also called attention to the fact that these 32,406 men received $58,234,711 in salary in 1939.

I want to read you what I said on the floor of the House at that time:

> The C. C. C. has been a sacred cow. While the people have worshipped the cow the politicians have milked her. Thirty-two thousand four hundred and six civilian employees, most of whom are political appointees, will receive this year $58,234,711 in salaries, while 270,000 C. C. C. enrollees and their families will receive $101,185,200 in pay. I am not opposing the C. C. C. I am just trying to stop the politicians from milking the sacred cow.

I thought we had stopped the politicians from milking that sacred cow, but, apparently, under this bill, in an election year, they are going to keep right on milking her. I presume it is too much for a Republican to ask a bunch of New Deal Congressmen up for election to stop milking that sacred cow in an election year. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] was very much concerned a while ago with the item carried in this bill of $38,000,000 to ease the interest load on the farmers of this country because the bankers would get the money. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is always bringing up questions of money. I am sorry he is not in the Chamber now. I wonder if he ever makes a study of the daily balance sheet issued by the Treasury Department giving us the figures on silver and gold and money in this country; and something which does not appear on the sheet but which we all know about, the interest that the bankers are collecting as a price of circulating the bulk of our currency. By examining the Treasurer's statement of September 18 we find there are gold certificate funds, Board of Governors, Federal Reserve System, $15,940,855,670.77. Fifteen billion dollars in gold which we are storing in Kentucky and for which the Federal Reserve System holds warehouse receipts. Does that money belong to the Government or does it belong to the Federal Reserve? It is the basis of our currency. Circulating as money against that hoard of gold, in the form of Federal Reserve notes and Federal Reserve bank notes we find as of August 31 there are $5,355,345,031. We are circulating in currency against that hoard of gold only about one-third of its value in money.

I would like to have the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], when he is complaining about the bankers getting this money that is appropriated to relieve the interest load on the farmers, explain to me how any dollar of Federal Reserve notes will circulate unless some firm or individual pays the interest to support and keep that money in circulation. That is the system we are working under, and that is the interest income that the bankers are drawing from the circulation of money in this country. Let anybody explain to me how any dollar of Federal Reserve notes can circulate unless somebody pays interest all the time it is in circulation. Let the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], if he is so solicitous about the money that is being drawn out of business to pay the bankers of the country, study the daily financial statements of the Treasury and help us work out some workable money system that will relieve business and the people of this country of this huge interest load.

I want to refer the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] to another item of the Treasury statement, and that is the item of silver about which he makes so much complaint. We find there are silver certificates outstanding as of September 18, $1,841,096,901; almost $2,000,000,000. When we add the silver dollars in circulation making about $2,000,000,000 of silver money in the tills and in the pockets of our people in the form of $1, $5, and $10 silver certificates, good legal tender money. And, remember, members of the Committee, that that money circulates free of interest and does not cost the Government a dime except the cost of printing the silver certificates. That is the big item. That is the objection to silver money—it does not pay the banker interest and displaces the equivalent in interest-yielding Federal Reserve currency. That is the reason they are so solicitous about discarding silver and increasing the interest load on the American people. As against the interest paid on Federal Reserve notes as the price of circulating money in this country, what is $38,000,000 carried in this bill that will ease the interest load on the farmer? Talk about the bankers getting interest; they are getting the farms. In a great many agricultural States in this country half the farms are owned by the insurance companies and the banks and the farmers who have developed those farms are mere tenants.

Let us continue this item. Let us pass this bill and ease the interest load on our farmers. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 24 minutes.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, this bill carries a lot of money, something like $300,000,000, including direct appropriations and contract authorizations. A large portion of it is alleged to be for national defense. Actually, with the exception of a few dollars for the Coast Guard, there is none of it for national defense.

It calls for something like $40,000,000 for the vocational-training outfit and the Bureau of Education, to set up vocational training for men who might work in industry. It provided thirty-odd million dollars for the N. Y. A. That is perhaps the most ridiculous performance of the whole lot. [Applause.]

I call attention to page 26 of the supplemental hearings, where a break-down is given of the operations that they propose to perform with that $30,000,000. It runs something like this: For pay of students or people who are enrolled, $11,000,000. For pay of supervisory employees, $4,800,000, indicating that it is proposed to set up at least one supervisory employee for every five employees, a most ridiculous situation.

Then in spite of the fact that they have stated to the committee that they have entered into an agreement with the vocational-education outfit that they will not go into training, they propose to spend $8,000,000 of this $30,000,000 for construction and equipment of factory stuff. The two stories do not go together and it presents a set-up of the most ridiculous waste and extravagance.

If we are going to escape from the present situation which we are in, with reference to national defense, it is time for us to begin to conserve.

It is time for us to stop foolish appropriations and begin to sift out the things that are most needed. Otherwise we are not going to be able to carry this country through. My own experience is that these boys who have been to the N. Y. A. and the C. C. C. are totally unfitted for anything when they get out and that their effectiveness and productivity is practically ruined. We have gone about working out of this depression trying to make everybody dependent upon the Government rather than urging them to work out of it by their own efforts. The further we go in making people dependent on government, the worse off the country becomes, because there has never been any way out of a depression except that of the people working harder and harder and putting more of themselves into the effort. The more we encourage reliance on a way that is absolutely nonproductive of anything toward national defense, the worse off we are going to be.

Something like $30,000,000 is provided to embark upon a program of constructing airports all over the country, and the propaganda that has been designed is something like this: A proposal for 4,000 airports and reconstructed airports, and they have knocked them around the country in such fashion that there will be two or three, and maybe four or five, in every congressional district, so that we shall be sufficiently deluded that we shall think we are going to have an airport in our own district; but we are not. The whole program before they get through with it would cost something like a billion dollars, and things are not going to be so that a billion dollars can be available for that performance.

Then, again, it is under the direction of the C. A. A. You will remember they had charge of supervising airports under the W. P. A. and the P. W. A. Amongst others, they had charge of this one across the river. This one across the river is probably as good an example as any. Before it is through it is going to cost something like $18,000,000. The joint board that investigated the proposition of locating an airport near the District of Columbia chose the Gravelly Point site and itemized what it would cost. Their total was around $4,800,000. It is costing only from four to five times as much as it ought to under the direction of this outfit. They are not the people to do this kind of work, anyway, and we are not going to reach anything like the goal we should reach under their management.

It has been said there are only a few airports capable of accommodating the big bombers, 36 I think. We have not many of the big bombers. Outside of those that are on the carriers, my understanding is that at the present time we have something like 60 or 70. If we do not give them away before then we may have 150 in another year. We are not suffering very badly from the standpoint of space to put those bombers or for them to land on.

There are at the present time all sorts of schools for flying. Our pursuit planes can land on thousands of fields. Even the big bombers can land on grass fields in probably 300 or 400 places, because it only takes a little less than 3,000 feet for them to land on grass rather than concrete. I do not believe we are justified at this time in going on with that program under that outfit.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Can the gentleman tell me if sites have been selected in the various districts where the airports will be located?

Mr. TABER. No; they have not been selected. There was presented to the committee a list of 4,000 places where airports either existed or might exist, and an estimate of the Government's portion of the cost of airports in these places.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Is that list in the hearings?

Mr. TABER. Anyone who wants it can obtain it from the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Are the reconstructed airports to be made suitable for the landing of the bombing planes, or are they simply to be enlarged to accommodate such planes as are in use at the present time?

Mr. TABER. I should think that out of those that are not now able to accommodate big bombers on concrete runways, probably 30 or 40 were projected to be large enough to do so. It is not proposed to make the majority of the airports large enough for anything of that character.

Mr. CRAWFORD. One additional question if the gentleman will permit: Is it intended to reconstruct the present operating airports in such manner that most of them will accommodate these large passenger ships, the ships that carry from 14 to 21 passengers?

Mr. TABER. No; it is not. I should say that in the matter of class 3 airports it is proposed to make probably 75 of them large enough for that purpose.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. RABAUT. Will not the gentleman explain the four types of air fields?

Mr. TABER. Yes. There are four types of air fields. One is a very small type with runways about 1,800 feet in length.

Mr. RABAUT. And they are grass-covered fields.

Mr. TABER. On the other hand most of these fields can be extended to provide runways of 2,500 feet by placing the runways in diagonal directions.

Class 2 airports are supposed to have runways 2,500 feet in length. I imagine most of those would run 3,000 feet or perhaps 3,500 feet. Then class 3 would be the type that would accommodate the passenger planes carrying 10 or 12 passengers. I would hardly think they would be good enough for the largest plane that flies. The class 4 type would be confined to the very largest places and would have runways of 5,000 feet.

Mr. RABAUT. And multiple runways.

Mr. TABER. Several of them, so perhaps more than one plane could land and take off at a time. There would not be so many of those. They would be the only ones that really could be sure of handling the big bombers on a concrete runway. But on a grass runway I think most of the class 2 outfits would take care of them in moderate weather.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. In connection with those airports, is it provided that underground hangars be built where they may be protected from bombing?

Mr. TABER. No. That has not been discussed at all before our committee and I do not think the proposition is as important here as it might be farther away from us. The only approach that an enemy bomber might have to us would be from a carrier and our defense against them would be largely pursuit planes. There would not be very much chance on most of these fields of an enemy bomber getting in.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. They do have underground hangars in Europe and in England, do they not?

Mr. TABER. Yes; but their situation is altogether different from ours. The distances over there are so short you could cross any of them while you are going across the State of Pennsylvania.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Has it been considered in connection with this appropriation—Fort Devens, a very fine field, and they also could have underground hangars there?

Mr. TABER. No Army airport has been considered for anything in connection with these civil airports, and should not be because the Army should be given complete authority and control over its own set-up. It would be a great mistake for anybody to attempt to take the Army airports away from them.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Could some of this money be used for those airports?

Mr. TABER. There is plenty of money for the Army for its own airports.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. The gentleman some time ago, in a conversation with his colleagues, mentioned a list of proposed sites.

Mr. TABER. A mimeographed list of proposed sites was presented to the committee containing, as they said, 4,000 places. I did not add them up so I would not guarantee it.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. May I ask the gentleman where we could get such a list?

Mr. TABER. From the Civil Aeronautics Authority. I think they have it available. It is a public document at the present time, because it was submitted to us. We did not publish it due to the fact it was so voluminous we did not feel justified in doing so. It is over at the committee room and is a part of our file of hearings. I am sure it is available to anyone who wants to see it there. The Commission would probably be glad to give the gentleman a copy. It is entirely civil, nothing else.

Mr. Chairman, I want to take up two or three other things. An application was made to us for funds for enforcement of the Hatch Act. An allowance was made along these lines of $10,000 to the Department of Justice and $100,000 to the Civil Service Commission. The Department of Justice had no cases and the Civil Service Commission had had six, with one now pending. How important they were the Commission could not say.

In the Department of Justice this is under the direction of O. John Rogge, who is in charge of the Criminal Division of the Department of Justice. At the time the hearings were being held I called attention to the fact that no indictments had been attempted by Rogge in Louisiana against these W. P. A. fellows who built W. P. A. activities on private property, who operated on the asphalt contracts, limiting the operations to one bid, who helped remove streetcar rails for the benefit of a public-utility corporation, who built a maintenance garage without authority of law, who worked on the yacht-basin project, who worked on everything else except the projects that they were supposed to be working on, and who worked upon the development of an amusement park that was operated by a private concessionaire, entirely in violation of the W. P. A. statute. There were a great many other projects down there that were irregular, and certainly some of them were bad enough so that some of these fellows who were in charge of the W. P. A. should have been given a twist before the grand jury in Louisiana. Nothing of that kind was done.

Amongst other high points in Mr. Rogge's record is the continued suppressing of the 22 indictments for internal-revenue tax violations in New Orleans, which have been hanging for 4 or 5 years. There is also the delay in the trial of indictments of W. P. A. in Indiana. There is also the freeing of 125 who were indicted by a Federal grand jury for violation of section 28 of the Emergency Relief Act in Minneapolis last February.

I hesitated to vote to give money to this man for anything else. I feel that the record of the Department of Justice in connection with the prosecution of indictments and the bringing of offenders to justice has been such that it does not merit the confidence of the people. I am sorry to have to take that kind of a position, but that record has been rather continuous, it has been rather persistent, and it has been disgusting to one who believes in fair enforcement of the law.

There is another item here for the Federal Communications Commission involving $125,000 for operating on the telephone outfits. They claimed to us that they had authority to regulate telephone rates. As I read the statute this authority does not exist. They are only given authority to stipulate rates in case of a consolidation, under my interpretation of the statute, and I am disappointed to find that what they told us there does not seem to pan out.

Then there is $137,000 for the Bituminous Coal Commission, just to give them a little more money to spend. This outfit has not accomplished anything, and I believe it is a menace to the coal industry. All in all, I do not believe there are very many items in this bill that really should receive the approval of the Congress. I do not know to how many of them I shall offer amendments, but I will start in and get as far as I can in trying to clean up some of the situations that have developed.

When we bring in a bill for nearly $300,000,000 at a time when we are all stretching ourselves out of shape and voting for national defense tremendous items, when we really are not sure they are needed, but are doing it in order to be sure that nothing can happen to the country, we should not be reaching out and trying to build up activities which have no excuse for their existence. I hope there may be some spirit of economy on the part of the House as these amendments are offered. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe there is a Member of the House, and certainly no member of the committee, who works more diligently, who goes more thoroughly into the facts, than the distinguished gentleman from New York, my colleague, the ranking member of the Committee on Appropriations. He is always informed. He is is always fair, and he is always accurate. However, this once, "even Homer nods," and by a remarkable exception to the usual rule I find that, in addition to the remarks he has just made, the gentleman from New York on September 13, on page 12118 of the RECORD, said:

Mr. Speaker, I notice by the Treasury statement that is available this morning the expenditures for N. Y. A., C. C. C., and the W. P. A. are now running at a rate higher than a year ago, in spite of the fact that employment figures went up net in June 250,000 in July 100,000, and in August 250,000.

Now, unfortunately for the acceptance of these comparative statistics, I have here the daily statements of the United States Treasury for those dates cited by the gentleman, and find that while he is eminently correct in his statement that employment figures have been going up steadily, 250,000 in June, 100,000 in July, and 250,000 in August, through some error he has mistaken the relative amounts expended for these purposes for the present year as compared with last year. For example, here is the daily statement of the Treasury for July 31, 1940, which shows that total W. P. A. checks paid during July 1940 amounted to $110,124,000. This figure, instead of being more than the comparable figure for the previous year, was $39,224,000 less than in July 1939.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. If the gentleman has with him and available the statement of September 13, if that was the day to which I referred, he will find that the current monthly expenditures for all three of those outfits for the month of September were higher than they were the previous September. I believe the gentleman will find that. I know I did when I looked at it.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. In response to the gentleman's suggestion, here is the statement of September 13, 1940. The Works Progress Administration expenditures, according to the daily statement of the Treasury Department as of September 13, 1940, were $45,684,959.46, and on the corresponding day of the previous year, 1939, they were $46,863,677.17; in other words, $1,178,717.71 less this year than last year.

Mr. TABER. Is the gentleman referring to the year's figures or the month's figures?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I am referring to the comparative analysis of receipts and expenditures, September 13, 1940, from the Treasury Statement for the Works Progress Administration.

Mr. TABER. I believe if the gentleman would look at the monthly figures he would find that my statement was correct for the current month. That is what I was referring to.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The Treasury's statement here is not broken down by months but that is immaterial. The real question at issue is whether the gentleman's statement indicates increasing expenditure when, as a matter of fact, expenditures are decreasing. The actual statement here shows that in each of these instances the amount spent this year was materially less than the previous year, instead of being more than the previous year, which was the impression the gentleman had. In other words, on all these items we are constantly decreasing expenditure and at the same time employment figures are rising. We are keeping faith and redeeming pledges to take up the slack in unemployment and at the same time W. P. A. is keeping faith by consistently reducing expenditure.

Then the gentleman makes this statement in his remarks:

They are trying to frame the thing up so that these three incompetent outfits can be a refuge for all draft dodgers.

Of course, we all know that employment in either the W. P. A., the N. Y. A., or the C. C. C. will not exempt anyone from the provisions of the Selective Training Act of 1940. So the gentleman is certainly as much mistaken in that unfortunate statement as in his comparison of annual expenditures. These activities cannot be a refuge for draft dodgers because men employed in any of them are still subject to every provision of the Selective Training Act. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

Salaries and expenses: For an additional amount for salaries and expenses, Federal Communications Commission, including the objects and subject to the limitations specified under this head in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1941, $125,000: Provided, That the limitation in such act of $1,246,340 which may be expended under this head for personal services in the District of Columbia is hereby increased to $1,350,000.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: On pages 4 and 5, after line 20, on page 4, strike out lines 21 to 25, and lines 1 to 4, inclusive, on page 5.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, this is the item for the Federal Communications Commission to which I referred when I was up here before. It was turned down by the regular Independent Offices Committee last winter. It was turned down by the Deficiency Committee on two occasions, and still it is back here.

When the members of the Commission were up in front of us they told us they were charged under the law with the regulation of telephone rates. The provision with reference to that is section 221 of title XLVII of the code, and it provides that in cases of consolidation the Commission will be required to approve of the rates before the consolidation can go through. However, it does not give the Commission the right to have control over the rates. Under the circumstances, it looks to me as if money was secured from the committee under false representations. I do not believe they need it. They already have a very large number of employees on the roll, 40 or 50, working on telephone operations. Under the circumstances, I believe we ought to save $125,000 and throw out this item. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, referring to page 28 of the hearings where we had an outline of the act inserted, section 205 charges the Commission with the duty of prescribing just and reasonable charges for telephone companies and other common carriers and the situation is simply this: The organic law places upon the Federal Communications Commission a specific duty with reference to telephone rates and Congress, except when special funds were given for a special investigation, has never given them any personnel or any funds to carry out these duties. This is a very small amount and a very small set-up to perform very important duties, and I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 21, noes 37.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Such act is further amended by adding after the last sentence under such heading the following:

"Notwithstanding the limitation herein on expenditures by the Office of the Director within the District of Columbia, the Director, Civilian Conservation Corps, in administering the funds herein appropriated is authorized, with the approval of the Federal Security Administrator, to fix the amount of and to transfer to the Office of the Director the funds necessary to carry out the functions transferred, with the approval of the Federal Security Administrator, from cooperatiing agencies to the Office of the Director."

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BLAND). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, lines 20 and 21, on page 5, seem to indicate that the amount in this section has been reduced. Can that be correct and proper, or is it a typographical error?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. If the gentleman will yield, it is not a reduction in the amount of the funds, but is a reallocation of the funds.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. That answers my question. I thought it could not possibly be a reduction of the appropriation. I have not seen anything like that since I have been in Congress.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. There are many places where there ought to be reductions, but not in the Civilian Conservation Corps, I would say to the gentleman.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I thank the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Cooperative vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry: For an additional amount for carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry," approved June 2, 1920, as amended, $319,500.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LUDLOW: On page 10, after line 18, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"No trainee under the foregoing appropriations shall be discriminated against because of sex, race, or color, and where separate schools are required by law for separate population groups, to the extent needed for trainees of each such group, equitable provision shall be made for facilities and training of like quality."

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I propose has the support and, in fact, was initiated by the Federal Security Agency, and has approval of the Council of National Defense and of the Budget Bureau. It would provide in respect of the trainees who are to be recruited under these two activities, the Office of Education and the National Youth Administration, the same freedom from discrimination that is contained in the conscription law. If this provision is not inserted in the present law you will have one provision with reference to the draftees under the conscription law and a lack of the same provision in its application to the training under this act.

I have here a letter from Mr. Wayne Coy, Acting Administrator of the Federal Security Agency, sent to me a few moments ago, which I would like to read:

FEDERAL SECURITY AGENCY,
Washington, September 23, 1940.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. LUDLOW: This is in answer to your request for advice as to the attitude of this agency toward the incorporation in the provisions for an expanded national-defense program the following:

"No trainee shall be discriminated against because of age, sex, race, or color, and where separate schools are required by law for separate population groups, to the extent needed for trainees of each such group equitable provision shall be made for facilities and training of like quality."

It is the position of this Agency that such a provision as the one quoted above is highly desirable. The language of the provision is such as not to in any way interfere with the proposed training program, and makes it clear that the training program for national defense will be in no way warped by any discrimination because of age, sex, race, or color. It further appears to follow the labor policies recently published by the Advisory Commission to the Council of National Defense.

I am advised by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget that this proposed amendment would not be at variance with the program of the President.

Sincerely yours,

WAYNE COY,
Acting Administrator.

I think the proposed amendment speaks for itself. As I say, it has the backing of the Federal Security Administration, and it also has the support and approval of the Advisory Commission of the Council of National Defense, which finds it to be in harmony with its labor policy; and of the Budget Bureau, which finds it to be in harmony with the program of the President. It injects no new policies into the administration of our laws but merely makes this act in respect of training conform to the policy already determined upon by Congress in respect to conscriptees under the new Conscription Act. I respectfully ask the Committee to adopt the amendment.

I am happy to offer this amendment because it gives to the colored people of our country an assurance that there will be no discrimination against them in training for national defense. In every war in which our country has engaged Negroes have responded to the call of our country and have demonstrated their loyalty and devotion in every way. Now that our beloved country is face to face with another emergency, they are manifesting the same spirit of patriotism that has guided them in former crises of our national history, and the amendment I have offered would remove racial barriers and guarantee their right to serve. [Applause.]

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries and other administrative expenses specified in paragraph 2 of such act, $1,941,063, of which sum not to exceed $250,000 may be transferred to appropriations of the Treasury Department in accordance with the provisions of such paragraph.

For printing and binding, $23,562.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the desk. Mr. Chairman, there is also another amendment of like character for the next paragraph. I ask unanimous consent that the two amendments may be considered together. The amendment is to strike out the paragraph in each instance.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York that the two amendments may be considered at the same time?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: On page 11, strike out lines 9 to 15, inclusive.

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: On page 11, strike out lines 16 to 20, inclusive.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, this is a scheme to add $32,000,000 to the National Youth Administration. Let me give you the break-down:

Youth employees, $11,900,000.

Supervisory employees, $4,802,000.

Total personal services, $16,706,000.

Equipment and buildings, $8,875,000.

Now, this is one of the sorriest exhibitions that any bureau or department ever presented to the Appropriations Committee, asking for one-third as much for supervisory employees as they did for the youth employees, indicating great incompetence, great waste, and a most ridiculous set-up.

It is not surprising the results we get from this kind of management. Aubrey Williams runs this outfit. He agreed, according to the testimony given before our committee, that he would keep away from this idea of training youth in industry. At the same time he wants $8,800,000 for equipment and buildings and he wants one-third as much for supervisory employees as he wants for the youth employees.

The whole proposition is perfectly ridiculous.

There is nothing going to result along this line for national defense. It is just a terrific, ridiculous waste, getting in a lot of people who ought not be there. We are establishing a precedent that will be hard to get away from. It is not contributing to national defense. It is working steadily and vigorously against national defense.

I hope that the House will adopt these amendments and try to clear up this situation.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the representatives of the Advisory Commission to the Council of National Defense came before the committee, two gentlemen who have been recruited to the Defense Commission from private industry, both occupying very high, responsible positions, one with the Standard Oil Co. and one with the Western Electric Co., and they made a very strong and very emphatic statement to the subcommittee, which will be found fully set out in the hearings, about the value of this training.

This is supposed to give to the National Youth Administration additional funds with which to have work projects for unemployed youth. We have also provided for their training for the defense program under the Office of Education.

I do not want to take the time of the Committee, because I am sure it is not necessary, but I hope very much that the gentleman's amendments will not prevail.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendments.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] usually opposes any appropriation for N. Y. A. Surely he must be unable to see the regenerative power in our human society which education in general, and that type in particular, has. However, I feel constrained to speak, also along with the chairman of the subcommittee, in favor of this appropriation.

Something has been said about this being in no wise a part of our defense program. I think it is a vital part of our defense program. We have just voted billions of dollars for the building of war machines as a part of our national defense. We have recently passed a bill for the training of the manpower for those war machines, all of which is logical and necessary in the interest of national defense. Several of our Members have pointed out that the training of our defenders of America does not consist alone in the purely military training which these young men will receive in camps. That is only a part of it. Wars of the future will be more and more wars of machines. For that reason we ought to support heartily all of the provisions here for vocational training, for mechanical science and skill, for the increased power of the N. Y. A., all to the same purpose, training young men—and from the amendment added a moment ago, also young women—for a part in our defense program. At the same time we will be giving them vocational training which will stand them in good stead in peacetimes. So it is necessary that we have young men trained in industrial arts, not only in schools, but in factories as well, so they may play their part, whether in the Army or behind the lines in this defense program.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I yield.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. How does the gentleman propose to reconcile the program of the N. Y. A. in vocational training and that which is now being conducted under the Smith-Hughes Act, the George Act, under the Office of Education? It seems to me there is an overlapping of authority.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. There may be some overlapping. It is logical to expect some but we must minimize it. As a school man I want to see less overlapping and a coordinating of all these agencies which I believe is possible and which is planned. I do not want to see any new educational agencies set up, as that would involve expensive new equipment, and only such new shops as local needs require. I believe that a part of this training should be done with the same equipment that we have been using under the Smith-Hughes Act, merely doubling the use of the school plant by increasing the appropriation and the instructional force in that respect.

Good instructors and actual power equipment are needed in the school shops. A part of this training may be done in factories.

The N. Y. A. should and probably will coordinate with Vocational Education by hooking together the shops in these schools and making the results in these shops such that they will not everlap but will supplement and complement each other.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. As a matter of fact—and I would like to be corrected if I am wrong—my understanding is that the provisions of this bill for the Office of Education taken together with the provision for the N. Y. A. are aimed to accomplish the very thing the gentleman had reference to. I also have in my hand here, if I may make this additional statement, a letter from the chairman of the California Committee of Junior College and Trade School Administrators of the whole State where they have gone over this whole program and recommend that the very thing be done which, if I can read correctly, has been done in this bill. The whole school system of California will agree to cooperate on this very program that is being carried out. Most of it will not cost the Government a cent. Most of it will be done by the schools in cooperation with and supplementing the work experience these boys get in the N. Y. A. and regular schools.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. The chairman was exactly right when he said that experts and members of the Council for National Defense have advised that this sort of program be carried out; and that is the way, to my best knowledge, the educators of this country feel, and here is the place where they may have their distinctive part in the total training program. This type of training certainly appeals to me. Let us not cut out any of it. The two amendments offered by the gentleman from New York should be voted down.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, it is with reluctance that I disagree with the ranking Member on our side with whom it is my pleasure very frequently to agree. The National Youth Administration has been a matter of very great interest to me because of my own contact with educational problems for many years during a time when I was a school teacher myself and a member of the Portland school committee, and also of the Committee on Education of the Maine Legislature.

I think the answer to the immediate problem we face is found in the fact that it is a condition and not a theory that confronts us. Hundreds of thousands of trained mechanics are urgently required. The working span of a mechanic averages only 25 years. Their ranks have been greatly depleted during the last two decades when practically no apprentices have been trained. The National Youth Administration has been seeking to fill this need. The gentleman who offers the amendment suggests that they have not in any way served this purpose. That I think is not correct.

Mr. TABER. I think, if the gentleman would yield, there is not any question that they have not in any way supplied trained mechanics to the industries of this country.

Mr. BREWSTER. Would the gentleman feel differently if he found that he were wrong on that score? Would he perhaps be somewhat more lenient in this matter?

Mr. TABER. I am sure I am not wrong, because, if I had been, Mr. Williams would have claimed it when he was before the committee.

Mr. BREWSTER. I do not know as to Mr. Williams' testimony before the committee, but I know of my own personal experience during the last year and a half that boys have been trained as mechanics and are now filling jobs as mechanics in the State of Maine trained in the N. Y. A. trade school with a year's training. This is a matter that is under my own personal observation and is the reason for my rising here. I cannot undertake to speak regarding the experience or practice elsewhere, but I know that this has actually been carried out. It is naturally not a perfected system in the course of 1 or 2 years, but it is the only real endeavor to meet this problem, as the public-school systems, with their vocational education, have never been able—for reasons that my time will not permit me here to discuss—to do this job. Trade-unions have said they do not object to the vocational education of the public-school system because it never produced any trained mechanics.

The N. Y. A. schools that I have observed are going a long way in that direction, and I have no question but that within the next 6 months at least between 100 and 200 more trained mechanics will emerge from the N. Y. A. schools in the State of Maine ready to fill jobs that urgently require filling in the interest of our national defense. For this reason I hope these N. Y. A. schools may be permitted to carry on and expand to some degree this work. One may recognize the possibility of overlapping, duplication, and conflict and yet recognize also that the public-school system of this country in large measure has absolutely failed to fill this bill, and that unless we take some step along this line there seems no way in which we can meet the challenge of the mechanized autocracies overseas. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 2 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

On your desk this morning was a long list from the Civil Service Commission stating some 30 or 40 different types of mechanics needed in connection with the defense program. I have surveyed my own district. We have no facilities there for the practical training of young men for these places that are open. It seems to me if you will make the same survey, unless you happen to have an arsenal in your district, or a shipbuilding plant in your district, you will realize there are very few in your district that today have the opportunity to train themselves to be ready to take their part in the national-defense program from the standpoint of the industrial needs.

During the coming months many industries are going to be stimulated by the national-defense program. These industries are going to employ more workers. They will be seeking workers who have had at least some working experience. However, thousands of youths who are looking for jobs today have had no such experience.

For example, of the youth coming on to National Youth Administration projects, half have never held a job, while another 40 percent have held jobs which have given them little or no work experience of value. In other words, 90 percent of the youth who have been entering the rolls of the National Youth Administration would otherwise have had little chance of getting a job if they had applied with one of the defense industries. The employers would have said to these youth, "No experience, then no job."

There is thus a dire need among unemployed youth for work experience. They must be given this work experience if we are to make a dent in the problems of unemployed youth. The National Youth Administration is today giving such a job-qualifying experience to more than 250,000 youth. But there are many other youth, now outside the National Youth Administration, who should also be given this opportunity of bettering their chances of getting private employment. On July 31 there were 450,000 youth, eligible for N. Y. A. employment, who were waiting assignment to N. Y. A. projects, who were waiting their turn to get a well-rounded experience that would help them obtain the jobs that are being created by the national-defense program.

In my own State of Georgia, for example, there were 15,251 youth who were certified and waiting assignment to National Youth Administration projects. I would like to see many of these youth and other youth now waiting assignment given the opportunity to work and to receive the significant values that come from work. It is important to these youth that they get this opportunity. It is also important to the national-defense program that there be a reservoir of experienced workers upon which they can draw in this national emergency.

Because so many youth have never held jobs, they are the last to be hired by industry. They are not receiving their fair share of the openings that occur in private employment. Placements made by State employment offices during the year ending May 1940 show that youth received but 25 percent of the jobs. They would have received at least one-third of the jobs if they had been hired in proportion to their number among the unemployed.

The National Youth Administration has been doing a splendid job in preparing youth for private employment. Over 100,000 left the N. Y. A. rolls during the year ending May 1940 to enter private industry. This program should be expanded to meet the need for experienced workers in defense industries.

The National Youth Administration is, at this moment, in touch with some 450,000 youth who are in need both of jobs and of work experience. The amendment to strike out this supplemental appropriation should be voted down and we should give the boys the type of work experience that will help them get their fair share of the jobs that are going to open up during the coming critical months.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTINGENT AND MISCELLANEOUS

Reunion of United Confederate Veterans: The sum of $12,500 provided by the Second Deficiency Appropriation Act, 1940, approved June 27, 1940 (Public Act No. 668, 76th Cong.), for expenses of the reunion of United Confederate Veterans to be held in Washington, D. C., in 1940, is hereby made available for expenditure by the Commissioners of such District, notwithstanding the provisions of any other act, for the payment of such expenses as they may deem necessary for and in connection with such reunion including the payment of obligations heretofore incurred.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the Deficiency Committee about this $12,500 item which we are appropriating for the reunion of the United Confederate Veterans. I know that the hearings show that this matter was gone into very carefully. A number of people have asked me on numerous occasions whether or not this appropriation is now in such shape that it may be utilized by the District of Columbia in providing for this reunion of the United Confederate Veterans. May I ask the chairman if the committee has gone into that fully and if he is absolutely confident this will take care of the situation?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. We understand this clears it so it can be used. The appropriation was made heretofore in a previous bill, but there was some technical question involved with the Comptroller General, but this will turn it loose.

Mr. MAHON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, in taking only 2 or 3 minutes I want to refer to the statements made awhile ago about the activities of the N. Y. A. I have received several letters recently from my State about the N. Y. A. and what it proposes to do. It may be that this agency has been doing quite a lot of good work, but when it comes to training folks in my State in mechanics or in any other trade work I do not believe very much has been accomplished.

This is a very important matter, one that I am deeply interested in. My thought is that you are creating another activity that, like all other programs, will call for large increases in personnel and the increasing of appropriations with the spending of a lot of money without accomplishing very much. We have already started with certain appropriations and we are going to increase them from time to time, in an endeavor to tie them in with the public schools or with some other agency to do that which we ought to have been doing all these years. One of the most important things in this country is training boys and girls to do something. It is pitiful to me to see in our public-school system today that they are teaching boys and girls Latin and various other studies when perhaps 75 percent of them will never see the inside of a college. When they have finished the eleventh grade they have not been trained to do a single thing.

This will never be accomplished until we pass proper legislation through the Congress appropriating the necessary money to set up facilities in connection with the public high schools and establish rules and regulations in cooperation with State legislatures to carry out a program of definitely training boys and girls to do things. I am very fearful that in these appropriations we are making for the N. Y. A. in the name of teaching the boys and girls along trade lines we will be spending more money without receiving any real good results.

I find since I have been a Member of Congress that the tendency on the part of those who have charge of the various departments of Government is to stress the need of increased appropriations, the employing of more people for the purpose of trying to secure actual results by what they call an educational system.

This is usually a long drawn out program, and one which, as a rule, never accomplishes that which we have in mind. In other words: "Give us the money and leave it to us to set up the various bureaus and activities, and we will eventually get it down to the people, and we will sooner or later get results."

We have been appropriating millions for research, new uses for cotton, for instance. However, you cannot show me any really definite results except annual reports to the Congress.

Take the operations of the Forest Laboratory at Madison, Wis. I had the privilege sometime ago of visiting and going through several buildings which are being used for this line of work. I found the work at this laboratory very interesting, and, apparently, in a great many instances, they are doing some wonderful work. However, as usual, it is on the inside. In other words, we are not actually getting definite results on the outside, getting them down to the people.

They are sending out pamphlets, booklets, and they carry beautiful stories in the press; but, as a matter of fact, only a very few well-organized and well-financed groups are putting into operation the findings in connection with this work. In other words, we are not getting our money's worth. The type of people who should have this information, and who should reap the benefits from these findings, know nothing about it.

We have been spending millions in connection with our Extension Service work in trying to educate farmers how to do things, how to get results; but we have gotten very small definite results during all of these years. In fact, under the agricultural program during the last 3 or 4 years, we have accomplished more in building up our soils, increasing production per acre and in improving farm products than we have done all of these past years.

Now, the reason for this is that we are definitely having farmers to do those things which they should have been doing all of these years, that which we have been trying to educate them to do for the reason farmers are complying because of certain benefits received for their compliance under the rules and regulations governing soil building, improvements, and so forth.

Why, back in the old days, when I used to furnish farmers fertilizer and supplies for the purpose of producing their crops, it was a matter of planting all the acres they could in cotton without doing the things that they should do to increase the production per acre.

During those years they would produce anywhere from 100 to 250 pounds of lint cotton per acre.

Under the present program, wherein we have allotted to them a certain acreage, giving them the definite right to sell all that they can produce on this acreage, they have actually increased the production up to as high as two bales of cotton, or 1,000 pounds of lint, per acre. The average in South Carolina for 1939 will be about 350 pounds per acre.

Some time ago I had a conference with Dr. Studebaker, from the Office of Education here in Washington, and he definitely understands the real picture of the situation about which I am talking, but apparently Dr. Studebaker, like all other Government officials and employees, is perfectly willing to spend more money in creating committees, like they are doing under the N. Y. A. for the purpose of cooperating with the officials of the public schools of the country, to advise and talk about these things.

I am anxious to see the members of the Committee on Education call on Dr. Studebaker for the purpose of working out a definite bill authorizing millions annually in aiding the States under proper State laws and State supervision, rules, and regulations to actually create proper facilities, which the high schools do not have at this time, to actually and definitely train boys and girls to do something with their hands.

We are now building electric lines in all of the rural sections of the country. It is important that we put on a program of building community and cooperative industries and woodworking plants.

Think what it would mean to farmers, the unemployed, and to boys and girls when they have finished high school, if they have been properly trained so as to be able to engage in the various lines of work where we need so many trained people today, at a time when we do not have them.

As stated, it is pitiful to me having boys and girls who finish high school, and who have an ambition to make good, write in with the hope of getting work with some industry or with the Government, and when asked: "What training have you had, or what line of work can you do?" to have them write back, saying: "I have had no training, but I am sure I could do filing or some kind of office work."

I have had school teachers communicate with me about securing work with the various departments of Government, and, in that they have had no special training except to teach, the only position they can apply for is filing or office work.

We need the youth of the country trained to do something which, as far as I am concerned, is more important to millions of boys and girls than even finishing the eleventh grade in the public schools of the country.

I am speaking about the million of boys and girls who will never have an opportunity to secure a college education. Many of these boys and girls possess the best brains and the best possibilities of making a fair income and a name for themselves, if they only had a chance.

Let us actually do it—let us give them a chance.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it was not my purpose to offer any observations of my own here this afternoon, but in view of the remarks that my good friend from California offered heretofore relative to the National Labor Relations Board I would like to set this House at ease concerning that which has just now been read by the Clerk, expressly stipulating that none of the appropriation for the Board shall be used for the Division of Economic Research or the Division of Economic Service.

Several months ago—since June 1 to be exact—this House passed by a 2 to 1 vote amendments to the National Labor Relations Act, but since that time the Committee on Education and Labor in the Senate has seen fit to withhold Senate action upon those amendments. So long as that action is withheld we will have a disturbed labor condition in this country. In view of the other conditions that are confronting us at the present time calling for immediate preparations for national defense, I believe it is high time for affirmative action on the part of the Labor Committee in the Senate, and I say this with all due respect to the committee. On September 11 this year the head of the research department of the National Labor Relations Board, David Saposs, appeared before the Smith committee, and at that time he admitted again to consorting with the Communists of this country and Europe. In addition to that he admitted that he sat in Communist meetings with Earl Browder and other "reds." He says he is not a Communist. I do not know how we can prove a man to be a Communist unless we know his mental processes or unless we can prove that he carries a Communist card. He does admit that he is a Socialist, of some sort or other, and that his socialism is based upon the teachings of Karl Marx. Whether he is a Communist or Socialist makes very little difference in determining his subversive beliefs and influence, and I shall read just a few little excerpts which prove that he believes in the overthrow of our present Government by force.

I read from the publication Labor Age, of December 1931, in which he made the following statement:

> As for democracy, the opposition also wants to safeguard it. But bourgeois democracy is a sham. When it is evident that socialism is the only remedy it is not worth saving a democracy in which socialist parties only collaborate with capitalism.
> If in the attempt to carry out such a program—

And he is speaking here of the overthrow of the Government—> political action fails, then the workers must unhesitatingly resort to organized force. The International must take the position that if another war occurs the workers will destroy capitalism. With that end in view the workers must be prepared to stretch arms across the frontiers in case of war and definitely win power for themselves.

Another excerpt:

Unless such a movement (of middle class and workers) is brought into being, capitalism will go marching on, with its poverty, misery, and economic insecurity. The time is ripe; have the middle class and workers the will to rise to the occasion?

I could read much more from his writings which indicate that as far as Mr. Saposs, who is the head of the Economic Research Division in the National Labor Relations Board, is concerned, and as far as his actual membership in the Communist Party is concerned, it makes very little difference whether he is a card Communist or not, when his philosophy of "socialism," as he terms it, calls for the overthrow of the Government by force.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROUTZOHN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. Did he make those statements before he was selected by the Government and appointed to this most important position in the Government?

Mr. ROUTZOHN. What I just read was published by him in 1931, which was before the Labor Act was enacted and before he could take office. May I add at this time that the Labor Board itself has defied the Senate and this House in refusing to dismiss the department, headed by Mr. Saposs, and that such conduct of the Board was contrary to a provision in an appropriation bill that was passed by both legislative bodies.

Mr. MICHENER. As I understand, an appropriation bill specifically made provision to do away with the service of this man in connection with the Government, and the Labor Board circumvented that expressed prohibition by the Congress and retained this man in the service.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. The Labor Board defied a mandate of the Senate and this House, contained in an appropriation bill that was passed prior to June 30, this year.

The Clerk read as follows:

Establishment of air-navigation facilities: For an additional amount for the establishment of air-navigation facilities, including the objects specified under this head in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1941, $2,091,000, to remain available until June 30, 1942.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the Civil Aeronautics Authority is to be commended for the promptness and efficiency with which it investigated the crash of the great air liner in Virginia the first of the month. In view of the fact that some partisan suggestion was made with reference to the matter, it is particularly gratifying that an exhaustive investigation of the situation discloses that the accident was unpreventable and could not be charged under any circumstances to delinquency upon the part of any governmental agency.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. In just a minute.

In this connection, as is usually the case in reporting and discussing aviation accidents, there has been frequent comment on the dangers attending travel by air.

It is interesting to note that the actual comparative statistics of transportation show air travel to be the safest method of transportation in use today. This was the first fatality in commercial aviation in 17 months. It was the first accident on this particular line, the Pennsylvania-Central Air Lines, in 14 years of continuous service. Since the last accident of this character in the air more than 2,500,000 passengers have flown a total of more than a billion passenger-miles without a single fatality.

In comparison with this remarkable record, railroad fatalities in the United States from April 1, 1939, to June 31, 1940, according to the Bureau of Railroad Economics, aggregated a total of 5,643 persons killed. Projecting these figures at the same ratio over the 17 months of the record by aviation, it is to be noted that while losing these 25 passengers by aviation we have lost approximately 7,000 people killed on the railroads of the country.

Simultaneously, from April 1, 1939, to June 30, 1940, on the authority of the American Automobile Association, motor vehicle fatalities in the United States amounted to 40,590 people. In other words, extending the statistics just cited to the period of 17 months, which covers the death of these 25 air-line fatalities, there have been killed on the railroads of the country more than 7,000 people and on the highways of the Nation more than 50,000 people, and there has been little comment in the newspapers or over the radio, and no reference to the dangers of rail or highway traffic.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Does the gentleman include employees of the railroads as well as passengers in the 7,000?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The figures include all who have been killed on the railroads, both employees and passengers, just as the statistics cited include both employees and passengers, 4 employees and 21 passengers killed in the Virginia crash.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. That is something different.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. No, it is not different in any respect. The figures just given include all railroad, motor, and aviation fatalities under exactly similar conditions and classifications in all three lines of transportation. They are authoritative and taken from official reports as indicated.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Both employees and passengers?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Both employees and passengers.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAHON. Does the gentleman mean to include those who were killed by trains or who were passengers or employees of the railroads on trains?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. In all these statistics, those of the railroads, those of the highways, and those of the airplanes, we have included both employees and passengers, all those who have been killed on and by these various means of transportation. Classification of fatalities is identical in all three.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I believe this House is fortunate in having men like the gentleman from Missouri to bring before our body these statistics in connection with the safety of air-transport travel in this land. May I just add this further observation: I believe the gentleman made a mistake in giving the number who had been transported over the air lines. The figure is 3,250,000, rather than the 2,500,000 the gentleman used.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I am glad to be corrected. However, the travel was in excess of a billion passenger-miles. The reaction of the country, fortunately, is in proportion to the comparatively slight risk involved. Notwithstanding this one deplorable accident, the most disastrous in the history of either military or civil aviation, there has been no diminution in travel by airway.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I shall be forced to object if the gentleman persists in refusing to yield to me for a question.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I had no intention of refusing to yield to the gentleman. It is my misfortune to have overlooked his request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield now to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. In view of the fact that the C. A. B. was investigating itself, did the gentleman have any doubt from the beginning that this investigation would result in the Board's finding that it was without fault. If there had been any fault found on the part of the Government, then the prophecies of those of us who said that this was the sort of investigation we would have might not have come true, but this whitewash investigation tends to show exactly what we did prophesy, that when the C. A. B. investigates itself it will, after due deliberation, find that there was nothing wrong with what it did.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, this unfortunate accident, one of the most spectacular and most widely discussed in recent times, has been under the white light of investigation from every possible point of view and by every available agency. Every shred of evidence, every source of information, every known witness has been examined and reexamined by the Government, by the owners, by the representatives of the air lines, and especially by the newspapers of the country, and no one out of all this host of investigators has at any time suggested, and I am certain that not even the gentleman himself can suggest, evidence of any kind whatever which tends in the slightest way to indicate there was any dereliction of duty upon the part of any governmental agency.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to my friend the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. The gentleman has referred to the number of casualties on the highways. It it not a fact that the casualties on the highways for any period of time are comparable with the losses of the American forces in the last war?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. If in any battle we should lose as many men as we lose on the highways in 1 year, it would be considered a great catastrophe.

But, Mr. Chairman, I particularly allude to this great disaster because of my warm friendship for, and my long associations with, Senator Ernest Lundeen, who fell with the plane, closing one of the most remarkable careers in the history of the Congress.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Is the gentleman really satisfied that the Civil Aeronautics Bureau, or whoever permitted the ship to take off at the time it did, late, and going into an area of electrical disturbance, was warranted in doing so under the circumstances?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Full evidence on that point was submitted; every one who could give any information was subpenaed, and the evidence adduced was conclusive to the effect that there was nothing unusual in any way in the take-off of this plane, and no variation in any respect from the routine customarily observed in every airport in the country. If the gentleman has anything to the contrary, he should let us know of it.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me before he leaves that subject?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MILLER. As one who uses the airlines almost every week, I admit I was disturbed by the testimony that was under review, to the effect that the ship came back, that the filter was foul and was cleaned, but no effort was made to secure any knowledge about what was fouling the filter. I admit, as one who uses that line a good deal, I would have felt better if they had found what fouled the filter before they let it go out.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The evidence before the investigating board was conclusive on that point. The very fact that the pilot, observing a slightly lowered pressure, returned to the ramp is evidence of the care and precaution observed. It is not unusual for a ship to taxi back for some slight readjustment. The evidence was that he could have continued the flight without cleaning the filter with no prospect of any serious results, but he preferred to return for even this slight and comparatively unimportant readjustment before taking off. There was nothing exceptional about the fouling of the filter. In ordinary use of any engine using that class of fuel there is a slow accretion of dirt in the filter and all filters are periodically cleaned, as they are in an automobile. The very purpose of a filter is to strain impurities from the gas. All evidence shows that the filter had nothing to do with the accident as both motors were functioning perfectly at full speed when the ship crashed.

Mr. MILLER. Was not the answer, when that question was asked, to the effect they did not know why it fouled? I attended the hearing of the testimony and I thought I heard that answer given and I was disturbed about it.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman must have misunderstood the purport of the evidence. No one at any time intimated that it was anything more than the natural accumulation strained from the fuel and in no way connected with the cause of the crash.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. The gentleman asked if I had any suggestions as to any faults. In answering, I want to say that I think the floor of Congress is about the poorest place in the world to attempt to investigate an airplane accident, and next to that is to have an investigation carried on by those whose very regulations are under investigation in the very inquiry which they are making.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 4 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I fully agree with the gentleman, and no attempt has been made to investigate the matter here. The suggestions kindly submitted by the various gentlemen on both sides of the aisle have been gratuitous. I merely wish to complete the reference I have been trying to make for some time to my friend, Senator Ernest Lundeen, of Minnesota, who died untimely in the disaster.

Senator Lundeen was a veteran in aviation. He probably had more flying hours to his credit than any Member of either the House or the Senate, and it was my good fortune to accompany him across to Europe on the Clipper on its first trip along the North Atlantic route. On our way across on one occasion when we prepared to take off from a port in Ireland, Senator Lundeen and I were engaged in conversation and neglected to fasten our safety belts, and Colonel Gorrell, who organized the first American air forces in Europe in the World War, one of the most gallant and most colorful figures in the history of American military aviation, sitting across from us said, "Gentlemen, you have not fastened your belts." And Senator Lundeen said, "Oh, nothing ever happens, and so why take the trouble." Colonel Gorrell said, rather gravely, "My belt saved my life on two different occasions. I advise you to fasten yours." We fastened them and thereafter always observed the signal flashed on to close belts when we were taking off or preparing to land. All evidence tends to show that the plane went down in this instance with its landing wheels retracted, with both throttles wide open in a desperate effort to climb, and that all safety belts were fastened. So I am certain that Senator Lundeen in the light of his knowledge of the fundamentals of aviation and his long experience aloft—with the signal flashing above him—must have realized the situation and have known what was coming. And all who knew him in life may be certain that in that one brief instant he faced the inevitable—calm and imperturbable and unafraid.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

I would like to ask a question of the chairman of the subcommittee. In connection with the establishment of air navigation facilities, I note that this is an amount in addition to the amount specified under this heading in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act. The question I would like to ask is, Did the Civil Aeronautics people suggest that they would follow the same list of priority that was submitted in connection with the hearings on the independent offices item last year?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The amount provided in this paragraph, $2,091,000, for air navigation facilities is for the facilities that would be required in the new program, for which in this bill we appropriate $30,000,000 in cash and $50,000,000 in contract authorizations. I do not understand that this additional amount of $2,091,000 relates in any way to the program carried in the independent offices bill.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. As I recall, we carried some cash and we also carried some contract authorizations in the independent offices bill. This item in this bill is not necessarily carrying out the contract authorizations carried in the independent offices bill?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not so understand it. I do not think it has any relation to that program at all in the independent offices bill.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The other question I would like to ask is this: In connection with the matter discussed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] did the committee have brought before it any evidence pertaining to the resignation of inspectors in the Civil Aeronautics Board since it has been put into the Department of Commerce, from the time it was an independent agency?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No; the committee did not go into that at all. I am told by Mr. Sheild that on one occasion when I was not present a question was asked to that effect, and the information was put in the hearings. I am sorry I do not know where it is. Mr. Hinckley was asked a question about it and something is in the record on it, but I cannot tell the gentleman what it is.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I wanted to express the thought that I believe the House and the committee should take upon itself the responsibility of going into this unfortunate crash more deeply. I was told recently that a number of investigators who had been with the Civil Aeronautics Authority when it was an independent agency had resigned because of policies they felt were being forced upon them since it had gone into the Department of Commerce. I do not state this as a fact, because I do not know, but the remark was made by a party whose opinions are worthy of study. I was told that a number of the very best men had resigned and that more were intending to resign because they saw that people were being put into responsible positions in the C. A. B. who were more or less in the nature of political pets and were not competent to carry on the standards set by the old C. A. A.

I rather question the conclusion that was reached by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] that the country has accepted the verdict of the Civil Aeronautics Board that this crash was unavoidable. Until there is an independent investigation I think the country will continue to wonder if the accident might have been prevented.

In my own case that may grow out of an experience last spring in connection with a visit to the Army maneuvers in Louisiana. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER] and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROOKS] and myself were flying one night and we flew into an electric storm. We lost a thousand feet in 10 seconds and were blown 20 miles off of our course in a few minutes. Because of comments of the pilots at the time, the question persists in my mind as to whether the P. C. A. ship did not run into an identical situation, and not having enough altitude simply crashed. Out of our experience, I came to the conclusion that commercial passenger ships should not be permitted to fly over mountainous country when there is a combination of violent winds, heavy rain, and sharp lightning.

I want to express the hope that the committee will pursue further the circumstances surrounding the P. C. A. crash and also look into the reorganization of the C. A. B. to see what changes of personnel and policy, if any, have been forced upon the old C. A. A. that made such a splendid record. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MILLS of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I hope I may have the attention of the House as I would greatly appreciate if you would give me your sympathy at this particular time.

Beginning July 1 of this year it rained practically 45 days in my congressional district and destroyed 50, 75, 80, and 90 percent of certain crops. Certain of my people are absolutely hungry. I know similar stories have been coming to this House, but I am representing a farm area that has had absolutely a crop failure due to excessive rains. The Government has shipped into that congressional district several hundred carloads of commodities in the last 2½ months and certain of my people are in breadlines today. Every agency of the Federal Government is aware of my position and the needs of my people. Here is what I want to bring before this House. I have taken up this subject with the office of the Chief of Engineers, War Department, and with the W. P. A. officials, and they have agreed to coordinate their work if you Members will sympathize with my interest. I am especially calling on the Appropriations Committee at this time. You will recall under section 2 of the Flood Control Act of August 28, 1937, as amended by section 1 of the Flood Control Act of August 11, 1939, that the allotment cannot exceed $300,000 in any one fiscal year for removing snags and debris in navigable streams; however, the office of the Chief of Engineers advised me that all their funds had been allotted with the exception of about $20,000 which they agreed to use in promoting W. P. A. drainage projects in my section, but that is not sufficient money to help care for my people. We need an appropriation of $100,000 and I hope the Members of the House as a whole will agree to grant this $100,000.

We have not asked this House for any direct relief. It is true, of course, you have given my people certain agricultural-benefit checks, but this is the first time in 4 years that I have come before the House asking for any specific direct relief. I trust that the membership of the Appropriations Committee as well as the House goes along with this $100,000 request that we hope will be added on the Senate side.

I admit that the usual procedure is to request the Budget Bureau to make a recommendation. I have not asked the Budget Bureau in this instance.

You may ask, "What are you going to do with $100,000?" We propose to sponsor certain W. P. A. drainage projects, whereby employment may be given to a hungry people.

We have a pitiful story. We are not asking for this money in order that somebody may have a big time. We are only asking permission to live. So I hope this House will agree to accept this amendment when it is added to the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

By unanimous consent the pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries and expenses, Bituminous Coal Division: For an additional amount for salaries and expenses, Bituminous Coal Division, including the objects specified under this head in the Interior Department Appropriation Act, 1941, $137,000.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky: Page 21, line 3; strike out the period, insert semicolon, and add the following:

"To investigate the safe operation of mines for the purpose of minimizing working hazards, and for such purpose shall be authorized to utilize the services of the Bureau of Mines as provided in section 14, subsection a–2, Public, No. 48, Seventy-fifth Congress, the sum of $50,000."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment on the ground that it is not germane to the paragraph.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will the gentleman withhold his point of order?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes; I will withhold my point of order to permit the gentleman to make a statement.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

To investigate the safe operation of mines for the purpose of minimizing working hazards, and for such purpose shall be authorized to utilize the services of the Bureau of Mines as provided in section 14, subsection (a) (2), Public, No. 48, Seventy-fifth Congress, the sum of $50,000.

As the amendment shows, it amends section 14, subsection (a) (2) of the Bituminous Coal Act. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], who has charge of this deficiency appropriation bill, made a point of order against the amendment. He later withdrew his point of order.

Several months ago the Senate passed what is known as S. 2420. That measure sought to have coal mines investigated to lessen accidents and disasters in coal mines. This measure came to the House and was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining. The chairman, Hon. JOE SMITH, of West Virginia, appointed a subcommittee of five to make a study of S. 2420 and report back to the full committee. The subcommittee was made up of five capable, experienced Members of the House, and on this committee there were some able and experienced lawyers. The committee was made up of three Democrats, with the gentleman from New York, Hon. ANDREW L. SOMERS, a Democrat, chairman, and two Republicans. This committee held very extensive hearings. The miners appeared with their attorneys, the coal people likewise appeared with their attorneys, and the State officials, and especially those that had to do with inspection of coal mines in the coal-producing States, appeared. The State officials of the several States are very much opposed to this legislation and so are the coal producers. The State officials insist that under their State laws they have able and experienced men who look after these inspections and investigations, and their laws provide for the safety of mines and impose heavy penalties on the operators who fail to observe the safety of the laws of their respective States, and the States also provide other measures for the safety of the mines and the miners. These officials insist that this new measure is not necessary, and that it invades the rights of the States, and they also contend that S. 2420 is clearly unconstitutional. The operators claim it would impose an unnecessary burden upon the industry. The miners contend that the State officials are lax in performing their duties and insist that this measure is constitutional, and also point out the disasters in coal mines and the loss of life.

After months of investigation, the subcommittee headed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOMERS] made its report to the full Committee on Mines and Mining, August 15, 1940. This subcommittee pointed out in its report that this legislation was unnecessary. The committee called attention to the provisions of the Bituminous Coal Act, and especially section 14, subsection (a) (2) of that act, which provides:

The Commission * * * shall further investigate the safe operation of mines with the purpose of minimizing working hazards and for such purposes shall be authorized to utilize the services of the Bureau of Mines.

Every fair-minded person should deplore the fact that we have had a number of disasters in the coal mines with the loss of many lives, and necessary steps should be taken to protect the limbs, the health, and the lives of those who work in and about the mines. No one could consistently take an opposite view. The limbs, the health, and the lives of those who engage in this industry should be protected from preventable accidents and disasters.

The subcommittee's report points out that under the Bituminous Coal Act which is now the law of the land, greater and wider authority is given to inspect and investigate coal mines in order to prevent hazards and accidents than is provided in S. 2420.

The Bituminous Coal Commission operated for some considerable time as an independent commission. About a year ago it was placed under the Secretary of the Interior. Strange to say, neither the Commission nor the Secretary of the Interior have taken any steps to carry out this provision of the Bituminous Coal Act. Sometime ago I wrote a letter to the Commission, but received no reply, and later on I wrote a letter to the Honorable Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, calling his attention to this provision of the Bituminous Coal Act, and sent a copy of that letter to the Commission, but I received no reply either from Secretary Ickes or the Bituminous Coal Commission. However, considerable effort has been made by the mine workers to have S. 2420 acted upon in the House.

The Committee on Mines and Mining, by a tie vote, failed to report the bill to the House after receiving the report of the subcommittee. The United Mine Workers, so far as I have been able to learn, have made no demands on the Secretary of the Interior or the Bituminous Coal Commission to carry out this provision of the Bituminous Coal Act.

It has been intimated that the act does not give the authority to investigate coal mines in order to prevent accidents and hazards as claimed by the Subcommittee on Mines and Mining, but the language of that act appears to be very clear. There has been some intimation that neither the Commission nor the Secretary of the Interior has had or now has available the money to make these investigations. This is about the first complaint I have heard that a commission or bureau of this administration did not have all the money it could spend or could not get all the money it could spend. This is a deficiency appropriation bill before us. Additional appropriations are being asked for by the Secretary of the Interior for the Bituminous Coal Commission and for the Bureau of Mines. In order that there may be no further complaint along this line I have offered this amendment providing that the Secretary of the Interior and the Bituminous Coal Commission may have $50,000 to be used by the Bureau of Mines to make such investigations as may be necessary to prevent accidents and hazards in coal mines.

I can see clearly, though, from the action of the chairman in charge of this bill and our Democrat friends that they will vote my amendment down.

We begin to hear on every hand now that S. 2420 is a political bill and it must be brought out to save the faces of certain persons, and that this bill will be used in the campaign this fall. It seems to me if any measure can be adopted that is constitutional, it is already in the law in this Bituminous Coal Act, and if the provisions of that act cannot be invoked to protect the miners from the hazards and accidents in coal mines, I cannot see how any act could be passed that would accomplish that purpose. The subcommittee was very positive in its opinion that the Bituminous Coal Act is broader and contains more authority than is proposed in S. 2420.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Do I understand that the appropriation carried by the gentleman's amendment would make possible a Federal investigation of the conditions that prevail in the bituminous coal fields of the country today?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. My amendment merely authorizes an appropriation to carry out the provisions of section 14, subsection a–2. It would accomplish that purpose provided Congress has the constitutional power to pass such an act. It was strongly insisted by very able counsel that appeared before the subcommittee, of which I was not a member, that Congress has no such constitutional power, and he cited a number of recent decisions of the Supreme Court to support his contention. I think that provision in the Bituminous Coal Act contains a broader provision than is contained in S. 2420. If that is true, why not rely on the law as it is and why pass S. 2420?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. And a report would be submitted to this Congress?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. And Congress would then enact the necessary legislation?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Congress would receive these reports and, of course, would take such action as the Congress might deem advisable and necessary.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is out of order because it is not germane to the paragraph.

I submit further that the Bureau of Mines was given $676,000,000 this year for the very purpose the gentleman seeks by his amendment appropriating money to the Bituminous Coal Commission.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment. I will offer it to that section which applies to the Bureau of Mines.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not want the gentleman to labor under any misapprehension. I do not mean that the money is appropriated in this bill. There is nothing in this bill for it, but there was a separate bill for the Bureau of Mines which carried an appropriation for this item.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, may I say just one word?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order. Let the committee vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Domestic Air Mail Service: For an additional amount for the inland transportation of mail by aircraft, and so forth, including the same objects and subject to the same conditions specified under this head in the Post Office Department Appropriation Act, 1941, $325,000.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the chairman of the subcommittee or someone on the Appropriations Committee with reference to this $325,000 appearing on page 27, Domestic Mail Service, and whether or not any special routes have been laid out for which the money will be spent? In other words, how will the money be spent?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It is fully set forth on pages 20 and 21 of the report.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman tell me briefly whether or not the routes have been established?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I understand they have been. It is rather voluminous.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I will find that where?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. On pages 20 and 21 of the report.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I thank the gentleman for the information.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Emergency construction, Coast Guard vessels and shore facilities: For additional vessels and their equipment, and the construction, rebuilding or extension of shore facilities, including the acquisition of sites therefor, and including the construction of a floating drydock and shipways at the Coast Guard Depot, Curtis Bay, Md., to remain available until expended, $9,228,000, of which amount not to exceed 4 percent shall be available for administrative expenses in connection therewith, including personal services in the District of Columbia.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia: On page 31, line 22, strike out "$9,228,000" and insert "$8,648,000."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, that is simply to correct a typographical error.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia: On page 32, after line 2, insert a new paragraph as follows:

"General expenses: For an additional amount for general expenses, Coast Guard, including the objects specified under this head in the Treasury Department Appropriation Act, 1941, $580,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 206. Judgments against collectors of customs: For the payment of the claim allowed by the General Accounting Office covering a judgment rendered by the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York against a collector of customs, where a certificate of probable cause has been issued as provided for under section 989, Revised Statutes (28 U. S. C. 842), and certified to the Seventy-sixth Congress in House Document No. 909 (under the Department of Labor), $529.51.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN: Page 46, line 20, insert as a new section the following:

"SEC. 207 (a). The Architect of the Capitol is hereby authorized and directed to carry into effect for the House of Representatives, and to exercise the authorities contained in, the resolution of the House of Representatives No. 590, adopted September 5, 1940, and any other resolution of such House amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto hereafter adopted. Such authority and direction shall continue until the House of Representatives shall by resolution otherwise order.

"(b) There is hereby established with the Treasurer of the United States a special deposit account in the name of the Architect of the Capitol for the House of Representatives Restaurant, into which shall be deposited all sums received pursuant to such resolution or resolutions and from the operations thereunder and from which shall be disbursed the sums necessary in connection with the exercise of the duties required under such resolution or resolutions and the operations thereunder. Any appropriation hereafter made from the Treasury of the United States for such restaurant shall be a part of the appropriation 'Contingent Expenses, House of Representatives, Miscellaneous Items,' for the particular fiscal year involved and each such part shall be paid to the Architect of the Capitol by the Clerk of the House of Representatives in such sum as such appropriation or appropriations shall hereafter specify and shall be deposited by such Architect in full in such special deposit account.

"(c) Deposits and disbursements under such special deposit account (1) shall be made by the Architect, or, when directed by him, by such employees of the Architect as he may designate, and (2) shall be subject to audit by the General Accounting Office at such times and in such manner as the Comptroller General may direct: Provided, That payments made by or under the direction of the Architect of the Capitol from such special deposit account shall be conclusive upon all officers of the Government.

"(d) The Architect, Assistant Architect, and any employees of the Architect designated by the Architect under subsection (c) hereof shall each give bond in the sum of $5,000 with such surety as the Secretary of the Treasury may approve for the handling of the financial transactions under such special deposit account."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 207. This act may be cited as the "First Supplemental Civil Functions Appropriation Act, 1941."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that section No. 207 be corrected to 208.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the item provided for on page 23 of the bill under the subject Bureau of Mines, line 14, appropriating $275,000 for the investigation of the domestic sources of mineral supplies. I invite attention to this item for the reason that in recent months some anxiety has been expressed by our military experts as to whether or not there will be a sufficient supply of aluminum in this country within the next 2 years to meet the requirements for the construction of airplanes provided by Congress in the national-defense program.

As I understand, Mr. Chairman, and I have obtained this information from the chairman of the committee, this item will enable the Bureau of Mines to investigate new or additional sources of aluminum, particularly the cost of processing aluminum from koalin deposits. Investigations so far show that aluminum can be processed or obtained from kaolin, and the percentage runs from 20 to 40 percent per unit. The question involved, however, is whether kaolin can be processed and aluminum obtained at a cost that will justify the construction of plants to be used in processing these deposits in commercial proportions. Of course, it is generally understood that aluminum is indispensable in the construction of airplanes, and it is highly important that a sufficient supply of it should be available at any time. It is also understood that bauxite is probably the best source of aluminum at present. However, the greater portion of it used in this country is imported from the Guianas in South America, and it is known that if anything should develop whereby this supply or source of supply should for any reason be cut off it would then be highly important for us to know of other sources from which alumina may be obtained. Too, if it is found that alumina can be processed from kaolin as cheaply as from bauxite our manufacturers would like to know it.

Therefore, the purpose of this investigation, if made, would be to determine the approximate cost of processing the material on a commercial scale so that in case a condition should arise when it would be impossible to import bauxite from South America or obtain it elsewhere and it should be necessary for us to resort to other sources to secure aluminum, the information would be available and we would, therefore, know in advance whether or not aluminum for the purposes already mentioned can be obtained from kaolin. I felt that probably other Members of the House would be interested in knowing that this appropriation will enable the Bureau to ascertain this information.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARE. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I wonder if the gentleman had an opportunity to see the announcement the other day that Mr. Walthall, of the Tennessee Valley Authority chemical engineering research staff, had discovered a process for the extraction of alumina from kaolin and other clays.

Mr. HARE. I had noticed this report, and I understand a number of chemists have recently discovered or worked out different formulas by which alumina can be cheaply processed from kaolin. I assume the Bureau of Mines will endeavor to avail itself of these processes if they are available.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARE. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. LEAVY. Does this appropriation also make it possible to investigate the ore alunite, from which alumina is made?

Mr. HARE. I presume it does. The bill does not state specifically about that, but it does mention specifically the investigation of the domestic sources of mineral supply.

Mr. LEAVY. It is my understanding that it is intended to cover alunite as well as kaolin.

Mr. HARE. I would not be prepared to say so, because the hearings were not before the subcommittee of which I am a member.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLAND, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the Committee, having had under consideration the bill, H. R. 10539, the first supplemental civil functions appropriation bill, 1941, had directed him to report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DISAPPOINTMENT EXPRESSED IN YARDSTICK USED BY DIES COMMITTEE TO DETERMINE UN-AMERICANISM IN CONNECTION WITH NAZI PROPAGANDA—KEEP THE RECORD STRAIGHT—LET ONLY AMERICANS STAND GUARD

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD and include therein certain excerpts in explanation thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to express disappointment in the action of the Dies un-American activities committee for the way the charges against Lt. Col. Carl Byoir were handled and disposed of.

During the latter part of May and the first part of June, this year, in two or three speeches on the floor of the House, I called attention to the Dies committee of the fact that Lt. Col. Carl Byoir, Specialists Reserves, has been the first Hitler propagandist in this country and that he laid the groundwork, helped formulate the plans, and commenced the largest propaganda machine ever established in any country on the face of the earth for the purpose of trying to make the American people prefer a Hitler dictatorship to our own form of government, which is ruled by the people.

The Dies committee is composed of the following members: Representative DIES (chairman), DEMPSEY, STARNES of Alabama, VOORHIS of California, CASEY of Massachusetts, MASON, and THOMAS of New Jersey.

Chairman DIES appointed Representatives DEMPSEY, CASEY of Massachusetts, and MASON to investigate the charges. July 15, 1940, the subcommittee, without giving me, the author of the charges, any notice whatsoever, issued a statement to the effect that the commitee found satisfaction in clearing Mr. Carl Byoir of the charges made against him, and recommended that a resolution covering a complete exoneration of Mr. Byoir be voted by the full committee as soon as possible. I immediately protested the action of this subcommittee, because it had acted in an undue haste; had not permitted me, the author of the charges, to be heard; and for making public a subcommittee report before it was passed upon by the full committee. I pointed out that his exoneration would place Byoir in line for appointment in connection with the administration of the Selective Service Act soon to be passed.

August 29, 1940, I was given a hearing before the Dies committee on the charges. Unrevised copies of the hearings are available and may be obtained from the Dies committee.

In my testimony I showed beyond a doubt that Lt. Col. Carl Byoir had been the first and the highest-paid Hitler agent in this country, and sustained every charge that I had made in connection with his un-American activities in representing a foreign government while a lieutenant colonel in our own Army Reserves.

In order to keep the record straight, I submit that the following testimony was furnished the Dies committee, and it is uncontradicted:

1. January 30, 1933, Adolf Hitler came into power in Germany. There was an immediate influx of more money, more literature, and more power into American propaganda channels. An effort was then made to place as many "fifth columnists" as possible in our Army and armed forces.

2. Carl Byoir, a New York publicity man, was also lieutenant colonel in the Army, Specialists Reserves. He had been a lieutenant colonel less than 2 years. He accepted $4,000 in cash from the German Consul in New York to spread Nazi propaganda in this country. This money was paid within 2 or 3 months after Hitler came into power.

3. Lt. Col. Carl Byoir furnished German agents and German representatives lists of people over the entire Nation to contact and he, himself, contacted some of them for German representatives.

4. German agents were smuggled in and out of the country at will.

5. Lt. Col. Carl Byoir sent George Sylvester Vierick, who called himself "The Kaiser's spokesman in America," and who has always been a German propagandist in the United States, to Germany in August 1933, for the purpose of securing for him, Lt. Col. Carl Byoir, a contract with the German Government to disseminate Nazi propaganda in the United States.

6. George Sylvester Vierick, when in Germany in August 1933 conferred with Hitler, himself, and other prominent German officials and discussed with them the employment of Lt. Col. Carl Byoir on a more permanent basis. Byoir was then on the pay roll of the German consul in New York.

7. A contract was given Carl Byoir by a front organization for the German Government, known as the German tourists' information office, but which was approved by the German minister of propaganda, which provided that Byoir would receive $6,000 a month for 18 months and, specially, "to promote trade between the United States and Germany and to build good will between the peoples of both countries." It was dated November 22, 1933. (Germany has always used tourist information offices in the different countries as a front to disseminate Nazi propaganda.)

8. In pursuance of that contract, Carl Byoir and George Sylvester Vierick occupied the same office in New York City and their relationships were such that they were partners. This partnership—Carl Byoir and George Sylvester Vierick—then continued to flood this country with Nazi propaganda.

9. Byoir and Vierick established and maintained a propaganda office in Berlin, Germany. Much of the Nazi propaganda, including anti-Semitic and church and state, came to this country from their Berlin office and was disseminated from their New York office.

10. Byoir and Vierick continued their activities in behalf of Hitler and the Nazi German Government in the years 1933, 1934, and 1935. All during this time, Byoir was, and is now, a lieutenant colonel in the Army Reserves.

11. The Dies committee has information in its files that Lt. Col. Carl Byoir was representing Germany in 1938.

12. Lt. Col. Carl Byoir stated in 1938 that he represented American industry with assets of $14,500,000,000. The Dies committee did not make a diligent effort to find out the concerns that he was representing at that time and whether or not they had any connection with German interests. To the Dies investigation, he only accounted for a small part of such enormous assets that he claimed to represent.

13. During the time that Lt. Col. Carl Byoir was representing Hitler, German "fifth columnists" were swearing falsely for the purpose of getting into the National Guard in New York and in other cities. In other words, they were swearing that they were American citizens, when they were aliens. Different "front" organizations for the Nazis were also being organized over the Nation. In other words, Lt. Col. Carl Byoir laid the groundwork and started Hitler's Nazi propaganda in this country and was, therefore, the first Hitler Trojan horse to enter the United States for Hitler.

14. George Sylvester Vierick is now registered with the Department of State as a German agent. He is still flooding this country with Nazi propaganda literature from 17 Battery Place, New York. He is under contract with Germany to color the news favorably to Germany. He is still trying to make the people in this country desire a Hitler dictatorship in preference to our own great form of government.

I invite any member of the Dies committee to deny either of these allegations.

It was my contention before the committee, and is now, that any lieutenant colonel in active service or inactive service who has ever, at any time, represented a foreign government for the purpose of disseminating that foreign government's propaganda in this country, should be immediately dismissed from the service. Further, action should be taken as the facts in the case and the laws of our country warrant.

It is my understanding that at the conclusion of the hearing, August 29, and before the testimony was examined or even copied, the committee decided to adopt the July 15 report of the subcommittee exonerating Lt. Col. Carl Byoir. Those present at this meeting were: DIES, chairman, presiding; CASEY; MASON; and VOORHIS of California. It will be noticed a majority of the voting members present had already prejudged the case and were naturally in a position of having every reason to want to justify their former action.

Again, on September 10, 1940, the full committee had another meeting, composed of: STARNES of Alabama, acting chairman; MASON; CASEY; and VOORHIS of California, at which Byoir was again exonerated. It will be noticed at this meeting that Representatives MASON and CASEY constituted a majority of the voting members and would naturally like to justify and uphold their former action.

If the Dies committee is willing to set the above standard to govern its actions in the future, there is nothing I can do about it except protest, which I am now doing.

EVERY GERMAN ALIEN ENTERING COUNTRY DURING BYOIR CONTRACT WITH HITLER SHOULD BE INVESTIGATED

Although I would not charge that Lieutenant Colonel Byoir had anything personally to do with the German alien who kidnaped the De Tristan baby coming into this country, yet it is a fact that this alien, Jakob Muhlenbroich, came into the United States during the time that Lt. Col. Carl Byoir was representing and trying to build up Hitler in this Nation. At that time, all of the Germany "fifth columnists" that it was possible for Hitler to get into this country were coming here, some under quota, some not under quota. Every German alien who came to this country during the time Byoir was known to have been representing Hitler should be immediately investigated. They should have been investigated before now.

I desire to particularly express disappointment in the committee's failure to determine whether or not any of the concerns represented by Lt. Col. Carl Byoir had given employment to these "fifth columnists," which came in under quota or were smuggled in during the time he represented them.

At this time, it is my understanding from information which I am willing to rely upon, that Lt. Col. Carl Byoir is the representative of the following concerns:

1. Schenley Distillers Corporation—which, as of December 31, 1939, controlled 100 percent of the voting power of the following-named concerns:

Astor Pure Rye Distilling Co.
Baird-Daniels Co., Inc., Missouri.
The J. T. B. Co., Maryland.
B. of A. Co., Delaware.
Belmont Distilling Co.
The A. B. Blanton Small Tub Distilling Co., Maryland.

2. Freeport Sulphur Co., which also controls the Cuban-American Manganese Corporation. He has represented this company since 1935. (In the latter part of 1936 Lt. Col. Carl Byoir also became the public relations and publicity representative of the State of Louisiana, which relationship continued through 1938. In July 1936 the production tax on sulfur in Louisiana was increased from 60 cents per ton to $2, which continued until July 27, 1938, when it was reduced to the present rate of $1.03 per ton.)

3. Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Co.:

SUBSIDIARIES

This is principally an operating company. At December 31, 1939, 100 percent of the voting power was owned in the following subsidiaries:

Name, place of incorporation, and business:

Blairsville Glass Co.
Peacock Laboratories, Inc.
The Thermopane Co.

Subsidiaries in which less than 100 percent of the voting power was owned were as follows:

The American Bicheroux Co. (55 percent), patent holding company.

In addition, the company has investments in the foreign companies listed below. These are not regarded as being in the nature of subsidiaries:

Compagnie Internationale pour La Fabrication Mecanique du Verre, S. A. (see appended statement).

A subsidiary in which voting power held was less than 100 percent was:

The Whittall Can Co., Ltd. (99+ percent)—Inactive.

On December 31, 1939, company owned 100,000 shares or 8 percent of Metal Box Co., Ltd.

7. North American Co.:

BUSINESS

The company is a holding company. Principal operating companies serve a total area of approximately 18,130 square miles, having an estimated population of 5,105,000 and including 672 communities to which various classes of public-utility service are furnished. North American controls, through stock ownership, representing at least 75 percent of the common stock and a majority of the voting stock, four of five groups of companies. The District of Columbia group is controlled by Washington Railway & Electric Co., in which North American has approximately a 90-percent common-stock interest but less than a majority of voting stock. The electric properties in each group form a distinct interconnected power system. Summaries of the major operations of each group, together with the companies comprising the group, follow:

District of Columbia group: Potomac Electric Power Co.; Braddock Light & Power Co.: Electric service in Washington, D. C., and 31 other communities in adjoining sections of Maryland and Virginia. Territory served, area 631 square miles, population 820,000. Washington Railway & Electric Co., the subholding company through which the foregoing companies are controlled, was not a majority-owned subsidiary at December 31, 1939, nor was it and its subsidiaries included in consolidated accounts at December 31, 1939.

Ohio group: The Cleveland Electric Illuminating Co.: Electric service in Cleveland and 132 other communities. Territory served extends 100 miles along Lake Erie, area 1,700 square miles, population 1,300,000.

Missouri-Illinois-Iowa group: Union Electric Co. of Missouri; Union Electric Co. of Illinois; Mississippi River Power Co.; Iowa Union Electric Co.; the St. Louis County Gas Co.; Electric service in St. Louis, Mo., and East St. Louis and Alton, Ill., and 123 other communities in the Mississippi Valley. Gas service in St. Louis County, Mo., Alton, Ill., and Keokuk, Iowa. Territory served, area 3,113 square miles, population 1,540,000.

Kansas-Missouri group: The Kansas Power and Light Co.; Missouri Power & Light Co.; Nebraska Natural Gas Co.; Kewanee Public Service Co.: Electric service in Topeka, Atchison, Salina, Jefferson City, Kewanee, and 394 other communities in Kansas, Missouri, and Illinois; population of territory served 410,000. Gas service in Atchison, Salina, Jefferson City, Kewanee, and 133 other communities in Kansas, Nebraska, Missouri, and Illinois; population of territory served 260,000.

Wisconsin-Michigan group: Wisconsin Electric Power Co.; Wisconsin Gas & Electric Co.; Wisconsin-Michigan Power Co.; the Milwaukee Electric Railway & Transport Co.: Electric service in Milwaukee, Racine, Kenosha, Waukesha, Watertown, Appleton, Iron Mountain, and 355 other communities in Wisconsin and Upper Peninsula, Mich. Gas service in Racine, Kenosha, Watertown, Appleton, and 64 other communities in Wisconsin. Transportation service in Milwaukee and surrounding territory and in Racine, Kenosha, and Appleton. Territory served, area 12,686 square miles, population 1,515,000.

In addition, company has a substantial majority interest in Detroit Edison Co. and Pacific Gas & Electric Co. and through North American Light & Power Co. a minority stock interest in Northern Natural Gas Co. and Illinois-Iowa Power Co.

SUBSIDIARIES

(Company designates as subsidiaries only those companies in which it owns at least 75 percent of the common stock and a majority of the voting stock.)

Company and type of business (all 100 percent common controlled unless otherwise stated):

8. Goodrich Tire and Rubber Co.:

The assets represented by these concerns aggregate about $2,000,000,000. Although this is a large amount, it is far short of $14,500,000,000, which Lt. Col. Carl Byoir admittedly stated in 1938 that he represented. I am disappointed because the Dies committee did not further investigate this matter and determine the names of the other concerns he represented and whether or not any of them had been persuaded to use the "fifth columnists" that were brought into this country during the time that Lt. Col. Carl Byoir admittedly represented the German consul in New York and Adolf Hitler.

IMPORTANT TESTIMONY CAN ONLY BE OBTAINED BY CONGRESSIONAL RESOLUTION

I am further disappointed in the failure of the Dies committee to seek the passage of a resolution in Congress which would have given the committee the power to have examined secret instruments, documents, and testimony obtained by the McCormack committee in 1934 and 1935, which are now in the Congressional Library and can only be examined after the passage of such a resolution.

On June 6, 1940, I delivered to the investigator for the Dies committee a letter which I had received from one purporting to be a citizen of New Jersey, only a short distance from New York City, which was written in the person's own handwriting and which gave her correct street address, as follows:

DEAR SIR: I saw in one of the New York papers where you had accused the firm of Carl Byoir of being the head of the Nazi movement in the United States of America and where he denied it.

My daughter worked for Carl Byoir, and they even had Nazi reps right there. Carl Byoir went to Germany personally to receive the money which financed their work in the United States of America. They were connected with the Friends of Germany, and people came in there who were only known by numbers among the employees. George S. Viereck was also connected with the firm. They had doors cut through to other streets and through other buildings, so they could come and go without being seen. He subscribed to a clipping bureau for Hitler, and of all the filthy obscene conversations and actions. Then that year he got some publicity for it, and to cover up he got himself appointed on the committee for the President's birthday ball. One woman secretary (a Nazi) took care of the more secret work, and she was rabid.

Just thought this might interest you.

Sincerely yours,

———.

I gave this letter to the Dies investigator. He went to New Jersey to see this lady and was informed by her daughter, who worked for Byoir, that she had given full and complete information to the McCormack committee to corroborate everything that her mother had said in this letter. The Dies investigator came back to Washington for the purpose of examining the papers and documents that were filed with the McCormack committee. The investigator discovered, however, that they were placed in the Congressional Library under lock and key with instructions not to permit anyone to see them, except in pursuance of a resolution passed by Congress. The investigator made this report to the Dies committee and nothing was done towards securing permission to see these papers that would corroborate the information in this letter.

UNHEALTHY SITUATION FOR COUNTRY

It will be noticed that Lt. Col. Carl Byoir represents great wealth in this country and naturally has much power and influence. Although I do not claim that the press generally is intimidated by Lt. Col. Carl Byoir and the three or four other great public-relations men in this Nation, who represent practically all of the national advertisers, I do say it is an unhealthy situation for a country. As evidence of this fact, recently a newspaper owner stated that he would like to carry a certain story, which he knew to be true and which would be in the public interest, if it were published, but that he could not afford to carry it unless at least three-fourths of the other newspapers in the country carried it. He expressed the fear that his newspaper would be destroyed in a very short time if he were to get out of line. He stated that three or four public-relations men in this country could withdraw practically all of his advertising, which would destroy his business in 30 or 60 days. Byoir alone could withdraw a large part of it.

[1] Inactive or in process of dissolution.

BYOIR REPRESENTS TRUSTS THAT SPEND MONEY FOR ADVERTISING

It is a well-known fact that the glass trust, the aluminum trust, the can trust, the sulphur trust, and the liquor trust all represented by Lt. Col. Carl Byoir spend lots of money for advertising. It is reasonable to assume that the newspapers and magazines that deal with him in a way that he considers fair will certainly get their share of advertising from these concerns, but if he does not believe that they are dealing fairly with them, it is reasonable to assume that they will not get the advertising that they would get otherwise and possibly none at all.

WHY WESTRICK NOT INTERROGATED

I cannot understand why Dr. Gerhard A. Westrick, German Trade Envoy, was allowed to leave the country before being questioned by the proper authorities. It is evident that he was having business relations with some of the biggest concerns in America, and, doubtless, had in mind leading the people to believe that we should accept the theory that Germany was going to win and that we should now get ready to do business with Germany.

I respectfully submit that three or four such men in America have more power today over the means of communication to the people than any other group or class, or even the United States Government.

I respectfully suggest that in this trying time through which we are now going that George Washington's admonition that only Americans should be permitted to stand guard should be heeded.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and include therein a letter I have addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, in tribute to the beloved Speaker William B. Bankhead, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and include therein a statement on Mr. Bankhead.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and include therein an article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and include therein a statement by Colonel Myers, of the Aviation Defense Association.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and include therein a communication recently made to the New York Times.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I have two requests. First, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. My second request is to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein quotations from publications.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

FORT DEVENS

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein a brief description of Fort Devens, which is situated in Ayer, Mass., in my district.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, when Fort Devens is entirely completed it will be one of the most beautiful forts in the entire country and will play an extremely active part in our great national-defense program, just as it did during the World War, when it started as an Army camp.

Yesterday I attended the first annual drum corps competition held at Fort Devens. It was held under the auspices of the St. Mary's Church of Ayer, Mass., with Fort Devens acting as host. I was invited to attend as special guest by Father Flaherty, a young priest at St. Mary's Parish, which gave me special pleasure, as he won my medal presented to the most outstanding C. M. T. C. student 4 years ago at Fort Devens.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday, at Fort Devens, as I watched the competition of some 20 drum corps units, I realized that probably in no other nation in the world today would such a peacetime parade take place. I vowed anew to keep this country at peace.

The young girls and boys who marched were in the gay, cheerful colors of the various organizations that participated. It was a triumphant parade if you will. Many of the boys and girls who marched were sons and daughters of men who fought in the World War. They carried themselves proudly because of their splendid heritage.

The competing units showed in their marching, in their drills, the results of training, the results of sacrifice. They proved what preparation and cooperation can accomplish even in the very young, because some of them were little children.

There were thousands watching the marchers; among them were the enlisted men of the fort, dressed in their khaki. Eager faced and fine were these men who have entered the Army to serve and to protect America. The khaki uniform to me is a symbol of courage, of self-sacrifice, of honor, of patriotism. These young soldiers brought back to my mind the early days of Devens when it was a camp and the frantic rush to train men for the World War, and then I recalled the return of our soldiers after their winning the war and the triumphal review there of an entire division of gallant World War veterans, and recalled the return of the sick and the wounded. Then came peacetime training of the Regular Army, the summer training of the Twenty-sixth Division of the National Guard, the training of the R. O. T. C., the C. M. T. C., and the camp at Devens for the C. C. C.

Mr. Speaker, may I thank at this time the Members of the House and Senate who helped me to have Camp Devens made Fort Devens when it was planned to abandon it. I wish to thank also the Members of Congress who have helped me fight to develop and strengthen Devens in recent years. I am most sincerely grateful. I appreciate all that the various Army officers have planned and have accomplished to make Fort Devens such a fine, beautiful Army post. It is ideally located on fine, hard, extra good, healthy soil, splendid railroad and other transportation facilities. It has a good natural landing field. It is in a splendid community.

As I watched the scene yesterday at Fort Devens I saw the picture of the future of Devens—the reception center already begun to take a thousand men—and the important part Fort Devens will play in training in the near future a division of men for the protection of our Nation. It will give to thousands of young men the opportunity, the great privilege, of training in time of peace. It will give them a chance to learn how to safeguard themselves. It will give them a vital part in our national-defense program. Truly Fort Devens has a great future.

The program and a brief history of Fort Devens, by Miss Helen McGuane, is as follows:

A BRIEF HISTORY OF FORT DEVENS

(By Miss Helen McGuane)

Hard on the declaration of war with Germany on April 6, 1917, came the problem of raising an army to send to Europe to join the allied forces. Our Navy, being better prepared than the Army, was mobilized on the day war was declared. On the other hand, we had a Regular Army of approximately only 200,000 men, since there was no system of compulsory military training such as existed in many European countries. Consequently, Secretary of War Baker submitted to Congress the recommendations of the General Staff for filling the quotas of the Regular Army and the National Guard both by volunteer enlistment and by a selective draft. One provision of the Selective Service Act, passed on May 28, 1917, allowed the President to raise a volunteer infantry force of four divisions and required the registration of all men between the ages of 21 and 30. On June 5, 1917, about 10,000,000 young men were enrolled. Six weeks later about 1,500,000 men were drafted, and of this number 687,000 were retained for service. These were apportioned among 16 cantonments, while the National Guard, having been called to Federal service, were sent to 16 other camps. These 32 camps, with all their apparatus, were built within a few months' time, at a cost of $200,000,000.

Let us now turn to one cantonment in particular—Fort Devens as it is now called—Camp Devens as it was called in 1917. Camp Devens was named in honor of Gen. Charles Devens, one of New England's soldiers in the Civil War. The site for the camp was selected by a group of Army officers, among them Maj. Gen. Clarence R. Edwards, and a few civilians. The land selected, covering an area of around 10,000 acres, for the most part waste land, was located in Ayer, Shirley, and Harvard. Farms which happened to be located in that section were purchased by the Government and the people moved to other homes. Early in June the leases on the land were signed, the contracts awarded to the Fred T. Ley Co., of Springfield, and on June 18 the laborers began to arrive.

In a remarkably short space of 9 weeks' time the land was cleared, wooden barracks constructed, and on September 1, Camp Devens was ready to receive her quota of men to be trained for war. Here, under the command of Maj. Gen. Harry Foote Hodges, were to be trained the men of New England and northern New York State. This camp was the first to be completed. On September 5 arrived the first men of the first draft trained at Camp Devens. Two divisions were trained here—the Seventy-sixth Division and the Twelfth or Plymouth Division.

Nonmilitary organizations combined with the military authorities to provide entertainment and recreation for the soldiers. Among these organizations were the Knights of Columbus, the Salvation Army, the Y. M. C. A., and the Jewish Welfare Board. The Red Cross aided in caring for the wounded soldiers who came from France to the base hospital at the camp. Weekly a delegation of actors came from Boston to entertain the encamped men. Prominent among these was Fred Stone. A hostess house was built under the auspices of the Y. W. C. A. for the benefit of the women who came to visit members of their families who were at the camp.

Following the signing of the Armistice, preparations were made for the demobilization of the men who were at the camp. Here too came many units from France to be discharged. This process lasted until the spring of 1919. After the war the camp was not abandoned, but the leased land purchased and a permanent army post established. In 1922 the Thirteenth and Thirty-sixth Regiments were stationed here for general maintenance of the camp. In the summer the regiments engaged in training the C. M. T. C. and R. O. T. C. summer training camps authorized by the National Defense Act. In 1927, camp reached its lowest ebb when it was placed on a caretaking basis. In 1929, a detachment of troops from the Fifth Infantry Regiment of Maine entered the camp to protect the permanent buildings. In 1933, the camp became Fort Devens. Here in 1933 came the boys of the C. C. C. From 1927 up to the present time an extensive building program has been carried out.

What a far cry from the Camp Devens of 1917 is the Fort Devens of 1940. Red brick barracks forming a quadrangle. Beyond these the officers' quarters, also of red brick. Between the two the green, well-cared-for parade ground—Rogers parade ground—named in honor of the late John Jacob Rogers, long a Representative from this congressional district. Nearby the attractive quarters of the noncommissioned officers. A hospital, a church, a theater, a commissary, and a post exchange combine to make Fort Devens sufficient unto itself. Smooth concrete roads throughout the post provide quick and easy transportation. Near the railroad are located the warehouses. At the present time, this being a C. C. C. supply depot, many of the warehouses are used for storing the materials of that organization.

Fort Devens is the largest and one of the most modern Army posts in the United States. Varied have been the pictures presented by this post in the short 23 years of its existence. Many happy thoughts are associated with the name Fort Devens. Busy was the town of Ayer in 1917, bustling with the activity and the novelty of an Army cantonment in that quiet town. There is a question in the minds of the citizenry today—What will be the future of Fort Devens?

My answer to Miss McGuane's query, What will be the future of Fort Devens?, is that Fort Devens will prove even greater in the future than it has in the past.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one-half minute in order to ask the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] what the program for tomorrow is.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, the only program will be the consideration of two rules on bills from the Judiciary Committee, one to amend the act providing punishment for willful injury or destruction of war materials and the other to permit assignment of claims under public contracts.

Mr. MICHENER. Could the gentleman give any further advice as to the program for the rest of the week?

Mr. WARREN. On Wednesday the Mexican Claims bill will be considered and on Thursday we are expecting the final appropriation bill. Of course, we are hoping also to get an agreement on the tax bill.

Mr. MICHENER. As I understand, there is no expectation on the part of the gentleman that the House will adjourn this week?

Mr. WARREN. I am unable to say about that at the present time.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech by my esteemed colleague the gentleman from Oregon, Hon. JAMES MOTT, the principal address given at the Twenty-sixth Annual Meeting of the American Association of State Highway Officials at Seattle, Wash., on September 17, 1940.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

SPEAKER RAYBURN

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point and to include therein a short editorial from the New York Times of Wednesday, September 18, 1940.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

The editorial referred to follows:

SPEAKER RAYBURN

Sam Randall, Tom Reed, and Nick Longworth are names that mark by their affectionate familiar contractions the American democratic style. Speaker RAYBURN was baptized in his native Tennessee as "Samuel Taliaferro." By what surprising forethought or happy chance he shortened it history doesn't tell us. Sam he is and will remain. He started from scratch. He was one of 11 children of a Confederate soldier.

He got into the Texas Legislature at 23; he was speaker of the Texas House at 29. In 1912 he was 30 and elected to the House of Representatives, where he has been ever since. His constituency is agricultural. Our southern friends have the good habit of sticking to a Representative. Going to Washington perfectly obscure, he got on the Committee on Interstate Commerce and worked up to its head. There was talk of making him Speaker in 1934. He became majority leader. Nobody will deny that he deserves the promotion to Speaker that has now come to him.

A friend of Mr. GARNER and a conductor of the latter's boom in 1932, he has that intense partisan orthodoxy, that follow-my-leader spirit that political prudence dictates. He happens to have had a hand in New Deal legislation that is wormwood to many in these parts, but he is respected as a man of ability, integrity, and experience. He is pretty young for a veteran, and he comes from a State for which nothing is too good—except a little thing like the Presidency.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY] is recognized for 25 minutes.

THE MAKING OF A CONGRESSMAN—A 1940 REVISION

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, on the 5th of June 1930, the Honorable Guy U. Hardy, then a Representative who had been for 14 years a Representative from Colorado, inserted in the RECORD a compilation of information which was one of the most valuable contributions ever made for the benefit of Members of Congress and for the general public. He entitled it: "Many Questions That Many Ask About the Congress, Its Works and Ways, Are Here Answered."

Since that date contributions have been made based on Representative Hardy's original, none of which has contained all of the subject matter, and none of which has entirely brought down to date the information therein undertaken to be broadcast.

Mr. Lamneck, of Ohio, and I both have undertaken at one time or another to use a part of the material, and to add to it along certain informative lines.

Now, at the request of many Representatives, and with the cooperation of the Honorable Lewis Deschler, Parliamentarian of the House, I have attempted to revise and extend the speech I made, entitled "The Making of a Congressman," and have taken the liberty to correct the Hardy original and bring it up to date wherever, by reason of changes in law, or rules, or for other reasons, the original is now obsolete or incorrect.

The revision of my speech, The Making of a Congressman, including the matters and things to which I have heretofore referred, now reads as follows:

Mr. Speaker, on the 27th day of February, 1882, 57 years ago come Monday next, the then Senator James G. Blaine, of Maine, delivered a memorial oration before the two Houses in commemoration of the life and death of James A. Garfield, then late President of the United States.

In the course of his oration Senator Blaine said:

"There is no test of a man's ability in any department of public life more severe than service in the House of Representatives; there is no place where so little deference is paid to reputation previously acquired, or to eminence won outside; no place where so little consideration is shown for the feelings or the failures of beginners. What a man gains in the House he gains by sheer force of his own character, and if he loses and falls back he must expect no mercy, and will receive no sympathy. It is a field in which the survival of the strongest is the recognized rule, and where no pretense can deceive and no glamor can mislead. The real man is discovered, his worth is impartially weighed, his rank is irreversibly decreed."

The truth of the above statement is just as obvious to all of us who sit in this Chamber today and observe its inexorable demonstration as it was 57 years ago.

"The mills of the gods grind slowly, but they grind exceedingly small" might well be a text for a sermon to those who in any session of Congress attempt the rapids before they have learned to swim.

How, then, may a newly elected Representative fit himself for efficient service and the discharge of his duties, as such, is an ever-recurring question with which all of us are confronted.

So it may not be out of place, and I hope may not be considered presumptuous, Mr. Chairman, if, with a due appreciation of my own limitation, I undertake to pass on to others some of the answers, counsel, and advice so generously given by those older and more experienced in service, to whom, on both sides of the aisle, we are grateful for such counsel, sought and given, as has helped us to steer past whirlpools wherein we most surely would have at least capsized and has saved us from many prospective bumps and bruises, and made life bearable for us.

One of the wiser and more farseeing of my friends advised me to familiarize myself with Lewis Deschler's (House Parliamentarian) Jefferson's Manual and Rules of the House of Representatives.

Says Deschler:

"From the beginning of the First Congress, the House has formulated rules for its procedure. Some of them have since gone out of existence. More of them have been amplified and broadened to meet the exigencies that have arisen from time to time. Today they are perhaps the most finely adjusted, scientifically balanced, and highly technical rules of any parliamentary body of the world. Under them a majority may work its will at all times in the face of the most determined and vigorous opposition of a minority.

* * * * * * *

"I believe that I am not making too broad a statement when I say that the parliamentary practice of the House is a system of procedure that ranks second to none. It has proven adequate to meet all the emergencies that have arisen in the past. It will meet the emergencies and problems of the future with the same degree of success."

Having done that, he advised me to study CLARENCE CANNON'S (Missouri) Procedure in the House of Representatives.

CLARENCE CANNON, as you know, is our colleague, the distinguished Representative from the State of Missouri and former Parliamentarian of the House. In the foreword to his work he says:

"The time of the House is too valuable, the scope of its enactments too far-reaching, and the constantly increasing pressure of its business too great to justify lengthy and perhaps acrimonious discussion of questions of procedure which have been authoritatively decided in former sessions.

"The purpose of this book is to provide a synopsis of the procedure of the House for use on the floor where the authorities and sources, because of their bulk and diversity, are not always immediately available. While comprehensiveness and detail have been sacrificed to brevity and accessibility, no notable decision has been omitted, and each topic is, for practical purposes, a complete résumé of the procedure on that subject."

Having studied these, it was suggested that I make it my business regularly to attend the sessions of the House, in order to learn by observation and assimilation the application of the rules and how the House operates thereunder.

Then one man of long years of service said to me:

"PLUMLEY, you will never know what it is all about and why unless and until you read Legislative Procedure, Legislative Assemblies, Legislative Principles, and Legislative Problems, four recognized works of authority with respect to the subjects suggested by the titles written by ROBERT LUCE, the eminent parliamentary authority and our colleague from Massachusetts."

In Legislative Procedure, Mr. LUCE states:

"Lawmakers must themselves be governed by law, else they would in confusion worse confounded quickly come to grief.

"It is true"—

Says he—

"that with Coke and Blackstone and Kent we do not ordinarily class Hatsell and Cushing and Hinds. It is true that the literature of parliamentary law is scanty and that it deals with minutiae of seemingly little consequence to human rights. Yet think what the law and the practice of legislative assemblies really mean. They make it possible under a representative form of government for the will of the people to be ascertained. Starting with the assumption that this will is the will of the majority, we can give it expression and effect only by processes that at the same time endow it with form and win submission by the minority. Lacking either achievement, chaos follows."

Again he says:

"Herein lies the safety of the minority, and this it is that makes parliamentary law and procedure of the greatest consequence to the public safety. Government survives because the lesser part yields to the greater part. Teutonic peoples have had more success than others in self-government because with them the minority, however convinced of its own wisdom, consents to be ruled by the majority until in orderly fashion the minority can make itself the majority. The minority insist on only the right to be heard. Theirs is the cry of Themistocles to Eurybiades, 'Strike, but hear me!' Give them but the chance to present their arguments fairly, fully, and they will abide the issue. This is what we call liberty, though just why it would be hard to tell.

* * * * * * *

"Thomas Jefferson took the same view. Referring to Hatsell in the introductory words of his Manual, he recalled that Mr. Onslow, the ablest among the Speakers of the House of Commons, used to say: 'It was a maxim he had often heard when he was a young man, from old and experienced members, that nothing tended more to throw power into the hands of administration, and those who acted with the majority of the House of Commons, than a neglect of, or departure from, the rules of proceeding; that these forms, as instituted by your ancestors, operated as a check and control on the actions of the majority, and that they were in many instances a shelter and protection to the minority against the attempts of power.' So far, said Jefferson, the maxim is certainly true and is founded in good sense, that as it is always in the power of the majority, by their numbers, to stop any improper measures proposed on the part of their opponents, the only weapons by which the minority can defend themselves against similar attempts from those in power are the forms and rules of proceeding which have been adopted as they were found necessary from time to time and are become the law of the House; by a strict adherence to which only the weaker party can be protected from those irregularities and abuses which these forms were intended to check, and which the wantonness of power is but too often apt to suggest to large and successful majorities."

I commend the foregoing references to your careful consideration.

And now we come to the practical proposition which has confronted us all, as to the source of information with respect to our daily duties, and as to where we can get information, and from whom; and what shall we do next.

At this point may I say that I have omitted certain discussion appearing in the former text, including comments made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON], which occurred with respect to the revision of the Hardy original, made by Mr. Lamneck, of Ohio, in which the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON] pays a deserved tribute to Mr. Hardy.

With certain deletions, therefore, I now offer for your consideration the Hardy original brought down to date:

In making speeches in the House and Senate, Members often say "the country should know" this or that and "I want the country to know" this or that, with the implication that they are not speaking entirely for the benefit of the few gentlemen listening but for the whole country at large. And so it is with these remarks. I am not making them for the Members of the House of Representatives, although peradventure some Members may find some information here that will help them to answer questions a little more freely in the House gallery and at the Rotary Club back home.

Mr. Hardy said:

I am putting these questions and answers out in printed form for the benefit of the many who like to know a little more about the inside workings of, and the side lights on, the Congress. I know I have a lot of friends who like to know about these things and who encourage me to talk of them in little groups and through the press, and there may be other inquisitive people in other sections of this United States who read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

WHAT IS CONGRESS?

Congress is the legislative body of the United States Government. The functions of the National Government are divided into three parts: Executive, judicial, and legislative. States have their State legislatures. Cities have their city councils. The Nation has its Congress. Its existence, authority, and limitations are provided by the Constitutuion. Article I, section 1, reads: "All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives."

HOW LONG HAVE WE HAD A CONGRESS?

The first and second sessions of the First Congress of the United States were held in New York City; subsequently, including the first session of the Sixth Congress, Philadelphia was the meeting place; since then Congress has convened in Washington, D. C.

The earlier Continental Congress, 1774–89, to be sure, had various places of meeting and included Philadelphia, Pa.; Baltimore, Md.; Lancaster, Pa.; York, Pa.; Princeton, N. J.; Annapolis, Md.; Trenton, N. J.; and New York City.

Incidentally, the President is authorized by proclamation to convene Congress at such place other than Washington as he may judge proper when "from the prevalence of contagious sickness, or the existence of other circumstances, it would, in the opinion of the President, be hazardous to the lives or health of the Members to meet" in Washington.

WHEN DOES CONGRESS MEET?

The Constitution, article I, section 4, provides that—

The Congress shall assemble at least once in every year * * * on the first Monday in December, unless they shall by law appoint a different day.

Pursuant to a resolution of the Continental Congress, the first session of the First Congress convened March 4, 1789. Up to and including May 20, 1820, 18 acts were passed providing for the meeting of Congress on other days in the year. Since that year Congress met regularly on the first Monday in December until 1934, when the twentieth amendment to the Constitution became effective, changing the meeting of Congress to January 3, unless the Congress shall, by law, appoint a different date.

The general elections held in the fall of every even year determine the composition of the House membership for the ensuing 2 years with the members-elect subscribing to the oath of office and being inducted into office in the January following.

WHAT IS A CONGRESSMAN?

Strictly speaking, a Member of either Senate or of the House of Representatives is a Congressman. However, in general practice we speak of a Member of the Senate as a Senator and of a Member of the House as a Congressman, although the official title of the latter is Representative in Congress.

HOW MANY MEMBERS?

There are 96 United States Senators, two from each of the 48 States in the Union.

There are 435 Members of the House of Representatives, each State being entitled to the number its population justifies. The Member or Members of the House to which each State is entitled is determined on the basis of the decennial census. There are two methods under existing law which may be followed in making the apportionment; one method is known as that of "major fractions," and the other is known as "the method of equal proportions." Under no circumstances shall any State have less than one member.

While Congress, by law, apportions the number of Representatives to each State, the State legislatures establish the districts from which the selection shall be made.

In addition to the Members of the House from the various States, Alaska, and Hawaii each have Delegates, and the Philippines and Puerto Rico have Resident Commissioners. These Delegates and Resident Commissioners have the right of debate but have no vote upon legislation appearing before the House for action.

WHAT QUALIFICATIONS ARE REQUIRED FOR MEMBERSHIP?

The Constitution provides that a Member of the House of Representatives must have attained the age of 25, have been a citizen of the United States for 7 years, and be an inhabitant of the State in which he is elected. In practice he is usually a resident of the district which he represents, but that is not a constitutional requirement. A United States Senator must have attained the age of 30 years, have been a citizen of the United States for 9 years, and be an inhabitant of the State which elects him.

WHAT OATH DO MEMBERS TAKE?

The oath of office taken by the Members of the House is administered by the Speaker, and by the Vice President to the Senators. It reads:

"I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion; and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which I am about to enter. So help me God."

The Constitution provides that the President of the United States, Senators, and Representatives, members of the several State legislatures, and all executive and judicial officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by oath or affirmation to support the Constitution.

WHAT ABOUT EXTRA SESSIONS?

The President may call the Congress to meet in extraordinary session at any time he thinks the interests of the country justify it.

There has been only 1 four-session Congress, the Sixty-seventh, during President Harding's administration.

The longest session of the Congress was the War Congress of 1917–18, which lasted 354 days; the shortest session was the 10-day session called by President Pierce to enact an army appropriation measure in 1856. The Senate, alone, has been called into special session even for 1-day or 2-day sessions, but in such cases it was for the purpose of confirming Presidential appointments; the latter body may be called in extra session, without the House to consider treaties, try impeachments, and confirm appointments.

HOW ARE VACANCIES FILLED?

Members do die in office, and occasionally one resigns, usually to take what he considers to be a better office, however. When a Senator dies or resigns, the Governor of his State may appoint his successor to serve only until an election is held, providing his State legislature has given him the authority. If a Representative dies or resigns, his place cannot be filled by appointment. The Governor of his State may call a special election to fill the place, if he desires, or, as is done in many cases, the place may be left vacant until the next general election.

WHAT ARE THE DUTIES OF A MEMBER?

They are many and manifold. He should study legislation and attend the meetings of his House. He should listen to a good deal of the debates, but not all of them by any means. Many Members are kept in committee meetings many hours of many days of every session. The average Member develops a large office business. The Members get a vast amount of mail. This requires much study, dictation of replies, and often visits to different executive departments downtown. The departments are far away and often far apart. Many ex-service men bring their problems to their Congressmen, and he is always glad to help them out when and wherever he can, although he has not the power always to do as much as he would like.

A Member will get a thousand letters or maybe several thousand letters in a session from citizens advocating or opposing proposed legislation. Usually a Congressman answers every letter, though he cannot tell everybody what he thinks about every bill that has been introduced. He must wait developments through committee hearings and give thought to those measures that are being brought forward by favorable committee action.

WHAT ARE THE IMPORTANT COMMITTEES?

There are several. The two most important are probably Appropriations and Ways and Means. All bills that relate to the appropriation of money must be considered by and reported out by the Appropriations Committee of the House. This committee consists of 40 members, 25 Democrats and 15 Republicans. It reports out several bills that carry appropriations for a little over $4,000,000,000 each year. The Ways and Means Committee has to consider and report out all bills that have in any way to do with raising revenue, tariff, or any sort of taxes. This committee consists of 25 members, 15 Democrats and 10 Republicans. All revenue bills must originate in the House of Representatives and come out of the Ways and Means Committee.

There are about 47 standing committee, 9 joint standing committees, and several select committees appointed for specific purposes. The 10 principal committees are called exclusive committees in that a majority member of any one of these committees cannot serve on any other.

HOW DO COMMITTEES WORK?

They meet regularly or on call. They consider the bills that have been referred to them. They sometimes hold long hearings on important bills when those interested either for or against may come in and tell the committee what they think of the bills in question. Some hearings last several days and some several weeks. The committee then considers the bill and may report it out with or without amendments or may decide not to report it out. Sometimes the committee takes up several bills of a similar character, considers all phases of the question, and writes a new bill and reports that out.

WHO SELECTS MEMBERS FOR COMMITTEE ASSIGNMENTS?

Majority Members are assigned to committees by the Committee on Ways and Means. As a rule, once on an important committee a Member stays there as long as he is in Congress. If a vacancy occurs on an important committee, a member from another committee may be given the place by the Committee on Ways and Means if he desires it, and if he has the seniority and influence to get it. New Members get the places left available. The minority's committee on committees performs this function for them. All selections must be confirmed by election in the House.

WHO APPOINTS THE CHAIRMEN OF COMMITTEES?

They are elected by the House, and theoretically the Committee on Ways and Means makes the selections of chairmen. In actual practice, however, the Member of the majority party who has served longest on any committee is selected as chairman. Here seniority plays an important part. The chairmen, of course, all come from the majority party, and the majority of the members of all committees are of the dominant party.

WHAT IS THE COMMITTEE ON RULES?

This is one of the most important committees, as it controls the destiny of more proposed legislation than any other. Bills from the Ways and Means and Appropriations have the right-of-way, so to speak, and can always be brought up for consideration. Other committees have only a few calendar days in any one session. So many bills reported out cannot be brought up for consideration. The Rules Committee can report a rule for consideration of a bill any day. It can bring in a rule for the consideration of any bill that has been reported out of any committee any time. In the last days of a session special rules to bring out special bills are much in demand. The Rules Committee has much power, certainly has the power of selection, but it must be fair and discriminating, selecting what the majority of Congress seems to want most, as the rule it brings in must be adopted by the House.

WHAT IS THE STEERING COMMITTEE?

This is a committee not much heard of nor mentioned in the newspapers. And I dare say that hardly two dozen Members of the House can tell the names of all of the members on the steering committee. This is a little party adjunct to help promote legislation the majority is interested in, and help to iron out a program of procedure, especially in the closing days of a session. It is composed of nine of the older majority Members. In addition, the majority leader acts as chairman. When important matters are up for consideration the Speaker and the chairman of the Rules Committee sit in. This committee really has a good deal of influence in helping to shape up the legislative program.

WHAT ARE CONFERENCES AND CONFEREES?

The House passes a bill, for instance. It goes to the Senate and may be much amended over there, as are appropriations and tariff bills usually. The House will not accept the amendments. So the bill is sent to conference. The House appoints three or five Members as conferees and the Senate appoints an equal number. These gentlemen meet and hold a conference and discuss the points in disagreement. The conferees of the Senate give up some items and the conferees of the House agree to some. Finally they get together on a bill somewhere between the position taken by each House. Sometimes the conferees do not give up easily; sometimes the conference drags on for days or weeks, and they have run for months. Usually they get together, and usually the conference report is adopted by both Houses. Which end of the Capitol is the most stubborn? Well, the other end, of course.

WHAT RESEARCH ASSISTANCE IS AVAILABLE TO THE MEMBERS?

The Library of Congress has an expanding division known as the Legislative Reference Service, to which most of the Members refer when in search of specific data otherwise not readily available.

This Division to be of the utmost worth to a membership representing conflicting and widely diverse viewpoints must render an objective rather than slanted service, delivering exhaustive, unbiased, factual data irrespective of the personal predilections of its staff.

HOW DO MEMBERS KNOW TO WHOM TO ADDRESS INQUIRIES?

With an expanding Federal service and the growth of governmental machinery, it has been found necessary to bring into being a clearing house known as the United States Information Service. Handling thousands of inquiries asking general information concerning all phases of governmental activity, this Division, in addition, edits a three-times-a-year manual, in which is recorded integrated authoritative information on the organization and functions of the departments and agencies of the Federal Government. It is a volume which no congressional office could well do without.

HOW ARE BILLS WRITTEN?

Although many bills are written by the Members, the Congress has wisely provided for legislative counsel to aid the Members and the committees in drafting measures of a more complicated nature. This corps of expert legislative draftsmen take note of the general objective sought to be attained by the Member and mold his idea into parliamentary legal form.

A Member writes up his bill and drops it in the basket on the Clerk's desk. It is then referred to the appropriate committee. Many bills lie in committee undisturbed and are never heard from again. In some cases they have served their purpose without further action. They have advertised the Member and the project. Many bills are introduced that have not the slightest chance of serious consideration or passage.

STAGES OF A BILL OF THE HOUSE

The following statement with respect to stages of a bill appears in the revision made by Representative Lamneck but is not found in Representative Hardy's original presentation:

First. Introduction: By a Member by laying the bill on the Clerk's table informally. A Member sometimes introduces a petition only, leaving to the committee the drawing of a bill, such a petition referred to a committee having jurisdiction of the subject giving authority to report a bill. Sometimes communications addressed to the House from the executive departments or from other sources are referred to committees by the Speaker and give authority for the committees to originate bills. Messages from the President also are referred by the Speaker of the House and give jurisdiction to the committees receiving them to originate bills.

Second. Reference to a standing or select committee: Public bills are referred under direction of the Speaker; private bills are endorsed with the names of the committees to which they go under the rule by the Members introducing them. Senate bills are referred under direction of the Speaker. A bill is numbered and printed when referred.

Study of the bill is then undertaken by the committee membership, oftentimes by a subdivision of the committee before whom proponents and opponents of the contemplated legislation are heard. The various governmental subdivisions to be affected are consulted, and members of Congress other than committee members are heard.

Third. Reported from the committee: Committees having leave to report at any time make their reports from the floor; other committees make their reports by laying them on the Clerk's table informally. The bill and the report are printed when reported.

Fourth. Placed on the calendar: Occasionally a privileged bill is considered when reported, but usually it is placed with the unprivileged bills on the calendar where it belongs under the rule by direction of the Speaker.

Fifth. Consideration in Committee of the Whole: Public bills which do not raise revenue or make or authorize appropriations of money or property do not go through this stage. All other bills are considered in Committee of the Whole. The stages of consideration in Committee of the Whole are: General debate; reading for amendment under the 5-minute rule; order to lay aside with a favorable recommendation or to rise and report; reporting of to the House.

Sixth. Reading a second time in the House: Bills not requiring consideration in Committee of the Whole are read a second time in full, after which they are open to debate and amendment in any part. Bills considered in Committee of the Whole are read a second time in full in that Committee and when reported out with or without amendments, are not read in full again, but are subject to further debate or amendment in the House unless the previous question is ordered at once.

Seventh. Engrossment and third reading: The question on House bills is taken on ordering the engrossment and third reading at one vote. If decided in the affirmative, the reading a third time usually takes place at once, by title. But any Member may demand the reading in full of the engrossed copy, in which case the bill is laid aside until it can be engrossed. Senate bills come to the House in engrossed form, and the question is put on third reading alone. When the question on engrossment and third reading of a House bill or third reading of a Senate bill is decided in the negative, the bill is lost as much as if defeated on the final passage. The question on engrossment and third reading is not made from the floor, but is put by the Speaker as a matter of course.

Eighth. Passage: The question on the passage of a bill is put by the Speaker as a matter of course, without awaiting a motion from the floor.

Ninth. Transmission to the Senate by message.

Tenth. Consideration by the Senate: In the Senate, House bills are usually referred to committees for consideration and report, after which they have their several readings, with opportunities for debate and amendment. The same procedure takes place in the House as to bills sent from the Senate.

Eleventh. Return of, from the Senate without amendments: If the Senate passes a House bill without amendment it returns it to the House, where it is at once enrolled on parchment for signature. A bill thus passed without amendment goes into possession of the Clerk and is not laid before the House prior to enrollment. If the Senate rejects a House bill the House is informed. Similar procedure occurs when the House passes a Senate bill without amendment.

Twelfth. Return of, from the Senate with amendments: House bills returned with Senate amendments go to the Speaker's table. If any Senate amendment requires consideration in Committee of the Whole the bill is referred by the Speaker informally to the standing committee having jurisdiction, and when that committee reports the bill with recommendations it is referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, to be there considered and reported to the House itself. When no Senate amendment requires consideration in Committee of the Whole the bills come before the House directly from the Speaker's table.

Thirteenth. Consideration of Senate amendments by the House: When a bill with Senate amendments comes before the House the House takes up each amendment by itself and may vote to agree to it, agree to it with an amendment or disagree to it. If it disagrees, it may ask a conference with the Senate or may send notice of its disagreement, leaving it to the Senate to recede or insist and ask the conference.

Fourteenth. Settlement of differences by conference: When disagreements are referred to conference the managers embody their settlement in a report, which is acted on by each House as a whole. When this report is agreed to the bill is finally passed and is at once enrolled for signature.

Fifteenth. Enrollment on parchment: The House in which a bill originates enrolls it.

Sixteenth. Examination by the Committee on Enrolled Bills: While the Committee on Enrolled Bills is described as a joint committee, each branch acts independently. The chairman of each branch affixes to the bills examined a certificate that the bill has been found truly enrolled.

Seventeenth. Signing by the Speaker and President of the Senate: The enrolled bill is first laid before the House of Representatives and signed by the Speaker, whether it be a House or Senate bill, after which it is transmitted to the Senate and signed by the President of that body.

Eighteenth. Transmittal to the President of the United States: The chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills for each House carries the bills from his House to the President. In the House of Representatives a report of the bills taken to the President each day is made to the House and entered on its Journal.

Nineteenth. Action by the President: He may (1) promptly sign it, whereupon it becomes law as of its effective date. He may (2) hold it without taking any action, in which case it becomes law at the expiration of 10 days (Sundays excepted) without his signature, provided Congress is still in session. He may (3) hold the measure, and by so doing, kill it, if Congress adjourns before the bill has been in his hands 10 days (the so-called pocket veto). He may (4) veto the bill outright.

Twentieth. Action on, when returned disapproved: The House to which a disapproved bill is returned has the message read and spread on its Journal. It may then consider at once the question of passing the bill notwithstanding the President's objections, or may postpone to a day certain, or refer to a committee for examination. The vote on passing the bill notwithstanding the President's objections must be carried by two-thirds. If the bill fails to pass in the House to which it is returned, it remains there; but if it passes it is sent to the other House for action.

Twenty-first. Filing with the Secretary of State: When approved by the President a bill is deposited in the Office of the Secretary of State; and when the two Houses have passed a bill notwithstanding the President's objections, the presiding officer of the House which acts on it last transmits it to the Secretary of State.

VETOES

Contrary to the practice followed in most of the State governments, the Chief Executive must approve or disapprove a bill in its entirety; he cannot accept part and reject part.

Nevertheless, not so many bills are vetoed as one might expect. By and large, the opinion of Alexander Hamilton that the veto would "generally be employed with great caution" has been borne out. Grover Cleveland set an all-time high, however, with 358 vetoes, until the administration of Franklin Roosevelt, whose vetoes have exceeded Cleveland's considerably.

The following summary indicates the more recent actions taken:

President	Regular veto	Pocket veto	Total vetoes	Vetoes overridden
Wilson	33	11	44	6
Harding	5	1	6
Coolidge	20	28	48	4
Hoover	21	13	34	3
Roosevel [1]	234	239	473	7
Roosevelt:
First term	102	117	219	2
Second term [1]	132	122	254	5

[1] Up to and including Aug. 28, 1940.

It is interesting to note that seven Presidents made no use of the veto power whatever, the last of these being President Garfield.

ARE MANY BILLS INTRODUCED?

The all-time-high record is held by the Sixty-fifth Congress, during which 33,015 bills were introduced in the two Houses. More nearly normal, although still above the average, is the number introduced in the Seventy-sixth Congress, 18,754 bills.

Not all the bills introduced are enacted, however. The chances are, roughly, about 1 in 10 that the bill introduced will be enacted into law.

WHAT IS "UNANIMOUS CONSENT"?

Many little actions are done in and taken by the House by unanimous consent. The Member asks for unanimous consent to do this or that—to correct the RECORD, to speak for 5 minutes or more out of order, to insert remarks in the RECORD, to change an amendment he has offered, to have a letter read. If there is no objection on the part of any Member, then consent is granted. Frequently a gentleman says, "I object," and that settles that.

The leader of the majority makes many unanimous-consent requests, and usually they are granted. He may ask consent to meet at a certain hour, to adjourn over for a day or two, to hold a night session, to have so many hours for debate on a bill, to take up specified matters on certain days out of order, to set days for the Private and Consent Calendars. The granting of the request saves the passing of motions or the making of rules.

Many bills are passed by unanimous consent. All bills of a private character go on the Private Calendar. And another character of bills go on the Consent Calendar. On days when these bills are in order the Clerk reads the title of the bill, the Speaker asks, "Is there objection?" Any Member may say, "I object," if he desires, in which case the bill cannot be taken up; and the next title is read. If no objection is made, the bill is read and passed very quickly, usually. The theory is that if no one cares to object to a bill certainly many would not vote against it, so it ought to be passed. Both party organizations have several Members who make it their business to study all bills on the Consent Calendars and be ready to object or insist on what they think to be the proper amendments before consent is granted for the bill to be considered.

Often a Member will arise and say: "Reserving the right to object," and ask questions about the bill. This gives the author of the bill a chance to explain or defend it, and sometimes quite a little debate is stirred up even on consent days. After a while somebody may shout "Regular order!" The Speaker says, "Regular order is demanded." Whereupon the gentleman who started the trouble by "reserving the right to object" must immediately make his objection or withdraw it. He may be just as apt to do one as the other, and on his decision rests the destiny of some anxious Member's important bill—for all bills are important to their hopeful authors. On consent days Members with bills on the calendar are most patient, polite, and persuasive in their ways toward the gentlemen who sit at the table and whose business it is to inquire into the merits of bills coming up.

HOW ARE VOTES TAKEN?

Four different ways. Usually the Speaker puts the question in this form: "As many as are in favor (of the motion) say 'Aye'," and then, "As many as are opposed say "No.' " In most instances the vote taken thus is decisive enough to satisfy. But if the Speaker is in doubt, or if it sounds close, any Member may ask for a division. In this case the Speaker asks those in favor to stand up and be counted. Then those opposed to the proposition to stand up and be counted. The Speaker does the counting and announces the result. But if he is still in doubt, or if a demand is made by one-fifth of a quorum—that is, 20 in the Committee of the Whole or 44 in the House—tellers are ordered. The Speaker appoints one gentleman on each side of the question to make the count. The two tellers take their place at the head of the center aisle. All Members favoring the proposition walk through between the tellers and are counted. Then those opposed walk through and are counted. This vote settles most questions.

But a roll call may be demanded by anybody on any question in the House, and if supported by one-fifth of those present it is ordered. This privilege is guaranteed by the Constitution. The Clerk reads the names of the whole membership, and as his or her name is called the Member answers "Aye" or "No." The names of those not voting the first time are read a second time, so that all Members in corridors, cloakrooms, committee rooms, or offices, who have been notified of a roll call by signal bells, may come in and vote.

Roll calls are ordered sometimes to get a full vote on a measure, because of a lack of a quorum, sometimes because Members want to be on record on a measure, and sometimes to put the other side on record against the measure for imaginary political advantage. The roll calls are published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and are sometimes quoted to a Member's advantage or disadvantage, as the case may be.

Many bills of lesser importance and some of greater importance are passed without a roll call. This can be done if a quorum is present when the vote is taken and as many as one-fifth of those present do not demand a roll call. This is done often to save time and sometimes to save Members the embarrassment of having to be recorded for or against a measure.

WHAT IS A QUORUM?

Everybody who ever attended a literary society knows that it requires a quorum to do business. In the House of Representatives a quorum is a majority of the membership. When there are no vacancies in the membership a quorum is 218. There are usually a few vacancies—Members who have died or have resigned and their places yet unfilled. So an actual quorum is usually a little under that figure. Much business is transacted without a quorum. But no business of any character, except to adjourn, can be transacted without a quorum present if any Member objects. All any Member has to do to get a full House is to arise, address the Speaker, and make the point of order that "no quorum is present." The Speaker says, "I will count." If he cannot count a majority present, the doors are closed, the bells are rung in the corridors and House Office Building, and the roll is called. This usually produces a quorum, and business proceeds.

When the House is in Committee of the Whole a hundred Members make a quorum.

IS LEGISLATION MUCH INFLUENCED BY ORATORY?

Not much. People back home may picture the House as a forum for debate upon the merits of the many bills they read about. It is in a way, but most of the debate is as potent as a sham battle. Very few bills that are brought up in the House for action under general or special rules are defeated. I think more than 95 percent of bills thus brought up are passed, despite the forensic display of oratory that may be directed against them, and usually is, by the minority or the opposition. Hardly 1 amendment in 40 offered to bills on the floor is adopted unless offered or accepted by the committee reporting out the bill up for consideration.

Legislation enacted by any Congress is largely that originating with or sponsored by the majority party. Important measures brought up have had thorough scrutiny and a favorable report by a well-organized committee. They have probably had strong backing from the country. Some have had the approval of the steering committee and some have been reported out by the Rules Committee. Such measures are on the program for passage, and long debates and much oratory cannot defeat them. On the other hand, bills that are not slated for passage do not often get up for action in the House.

Committee responsibility is great and committee action influential. On most amendments and on most bills a majority of the Members vote most of the time with the committee—and it is difficult to break into that influence even with fine oratory.

WHAT ARE THE DUTIES OF THE SPEAKER?

He presides over the House, appoints the Chairman to preside over the Committee of the Whole, appoints all special or select committees, appoints conference committees, has the power of recognition of Members, makes many important rulings and decisions in the House. The Speaker may vote, but usually does not except in case of tie. He may appoint a Speaker pro tempore but not for more than 3 days at a time without the consent of the House.

WHAT IS A PARTY LEADER?

There is a majority leader and a minority leader. In talk on the floor we do not refer to Democrats and Republicans usually. It is more dignified, it seems, to refer to the majority and the minority. The majority leader has the more influence, of course, since he has the majority of the membership back of him.

The leader is all the title implies. He leads in party debate, brings forward party programs and policies. His advocacy of or opposition to proposed legislation indicates the party preference. The majority leader has much control over what comes up and when of the legislative program from week to week. When he makes a motion it is nearly always carried. He usually makes the motion to adjourn, and it always carries. If someone else, not authorized to do so, makes a motion to adjourn, it is nearly always defeated.

WHAT ARE THE CHAPLAIN'S DUTIES?

Both Senate and House have a chaplain, who offers prayer at the opening of each daily session, usually at 12 o'clock noon. Both are eloquent and Godly men. The prayers are printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD with the proceedings each day.

WHAT ARE THE DUTIES OF THE WHIP?

The whip is not an official position. It is a party designation. Both parties have their whip. The whip looks after the membership of his party, advises them of weekly programs, and endeavors to have all present when important measures are to be voted upon. When the vote is apt to be close he checks up, finds out who is out of the city, and advises them by wire of the important measure coming up.

The efficacy of the majority in securing the legislation it desires and of the minority in making felt its opposition depends upon the efficiency of the party "machinery" on the floor. The party "whips" are vital cogs in this machinery.

WHAT IS PRINTED THAT BEST TELLS OF THE CONGRESS?

The Constitution of the United States is the most informative thing printed dealing with the Congress. It provides the authority for Congress, specifies its duties, powers, privileges, and much of the procedure in both Houses of Congress. The Constitution is not very long, is easily obtainable in any city or town, and should be read occasionally by every citizen. It will surprise you how much information it contains.

HOW OLD IS THE CONSTITUTION?

It was adopted by the Federal Constitutional Convention in 1787, ratified by the several States, and the new Government provided for by it became fully operative with the inauguration of George Washington as President of the United States on April 30, 1789.

HOW CAN THE CONSTITUTION BE AMENDED?

A proposal to amend the Constitution must be passed by the Congress by a two-thirds vote of the Members present in both House and Senate. The proposed amendment then must be ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States or by conventions in three-fourths of the States; the choice of method of ratification rests with the Congress.

HAVE MANY CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS BEEN ADOPTED?

No, not very many; only 21 in 151 years, and this question brings out some interesting figures and dates.

The first 10 amendments to the Constitution were proposed by the first Congress in 1789 and were practically agreed to before the adoption of the Constitution. The eleventh and twelfth amendments were proposed in 1794 and 1803.

Since 1804 when the twelfth amendment was ratified, over a period of 136 years, only nine amendments have been adopted to the Constitution.

The thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments relate to abolition of slavery, rights of citizenship, and the franchise, coming after the Civil War, and were proposed and ratified between 1865 and 1870.

Since the Civil War period only six amendments have been ratified, as follows:

Sixteenth amendment provides power for Congress to levy a tax on incomes. Was ratified in 1913.

Seventeenth amendment provides that United States Senators shall be elected by popular vote. Previous to its adoption Senators had been chosen by State legislatures. Proposed in 1912 and ratified in 1913.

Eighteenth amendment provides for prohibition. Proposed 1917 and ratified by 1919. Subsequently ratified by all States in the Union except two.

Nineteenth amendment provides the right of suffrage of women. Proposed 1919 and ratified by 1920.

Twentieth amendment is the so-called lame-duck amendment. It relates to the terms of the President, Vice President, Senators, and Representatives and sets the time the Congress shall convene.

The twenty-first amendment repealed the eighteenth or prohibition amendment to the Constitution.

ARE AMENDMENTS SOMETIMES PROPOSED BUT REJECTED BY THE STATES?

Yes; that has occurred several times. Amendments were proposed in 1789—two—1810, 1861, and 1924, that were not ratified by the States. All of these except the last one are out of date, of no use now, and time has shown the wisdom of their rejection.

The one submitted to the States in 1924 was known as the child-labor amendment and reads in part, "The Congress shall have power to limit, regulate, and prohibit the labor of persons under 18 years of age." So far 27 States have ratified this amendment, and 16 State legislatures have voted to reject it, with there being no record of action by five States; namely, Alabama, Mississippi, Nebraska, New York, Rhode Island. Since 36 States must ratify an amendment to make it effective, it would appear that this one also has been lost. Recent social legislation on the part of the various States has materially decreased the alleged necessity for its enactment.

WHO PAYS FOR SPEECHES MEMBERS MAIL OUT?

The Senator or Congressman pays for the speeches he sends out. They are printed usually at the Government Printing Office and are charged for at cost price, but the cost price is about what they would cost in a privately operated print shop. A Member will often send out another Member's speech on some subject he thinks will be of interest to his constituents.

In the fiscal year 1939, Members paid the Public Printer $60,488.47 for speeches. Ten years before, in 1929, the sum was $66,400.07.

WHAT OF THE INFLUENCES OF SENIORITY OR LENGTH OF SERVICE?

In no other place, perhaps, in this broad land of ours does seniority or length of service cut so much figure as it does in the Congress of the United States.

It is the first discouraging thing the new Member meets, and many have been the bitter denunciations of its rule. Right or wrong, however, the rule of seniority has long been an important factor in the Congress, and no one these days has the optimism to predict that it will soon be abolished.

The new Member meets the rule of seniority when he applies for his first office room. He gets only what is left after all older Members have made their selections. He may file on a vacant room in the House Office Building. Another Member who has served before may come along and take it away from him. He may file on numerous rooms and see them go to older Members. The oldest Member requesting a vacant office room gets it.

He meets with it at any official dinner he attends. The new Member sits near the foot of the table; the older Members, in the order of their term of service, near the head of the table.

The new Members find the rule of seniority when they apply for committee assignment. The older Members pick out the favored places; the new Members must work their way up.

The new Member finds it in the committee room when he attends the first meeting of his committee. He finds his name on his place at the foot of the table. The oldest member of the committee will probably be the chairman at the head of the table. And by length of service they rank down to the newest members at the foot.

New Members are welcome and are shown every courtesy on the floor. They are never hazed nor snubbed. But there are some years in the beginning of their service when new Members must feel that they are hardly in the thick of things—when they must think that they would like to sit, even in the committee room, up near the middle of the table.

The important places in the House go to the older Members. Choice committee assignments go to the older Members who desire them. The chairman of every committee is, almost without exception, the longest-serving majority member on the committee. Chairmen of committees have a good deal of influence and get their names on the most important bills.

A great deal of legislation is written by or determined by the conferees on conference committees between the House and Senate. Almost invariably the conferees appointed by both House and Senate are the two oldest Republican and the oldest Democratic members of the committees reporting out the bills in each House. Conferees have had much to do with the final writing of appropriation and tariff bills especially, as well as with many other important bills in which there is a difference between House and Senate. Members may orate and the two Houses may vote, but the conferees, the old boys, bring back the language agreed upon, and it will be adopted.

Of course, this seniority influence is not unique nor original in the Congress. It works similarly in every legislative body in the country from the city council up. It works in the local lodges and grand lodges of every order. It is especially strong in the national meetings of a number of church organizations. It is particularly noticed in the Congress and commented upon because the Congress is more or less a permanent working body of long standing and represents all of the people of our country.

Legislation is unquestionably much influenced by the men who have served long and occupy these important places in the organization of the House, and greater influence in and with the departments is certainly felt by those who have had the advantage of knowledge and acquaintance gained by years on the job. This long service in the House brings Members in contact with the personnel of the several departments and helps them to be of service in many little and some big ways to their constituents back home.

Seniority or length of service in the House of Representatives is certainly a large factor in giving a Member position and influence in the Congress and in Washington. Brilliancy and unusual ability, of course, count for much, but without years of service they do not get one far here. Those districts which have returned their Members term after term have contributed much toward the cause of good government and are today represented by Members in Congress who have standing and influence in Washington.

[Applause.]

LXXXVI——787

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. DARDEN of Virginia, for an indefinite period, on account of inspection of naval bases in the Pacific with a subcommittee of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

SENATE

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1940

(Legislative day of Wednesday, September 18, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou, whose infinite tenderness for all burdened lives betokened the full and free expression of Thy love, whose contact with all want and misery caused the sacrament of human sympathy to live and glow with radiant power: Keep us, we beseech Thee, in perfect harmony one with another, and, by the influence of our association with all humble folk, may we lay aside the garments of ambition and only be content with the vesture of holy aspiration. Teach us to forsake the love that cleaveth to the dust and make us rich in the treasure that rust cannot corrupt.

Humble us to Thine own yoke of freedom, O Thou whose feet have toiled the rugged way, whose lips have drawn our human breath, lest we be no longer strong enough to bear the burdens of the weak, and all our passionate service in the cause of liberty become a faded dream. We ask it in Thy name, O Lord, our strength and our Redeemer. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Monday, September 23, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Michigan, praying that the United States transfer 25 Boeing bombers to the Royal Air Force of Great Britain, and also that the United States render other aid to the British in the United Kingdom in the pending crisis abroad, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

RESOLUTION OF SOUTH BOSTON LITHUANIAN CITIZENS' ASSOCIATION—INDEPENDENCE OF LITHUANIA

Mr. WALSH presented a resolution adopted by the South Boston (Mass.) Lithuanian Citizens' Association, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas Lithuania has experienced a crisis which has wiped out its territorial boundaries, and has extinguished its very independent existence at the hands of Soviet Russia;

Whereas history shows that the nations of the world owe Lithuania an expression of gratitude for its part in checking barbarian advances, and fostering the advance of civilization throughout the ages;

Whereas of the 7 new nations appearing upon the map of Europe at the close of the World War, and of the 15 which have been subjugated, dismembered, or obliterated in the last few years, Lithuania is perhaps the oldest racially;

Whereas Lithuania is geographically so located as to be in a most strategic position in eastern Europe;

Whereas said strategic position has made Lithuania the cockpit of eastern Europe, and rendered it the battle arena over many centuries, subjecting its territory to the rigors of every war of major importance;

Whereas its geographic position caused it to suffer greater hardships than any other country during the World War;

Whereas the effects of the World War on its numerical, economic, and financial strength rendered its recovery slower than that of most other nations;

Whereas the League of Nations has guaranteed the independence of small nations;

Whereas governments of democratic form have, by expression or implication, indicated a desire for the continuation of a democratic form of government in nations, irrespective of size;

Whereas Lithuania declared its independence on February 16, 1918, with Vilna as its capital;

Whereas the independent Government of Lithuania has been recognized in fact by all the great nations of the world;

Whereas the efficacy and sanctity of treaties has always been regarded as a means of maintaining peaceful international relations;

Whereas the ultimatum which Soviet Russia issued in September 1939, demanding the privilege of establishing military bases, was enshrouded with the pretense that it was designed to offer Lithuania defense—an unsolicited defense;

Whereas subsequently, Soviet Russia returned to Lithuania about one-fourth of the land which she, herself, in 1920 had acknowledged to belong to Lithuania, retaining the other three-quarters for herself;

Whereas observing the discontent of the residents who had remained on this land, Soviet Russia exiled 10,000 of them to distant parts of Russia, to the anguish and bitter sorrow of relatives who were ruthlessly separated;

Whereas, becoming cognizant of social and economic unrest, Soviet Russia hastened its domination after subjugating Finland, and on June 15, 1940, completed definite occupation;

Whereas, under pretext of taking offense at alleged misconduct of Lithuania in reference to a few Russian soldiers, a charge grossly fabricated, Soviet Russia created an atmosphere of apprehension, and summoned the Lithuanian Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs to Moscow;

Whereas, on the evening of June 15, Foreign Minister Urbsys received an ultimatum demanding a cabinet favorable to Soviet

Russia, and insisting on the privilege to establish an unlimited Russian army of occupation;

Whereas Lithuania aiming to adopt a conciliatory and placatory attitude to its gigantic neighbor, offered to the popular General Rastikus the task of forming a new cabinet, but Soviet Russia countered by sending Dekanozov to Lithuania to form the cabinet, thus insuring that the popular uncompromising wish for independence, freedom, and liberty be stultified;

Whereas with the Cabinet of Dekanozov's making, freedom shrieked, liberty tumbled, for the overpowering Soviet Russian horde, numbering a mechanized army of several hundred thousand, would tolerate no opposition;

Whereas thus was created the Palecki Cabinet, composed almost of its entirety of enemies of Lithuania, the one exception in its membership being made to avoid sudden and damaging reactions to the rate of foreign exchange;

Whereas with the creation of this Cabinet came the demise of all political parties having any semblance of democratic principles;

Whereas the only party permitted was the so-called Working People's Party, and consequently balloting and elections became a fantastical fiction, in the face of which a congress was elected on July 14 to perpetuate the fiction, with the outcome being a fanatical alleged majority of 99.19 percent;

Whereas said elections of July 14 gave no opportunity whatsoever for a free expression of popular will, in view of the absence of party delineations, and the presence of no alternatives on the ballot;

Whereas on July 21 this so elected, so-called congress convened in Kaunas, and purported to vote for union with Soviet Russia;

Whereas the Under Secretary of State of the United States has deprecated and sorely denounced these atrocities on the part of Soviet Russia under the guise of voluntary self-extinction, and has recalled Minister Owen J. C. Norem for "consultation," issuing a strong note of condemnation simultaneously: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the nations of the world should show their appreciation of Lithuania's contribution to the advance of civilization, and manifest toward Lithuania a helpful and cooperative attitude; and be it further

Resolved, That the nations of the world recognize the depredations of the World War, which caused Lithuania's present lack of strength against Russian odds, and lend Lithuania succor in this its hour of need; and be it further

Resolved, That the nations of the world recognize the legal right of Lithuania to its independence and its legal right to sovereignty; and be it further

Resolved, That the nations of the world make every effort to reestablish the efficacy and sanctity of treaties as a means to peaceful international relations; and be it further

Resolved, That the nations of the world repudiate the doctrine of might being right, whether might take the form of resorting to arms or the circuitous, dubious, and fictitious course of coercion and duress through the appearances of voluntary choice; and be it further

Resolved, That the nations of the world indicate to Soviet Russia their displeasure at its ignoring of its own decrees and acknowledgments of Lithuanian independence and sovereignty; and be it further

Resolved, That the conduct of Soviet Russia in subjugating a nation only a fraction as strong, at a time of general international unrest, imposing on it arbitrary cultural limitations, and undermining its social, economic, religious order is seriously deprecated.

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President, Secretary of State, Members of Congress of the United States, to the Governments of Great Britain, France, Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia, to the League of Nations, to Soviet Russia, and to the press.

DEFICIENCIES OF NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, the deficiencies of national defense become increasingly clear as we proceed with the present program. We are inseparably bound as a nation to the destinies of the North American continent. We cannot afford to neglect the defense needs of any part of this great area, vast and far-reaching as it is. I wish to call attention to two important matters in this connection. The first is represented by an editorial entitled "Needed; a Road to Alaska" which appeared in the Pittsburgh Press, Saturday, September 21. The second is found in an important letter I have received from Mr. Samuel Diescher, distinguished consulting engineer of Pittsburgh, Pa., in which he reviews a recent book written by H. Dyson Carter, Sea of Destiny. This book reveals for the first time the grave need for defense in the Hudson Bay area.

I ask unanimous consent to have these two articles printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks and referred to the Senate Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the editorial and letter were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEEDED: A ROAD TO ALASKA

In their survey of west coast defenses, members of the United States-Canadian Joint Defense Board are flying as far north as Sitka, Alaska.

Sitka, an island village far southeast of the great bulk of the Alaskan mainland, is the site of one of the new naval air bases being built for the defense of the territory. Another is being installed on Kodiak Island. The Army, likewise, is rushing air bases at Anchorage and Fairbanks on the mainland.

Those bases are costing a great many million dollars, and their operation will be expensive. But Americans who have read about Russian military activities in and along the Bering Strait, and who are aware of Japan's widening imperialistic horizons, will not fuss about the expense.

At the same time it is well to bear in mind that in time of war these bases might be quickly isolated by an aggressor, especially if the United States fleet were engaged elsewhere, as would be likely. There is no railroad from the United States to Alaska. There is no highway. The only transportation, aside from that by air, is by a difficult and often dangerous sea route, which offers ideal conditions for hostile submarines and mine layers. It is said that if sea communications were cut off, Alaska would begin to starve within 3 months.

All this leads up to a question: "Isn't the time at hand for doing something about that long-talked-about highway to Alaska?

This highway has been for some years the subject of study by American and Canadian commissions. The road would run about 1,400 miles—from the terminus of the Canadian National Railroad (about 1,000 miles north of Seattle) to Fairbanks, deep in the interior of Alaska.

It would run to the east of the Coast Range, which would protect it both from the enemy and from the worst of the weather. It would cost, according to Donald McDonald, a member of the Alaskan International Highway Commission, up to $30,000,000, and he says that "with 2,000 men properly equipped on the job, it could be built in a single season."

It would be a military asset, not only because it would immediately simplify the problem of wartime supply for our Alaskan outposts but because it would encourage emigration—of "Okies," for instance—to unexploited Alaska, and thus provide a larger population on which to draw for emergency defense.

The hitch about this road heretofore has been that about five-sixths of the money would have to be spent on Canadian soil and only about one-sixth in Alaska, and Canada has not been interested in spending that kind of money on what it regards as principally a United States problem.

It seems to us that now is the time for Ottawa and Washington to make a deal—with this country shouldering the heavier share of the cost—and get going on this highway.

We may need it badly one of these days.

S. DIESCHER & SONS,
CONSULTING ENGINEERS,
Pittsburgh, Pa., September 19, 1940.

Senator JAMES J. DAVIS,
307 Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

This letter deals further with the matter of our national defense, regarding which I wrote you on May 22, which writing was in response to questions you had asked regarding vulnerability of the Pittsburgh district to air attack through Canada. The instant letter deals with your recent further question, namely:

"In what manner does the possibility of invasion of Canada through the Hudson Straits and Bay, as presented in the recently published book, Sea of Destiny, affect our need of national defense against invasion from Canada?"

My previous letter dealt with the paramount need of powerful aerial defense of the Pittsburgh region, which, because of its including nearly half the steel-making capacity of the United States, really constitutes the heart of our national defense. The importance of promptly establishing powerful aerial defense in the Pittsburgh region may in no manner be regarded as relegated to secondary rank by what will be said in the following paragraphs, for it is obvious that safeguarding all of the United States from aerial attack from the north cannot be accomplished by an adequate defense provision in but one region in the vast extent of the highly industrialized zone that crosses North America along the common boundary of the United States and Canada.

The book Sea of Destiny, by H. Dyson Carter, appeared recently and was not known to me until after my writing you on May 22, prior to which time we, however, knew from the maps that the Hudson Bay promised an enemy nation powerful enough to occupy it a ready-made salient penetrating Canada southwardly quite dangerously close to our borders, which salient pointed directly at our major steel-making district, and, moreover, penetrated even more nearly toward our major sources of iron ore, as well as toward virtually all of our automotive and some of our prospective airplane and mechanized armament-producing regions.

Also, because Hudson Bay is a body of sea water and subject to heavy tides, we could conclude that its ice-free season would continue longer than that of the Great Lakes. It can be seen from the maps of our continent that Hudson Bay has an area about half that of the Gulf of Mexico; that the region is habitable, for it possesses a seaport, namely, Churchill, where it is known generally that large grain-storage facilities are located, from the harbor at which storage ships are navigated across Hudson Bay through Hudson Straits to Europe; and also the maps show that Hudson Straits seem capable of being fortified against enemy seacraft passing through them to occupy Hudson Bay; but I for one did not know until I read Mr. Carter's book that the bay and straits are virtually ice-free all year around as far as present-day navigation is concerned, nor did I know that defense of these waters is virtually nonexistent, and, besides this, that this highly menacing condition is added to by the condition that the entire stretch from Lake Superior northwestwardly to Alaska is dotted with countless lakes suitable for camouflaged aircraft station use, with hardly any humanity in the region to bring word of invasion to military headquarters, and that Canada had afforded Germany the opportunity to make an aerial survey of this region.

Although many of us know of the swindling of our public by railroad groups during the building of our early transcontinental lines, which, through such scandalous ventures as the Credit Mobilier, added much to the severity of our panic in 1873, I for one did not know until I read Mr. Carter's book that similar financial depredations had been indulged in during the building of the transcontinental railroads in Canada, and that, aided by shipping activities plying the St. Lawrence and the Atlantic, these Canadian railroads, to prevent the use of the Hudson Bay waters for lower-cost transportation, did succeed in preventing a northerly directed railroad being built to the Hudson Bay port, Churchill, until as late as 1927.

Can there be any wonder that there has prevailed the impression that Hudson Bay is a dangerous sea to navigate when Canada itself permitted the teaching of this by propaganda continuing from even through the days of the Hudson Bay Co., as Mr. Carter shows, until virtually now?

Mr. Carter's presentation makes clear that Canada can protect neither its Hudson Bay nor any of its other shores from occupation by a powerful enemy maritime nation. If given a moment's thought, the truth of this seems clear from the very fact that although Canada has an area about equal to that of the United States, yet it has no more than but one-thirteenth the population of the United States.

England now has all it can do to keep the Axis Powers from promptly devastating the English island itself and as a next step attacking England's possessions, among which Canada ranks as a dominion. Canada has, a year ago, as a dominion, separately declared war against Germany.

Moreover, Canada is the bread basket of England. How soon will Canada's turn come, and then what next?

Thus far during the present calendar year, the Axis Powers have conquered, or otherwise subjugated, Finland, Denmark, Norway, Luxemburg, Holland, Belgium, France, Latvia, Estonia, Lithuania, Albania, and Rumania—a dozen countries in all. If no more than these fall before the year's end, the Axis Powers are already entitled to chalk on the martian scoreboard a world history record of one country submerged into slavery for each month of the year.

Should we extend any credence of good faith to peace suggestions that may before long come from the Axis Powers with these achievements behind them, we will fall into a trap laid only to give the Axis Powers time to consolidate their gains. We may be sure that the Axis Powers will not cease fighting while in any quarter there may be gains in prospect. If England proves not possible to invade, the warfare will likely shift to other scenes. It seems that for decades to come whatever we accomplish possessing the nature of adequate defense will have to be vigilantly and constantly maintained in full working order, for as long as the Axis Powers have strength we can never know when the sword of Damocles is to fall upon our Nation's head.

Should the axis powers fail to invade England, what better way could these powers find to cripple England than by entering Canada's back door? Then where would our much depended upon British Fleet be occupied? Surely that fleet would then have to protect its shipping from distances much greater than between Canada and England. It could certainly receive no aid from the defense base we have yet to provide at Newfoundland. Its navy would likely have to close the St. Lawrence and would, besides this, have to break its way through a heavily mined and otherwise axis-defended comparatively narrow stretch of sea about 300 miles long, bounded on both sides by enemy fortified cliffs of mountainous height.

It seems apparent that our country must give immediate attention to the protection of the Hudson Straits and also the shores of Hudson Bay. This need seems imminent.

The matter of protecting the Hudson Bay region as well as the intensely industrialized regions within the northern part of our own country seems to have been neglected, and because of this neglect seems now all the more urgent. We know very well that should the Axis Powers wish to attack us there will be no more preliminaries than at most a few violent speeches regarding claimed breaches we committed against the Axis Powers, wherewith war against us would commence. Moreover, it is conceivable that the attack may come first entirely without warning, for such speeches directed against our country can no longer have any major nonwarring democracies as an audience, for there would remain none.

Hoping that something materializes on defense fields to protect our highly industrialized centers along our northerly borders, I remain,

Yours sincerely,

SAMUEL E. DIESCHER.

EXTENDING THE CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 960) extending the classified executive civil service of the United States.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, when the Senate recessed last evening I was in the process of stating the fundamental propositions contained in the Logan-Walter bill. I explained that I was doing it at that time, while the matter before the Senate was the motion of the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] to take up the civil-service bill, because the proponents of the Logan-Walter bill month after month have been unable to secure the privilege—if we may call it that—the concurrence of our leadership in giving us an opportunity to present this matter in its own way on its merits on the floor of the Senate.

I shall conclude my remarks rather briefly, in 20 minutes or so, I hope; and, as far as I am concerned, I trust that there may then be a vote on the motion to take up the other measure. I shall ask for a yea-and-nay vote, and, if successful in securing that vote, shall myself vote "no" on the motion, although, as I stated yesterday, I have no opposition whatever at this time to the bill which would be before the Senate if the motion should prevail. If, however, there are enough Senators so interested in the civil-service bill that they cannot bring themselves to the point of giving us an opportunity to present the Logan-Walter bill ahead of it, and if that measure is taken up, then immediately upon the conclusion of the consideration of that measure we propose to seek recognition for the purpose, if we can, of making the Logan-Walter bill the business before the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Have the Senator and his associates contemplated the possibility of offering the Logan-Walter bill as an amendment to the civil-service bill? It would be in order.

Mr. BURKE. The possibility of offering the Logan-Walter bill as an amendment to the civil-service bill has been suggested. Personally, I should not like to do that, because I prefer to have each of these matters handled upon the basis of its own merits. I assume, however, that there would be no objection to any other Senator offering the bill as an amendment; and whenever it comes before the Senate, in whatever form, as an amendment to another bill or in its own right, I expect to support it fully, because this bill which seeks to throw some reasonable checks and curbs around the administrative agencies in their handling of the property and personal rights of citizens who are brought before them appears to me to be one of high importance which certainly should have the attention of the present Congress.

As I say, if the motion to take up another measure prevails, and if the Logan-Walter bill is not offered as an amendment to that measure which will then be pending, we shall seek recognition immediately upon its conclusion. If, however, some other Senator is recognized to move to bring up another measure, that motion being debatable as this one is, we propose then—this subcommittee which has been unanimously instructed by the Senate Judiciary Committee to bring this matter before the Senate—we propose then, whatever the other measure may be, really to discuss at considerable length the merits of the Logan-Walter bill. The senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], and the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], if he is here, and myself, who constitute the subcommittee, will each and all of us have a good deal to say at that time about the merits of the Logan-Walter bill, and the necessity of bringing it to action at this session of Congress.

On yesterday I had attempted to show that, after all, the heart of this proposal dealing with administrative agencies is this: There are other features in the bill, but the central point in the bill is that it requires a real record of the administrative action in determinations made in quasi-judicial proceedings. That is the first thing. In the second place, upon that record it requires a judicial review to insure that the administrative action is within the limits of the Constitution and the statutes. Third, the record must show that a full and fair opportunity was afforded to all interested parties to present their case and be heard upon the matter upon which the administrative determination is based. So far as the main feature of the bill is concerned, those are the three things that are required—a record of the proceedings, a record which must show that the determination made was within the limitations of the Constitution and the statutes applicable; a record which must show that all parties interested had notice, and a right to be heard.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President——

Mr. BURKE. I gladly yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator does not mean to intimate that the bill covers only those agencies to which he has referred as exercising quasi-judicial functions, does he?

Mr. BURKE. The point I was making was that in all agencies exercising quasi-judicial functions to which this bill would apply what I have outlined would be the operation of the proposal so far as review is concerned. If there are administrative agencies which do not exercise quasi-judicial functions, and if there are such agencies which are not exempted from the bill, this provision would not apply. Possibly there is some point in what the Senator is saying. Are there such agencies which do not exercise quasi-judicial functions?

Mr. MINTON. The Senator must know that the Veterans' Administration, by way of illustration, does not exercise any quasi-judicial functions.

Mr. BURKE. If the Veterans' Administration is not specifically exempted from the provisions of this bill, I hope it will be, because, so far as I know, there is no need or occasion to make the provisions of the Logan-Walter bill applicable to the Veterans' Administration.

Mr. MINTON. How about the Social Security Board?

Mr. BURKE. Some other members of the committee who are more familiar than I am with the operations of the Social Security Board would have to answer that question.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator is sponsoring this bill.

Mr. BURKE. I am a member of the subcommittee.

Mr. MINTON. Yes; the Senator is a member of the subcommittee, but he is sponsoring this bill. I want to know from the Senator if it is not true that this bill applies to any action which might be taken by the Veterans' Administration and by the Social Security Board.

Mr. BURKE. I know that the Social Security Board is not exempt from the bill, and so, of course, the provisions of the bill would apply fully to the Social Security Board. A fight was made on that point in the other Chamber, to try to have the Social Security Board exempted, and the House by a tremendous majority refused to do so. But I repeat what I said about the Veterans' Administration, which is a very different matter—that if it is not specifically exempted, I am sure a simple amendment would meet with no opposition from any members of the committee.

Mr. MINTON. Of course, the Senator knows that the Railroad Retirement Board comes under this bill, and it does not exercise quasi-judicial functions.

Mr. BURKE. I also know that the National Labor Relations Board comes under the bill.

Mr. MINTON. Ah, and that is what the Senator is after.

Mr. BURKE. I am not after anyone; but I know that the need for the enactment of this bill is more apparent——

Mr. MINTON. Real.

Mr. BURKE. More real in the case of the National Labor Relations Board and a few other agencies than in the case of many of the other agencies. Take, for instance, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the oldest of them all.

Mr. MINTON. It is exempted.

Mr. BURKE. Yes; it is specifically exempted.

Mr. MINTON. So there is no need to talk about it.

Mr. BURKE. I am illustrating my point. When we began to consider this great evil that has developed in some of the administrative agencies, we naturally looked first to the oldest of them all to see how they had avoided——

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. I should like to finish my sentence, but I yield.

Mr. MINTON. This oldest agency to which the Senator refers, the Interstate Commerce Commission, was excluded from the first draft of the bill which was introduced at the behest of the American Bar Association.

Mr. BURKE. Yes.

Mr. MINTON. It always was excluded from the bill.

Mr. BURKE. I will answer that statement when I come to that point.

Let me say that when we on the committee, taking what was before us, began to consider this question, we looked at the Interstate Commerce Commission to see whether this oldest of all the administrative agencies might have piled up mountain-high grievances after grievances during the years. We found, to our very great enlightenment and interest, that so far as the Interstate Commerce Commission are concerned there is no real need for a measure of this kind, because, by virtue of the fact that they have had a different personnel, and possibly because they are dealing with problems of a different nature, they have worked out the matter in their own way; and there is no objection to exempting the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. MINTON. But the Interstate Commerce Commission was exempted in the very first draft of the bill that was introduced, so the Senator certainly was not considering putting the Interstate Commerce Commission back under it; was he?

Mr. BURKE. I am telling the Senator the reaction of the committee. In the course of the 3 or 4 years' study of this subject—which the Senator evidently likes to brush aside, saying that there were never any hearings—consideration was given from the beginning to the question whether there should first be passed a law from the operation of which there would be no exemptions at all, all the agencies to be included.

Personally, speaking only for myself, I favored that provision from the start, and felt we should not exclude the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, or any other agency, but that the law should be made applicable to them all. That was my original position. But going on a little further and studying the question, I could see that the matter applies differently to different agencies, and that there was no need or reason for including the Interstate Commerce Commission, and since in the draft of the bill it was out, we did not need to take it out again.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator says that the Interstate Commerce Commission is a quasi-judicial body—as it is—and, of course, it was exempted because of its long experience, and the practice which it had established. Was that the basis upon which these exemptions were made?

Mr. BURKE. I assume the Senator wants me to say that some agencies were exempted because they were able to bring enough pressure to bear to have them exempted.

Mr. MINTON. I do not want the Senator to say anything except what is the truth. I want to know if it is a fact that the committee sought to exempt merely those agencies which exercise quasi-judicial functions, such as the Interstate Commerce Commission, which had a well built-up procedure to which the Senator has referred.

Mr. BURKE. The subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary sought to bring within the scope of the measure every administrative agency which needed to have Congress place some check and curb upon the way it was proceeding to deal with the citizen, so far as his rights were concerned, when he came before the agency.

Mr. MINTON. Does the Senator think that the Veterans' Administration should be exempted?

Mr. BURKE. I do. I came to feel eventually that if we were to make any exemptions at all, there were a number of bureaus which could very well be exempted, because I could see no great evil in the way in which they were handling matters, such as I see clearly spread before my eyes in the case of other agencies. While, as I have said, I started in originally, and even now would think it might be preferable, to put them all in, and let the law apply to them all alike, whether they needed it or not, if we are to have some exemptions, to which I have no serious objection, then I would exempt the Veterans' Administration.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. I merely wanted to observe that while the discussion which has been proceeding between the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Indiana is, without question, of much value and is of great importance, it seems to me there is a more important question involved than any of the details of this measure at this time. As I see it, the important question is whether, when a measure has received the consideration this bill has had, has passed the House of Representatives by an overwhelming vote, and has been on the Senate calendar since May 17, 1939, the Senate of the United States is to be given the privilege of voting "yes" or "no" on the question as to whether the measure shall be taken up, or whether under the procedure of the Senate a measure of such importance can be delayed, and Senators denied the right to vote, merely because a Senator cannot secure recognition from the Chair to make a motion to take it up. To me, that presents a very serious question in regard to our method of making laws.

Mr. BURKE. I agree with the Senator. I yield further to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. There occurs to me the other side of that question—that since no hearings were held, and the departments and governmental agencies were given no opportunity to appear before the committee, it would be wise to defer action. The Senator from Nebraska holds up a volume of hearings. I know all about those. There were no hearings on the bill now being discussed.

Mr. BURKE. On the bill bearing the present number.

Mr. MINTON. That is correct; and that is the bill we are going to pass, if we pass any, and that is the bill for which the Senator from New Mexico has been asking consideration. On that bill no one was permitted to appear before the committee to testify as to how it would affect the various bureaus and boards in Washington.

The Senator knows that at the request of the President the Attorney General of the United States appointed a committee of distinguished lawyers, headed by Dean Acheson, upon which committee is a former president of the American Bar Association, as well as the present chief justice of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, Chief Justice Groner, and many other distinguished lawyers. During the past few months they have been making a study of the various Government departments, department by department, to determine how the proposed legislation would affect them, and how legislation should be framed to affect them. Does not the Senator think that his committee should take into consideration the studies this important committee has been making during many months to the very things to which the bill relates? Is not that important? Is it not just as important as the point referred to by the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, there are at least half a dozen things I should like to say in answer to that suggestion,

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH rose.

Mr. BURKE. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Recurring to the question of the exemption of the Interstate Commerce Commission, if Mr. Madden and the two Mr. Smiths were appointed on the Interstate Commerce Commission and obtained control of the policies of the Interstate Commerce Commission because of their ability to control people, I should like to ask the Senator whether or not he would want the Interstate Commerce Commission included under the bill.

Mr. BURKE. I will answer the question in this way: The great legal adviser of the National Labor Relations Board was Mr. Fahy, and the decisions of the Board, and its actions to which I objected most seriously, and to which I still object, of course had the approval, from the legal standpoint, at least, of Mr. Fahy. Yet when Mr. Fahy's name came before the Committee on Judiciary as a nominee for a high position in the Department of Justice, I very gladly gave my approval to the nomination, because I consider him an able man. I thought there was some quirk in his reasoning, and that he was wrong in some of the things he did as the chief legal adviser to the National Labor Relations Board, but I do not dispute his ability, or question the very real likelihood that in another field, where he will not have the opportunity to make the mistakes he made in his former position, he may do very well.

In reference to the members of the Board whose names have been mentioned, if they were placed in some position such as membership on the Interstate Commerce Commission, where they did not start in with the preconceived notion that they were there to do a certain job of national unionization of all the workers of the country, whether the workers wanted it or not, and in a particular kind of unionization, I have no doubt that Mr. Madden and Mr. Edwin Smith—the other Mr. Smith is no longer on the Board—might do very well in some other field. It was because of the erroneous ideas and the prejudices with which they started upon their task, their one-sided view of the whole matter, that I objected to many of the things they have done on the National Labor Relations Board.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Suppose they "got tough" with the railroad companies when they were on the Board; would the Senator then think the Interstate Commerce Commission should be included in the proposed act?

Mr. BURKE. I am in favor of any regulating agency acting just as "tough" as is necessary with anyone who does not obey the law, but if they are going to be "tough," I want them to start in with open and fair minds. I would recommend, as a complete answer to what the Senator from Washington has been saying, that he read the testimony before the Smith committee of the House of Representatives, as to what has been going on in the National Labor Relations Board, and if with his open mind, and his judicial powers, which some day possibly are going to be called into active play, he does not agree with me that things have not been right in the National Labor Relations Board, convicted out of their own mouths, then I shall be greatly surprised.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. I will yield in a moment.

Mr. MINTON. I merely want to revert to the matter of Mr. Fahy before the Senator goes away.

Mr. BURKE. I am not going away. I am coming back to the question the Senator asked originally.

Mr. MINTON. Since the Senator from Nebraska has referred to Mr. Fahy and to the peculiar quirk of mind Mr. Fahy had, and to the fact that, notwithstanding that quirk of mind of Mr. Fahy, the Senator from Nebraska was for him for a new job in the Department of Justice, I should like to say, in regard to that quirk of mind of Mr. Fahy, that the Supreme Court of the United States has agreed with that quirk of mind of Mr. Fahy in 12 out of 16 cases in toto, and partially in two of the others, and that was not the new Supreme Court; that was the old Supreme Court.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I wish to add a word about Mr. Fahy's appearances before the Court. Recently I read in an article, I do not recall the name of the publication, the statement that some criticism had been made of Mr. Fahy because he speaks in a very low tone of voice, and is a very mild-mannered gentleman, as he is. The chairman of the Board said, "Yes; he does speak in a low tone of voice, but it is loud enough for the Justices of the Supreme Court to hear and understand."

Mr. BURKE. It is certainly true that the National Labor Relations Board, with respect to its record in the Supreme Court, has had an unusual experience, so far as administrative and quasi-judicial boards or any kind of boards are concerned, in that in the overwhelming majority of cases its contentions have been withheld. But on that point I wish to say that if the Senator from Indiana would read some of the decisions of the circuit courts of appeals of this country, courts scattered all over the country, passing on decisions of the National Labor Relations Board which came before them, in which cases, upon the decisions of the Board being overturned by the circuit courts of appeals, the Board never took them to the Supreme Court for decision, he would have a little different conception of the high standing of the National Labor Relations Board. Take, for instance, the case of the Union Pacific Stages, Inc., tried in the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals, involving a unanimous decision of the Board, which the circuit court of appeals, by a unanimous decision, overturned, and presented an indictment against the National Labor Relations Board and its process of reasoning and of handling these matters, the most startling and condemnatory I have ever seen in the decision of any court in reference to any body.

There are not one or two, but a very large number of other decisions of the circuit courts of appeals of this country, calling the Labor Board to account. So do not tell me that the Board has not made any serious mistakes, or has set out to try to correct them when they were called to its attention. My chief criticism of the Board is that when its errors have been called to its attention in the courts or elsewhere, it goes on in its own way, because it knows in advance just what it wants to do, and it is going to do that regardless of Congress, as demonstrated in the recent trouble of the Board before the Appropriations Committee in the House. Regardless of what Congress wants, regardless of what the courts say, here is a Board which considers itself so powerful, and so certain are its members—or its old members were—of their conclusions as to just what ought to be done, that it has gone on much in its own way.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HERRING in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I am not here to say that the National Labor Relations Board has not made any mistakes, and possibly some very serious ones, but I do say, since the Senator referred to its record in the Supreme Court, and said it was an outstanding record, that he was right about that. Then he referred to the record of the National Labor Relations Board in the circuit courts of appeals. I wish to say to the Senator that the Board's record is equally good in the circuit courts of appeals. The Board has won about the same percentage of its cases in the circuit courts of appeals that it has in the Supreme Court of the United States. There were some cases in which the Board was not upheld, and some cases in which the Board was totally wrong, but there never was any agency of the Federal Government which has had a record in the Supreme Court and in the circuit courts of appeals at all comparable with the record of the National Labor Relations Board. Further than that, the Attorney General of the United States in filing his report said that the record of these administrative agencies in the Supreme Court of the United States and in appellate courts above the bureaus was better than that of the lower courts themselves.

Mr. BURKE. The Senator from Indiana is as wrong about the record of the National Labor Relations Board in the circuit courts of appeals, when we get down to the essence of it, as he is correct with respect to its record in the Supreme Court. Taking the percentages of cases won, a very strong showing can be made for the Labor Board in the lower courts, because in the days when the act first became effective, when its constitutionality was being questioned, and when it was uncertain, for instance, whether the employer against whom charges were filed did or did not have the right to go into the United States District Court if he denied he was engaged in interstate commerce so as to come under the provisions of the act, there were many cases all over the country involving exactly the same point. If I remember correctly—I may be wrong about it, but it was a very large number—96 cases were in the courts, all involving exactly the same question. The question was whether the employer had a right, before the Board had held its hearings and decided the matter as to whether he had violated the act, to submit to a court the question whether he came within the act at all by being engaged in interstate commerce. So when one decision was made on that question finally in the Supreme Court, the clearly correct decision, upholding what was maintained by the Board, that under the language of the act as Congress had passed it, the employer had no right to go into court at all until after the Board had taken the final action, then there were 96 decisions, or whatever the number was, in the lower courts favorable to the Board, which would, of course, bring up the total percentage of cases won.

The Senator is thoroughly familiar with the matter of percentages in political questions in determining who is going to carry a State, and by how large a majority, and applying that same principle, a good showing can be made for the Labor Board in the circuit courts of appeals.

But I say to the Senator that if he will take the important cases decided by circuit courts of appeals—and sometimes the question was settled in the district court, and never went to the circuit court of appeals—take all those cases in respect to which courts all over the country, in every circuit, have rendered decisions adverse to the conclusions of the Labor Board, and the Senator will find that on the vital, fundamental matters, the Labor Board has been so far wrong in so many cases of great importance, that he would not rise and defend its record in the lower courts to the same extent or with the same verity that he is able to do in the few cases which have reached the Supreme Court.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I am not referring at all to the cases which challenged the constitutionality of the act. I am referring only to the cases in which the Board issued an order that went up to the circuit courts of appeals—and the Senator knows that right of appeal exists—and I say to the Senator that the record of the National Labor Relations Board in the circuit courts of appeals in the matter of appeals from their orders, is as high in percentage as is its record before the Supreme Court.

Mr. BURKE. I repeat, that the Senator is in error. In order to get a favorable record there he would have to take the decisions in all the cases in order to get a high percentage of cases won by the Board. There is a great difference in the importance of the cases, and in many of the vitally important cases, decisions adverse to the Board have been made in every circuit of the country.

But we are really getting far away from the subject. In fact, I am a little surprised that the Senator from Indiana, one of the steering Members of this body to determine what legislation should come up for consideration, at this stage of the proceedings, when we are merely struggling to get the opportunity to present the case of the Logan-Walter bill to the Senate for its consideration, should feel it proper to interrupt and raise these points about the bill. I am glad to have him do so, but I cannot quite understand how he can reconcile that with his continued and violent, and very capable opposition to permitting the measure to come before the Senate for consideration, when I would not need to be bearing this burden alone, but could have with me all the members of the subcommittee, and most of the members of the Judiciary Committee, which body will present a real solid phalanx in support of the bill if we get the opportunity to have it considered.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I am not preventing the Walter-Logan bill from coming before the Senate. The Senator from Nebraska is preventing the Ramspeck bill from coming before the Senate. He is doing the preventing; not I.

Mr. BURKE. I do not think that is quite correct.

Mr. MINTON. Is not that the situation? What is before the Senate now?

Mr. BURKE. The motion of the Senator from New York to bring before the Senate the Ramspeck civil-service bill, and I am opposing that motion.

Mr. MINTON. I am talking about the Walter-Logan bill.

Mr. BURKE. I am opposing that motion in order to present, briefly, as I said to the Senate at the start, the case for the Walter-Logan bill, the history of the proceedings, and I was going to say the nefarious—but that is a little strong—practices by which we have been unable in a year and one-half to get it before the Senate for consideration. I was not recognized to say anything on this subject until after 4 o'clock yesterday, and at the suggestion of the majority leader we concluded at 5 o'clock, and I had my argument so arranged that when I started shortly after 12 today I knew that I could have finished all I wanted to say in 20 minutes, but I have not yet started on that phase of my statement, because almost immediately, while I dallied for a moment in reviewing what I had said yesterday, interruptions came, which I have been glad to have. There is still an unanswered question which the Senator from Indiana put to me, and before proceeding and concluding very hastily, and hoping that then the motion of the Senator from New York may be brought to a vote—before doing that, let me answer the question the Senator from Indiana asked me a moment ago.

The Senator wanted to know, as I recall, since a very able committee, which had been appointed by one of the series of Attorneys General during the past 3 years, was studying this matter, whether we ought not to have the benefit of the studies of that very able committee, as everyone will admit it is, before we take action.

In my remarks yesterday I called attention to the fact that more than 2 years ago the essential proposals embodied in this bill, in the form of a draft, were laid before the then Attorney General, the Honorable Homer Cummings, and his opinion was asked on all the details of the bill, and I had just reached the point last night in my discussion of reading the answer, on behalf of the Attorney General, by Golden W. Bell, who was then the Assistant Solicitor General. Because so much time has been taken up already today I shall merely refer to two sentences in this rather long letter, and then ask unanimous consent that it may appear in the RECORD in full as a part of my remarks. The letter is dated October 18, 1938, and is addressed to the chairman of the special committee on administrative law of the American Bar Association. The letter is in reply to the letter of September 16 to the Attorney General.

The Attorney General, speaking through his Assistant Solicitor General, said:

> The desirability for improvement and development in at least some of the subjects treated in the proposed measure will hardly be questioned. The details and methods, on the other hand, leave wide room for differences of opinion.

On the next page the Assistant Solicitor General said:

> While I feel that the Attorney General should not express an opinion upon the merits of those features of the bill which may become the subject of controversy—

And so forth. In 1938 the Attorney General said, in effect, "Here is a bill which has some controversial features connected with it, and we do not think the Attorney General ought to express any opinion about them," very clearly intimating that that was a matter for Congress to handle in its own way. Now, after 2 years of struggling by Congress, it is said, "No; we must not go ahead and even consider this matter, because the Attorney General has a committee which has been studying all the matters of detail, and some time in the sweet by and by it may be ready to report, so we must hold up matters until that time."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the letter from the Assistant Solicitor General may appear at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, October 18, 1938.

Mr. O. R. MCGUIRE,
Chairman, Special Committee on Administrative Law, American Bar Association, 1703 North Highland Street, Arlington, Va.

MY DEAR MR. MCGUIRE: Your letter of September 16, 1938, to the Attorney General relative to the proposed bill, entitled "A bill to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States and for other purposes," contained in the report which the Special Committee on Administrative Law of the American Bar Association made to the 1938 convention at Cleveland, Ohio, has been referred to me for attention.

The proposed measure appears to embody three basic purposes—the improvement of methods of formulating rules and regulations (including provision for judicial review of rules so formulated), the establishment of a system of administrative review (through "administrative boards") within Government agencies, and provision for judicial review of the decisions of administrative boards. In connection with each of these three objectives, it is sought to standardize the methods and machinery; and the three subjects cover, generally, three consecutive stages of administrative process—that is, the formulation of regulations, the administrative review of the application of such regulations, and, finally, judicial review of the administrative conclusions.

The desirability for improvement and development in at least some of the subjects treated in the proposed measure will hardly be questioned. The details and methods, on the other hand, leave wide room for differences of opinion. In the attempt to standardize these procedures and apply them to all agencies, serious practical difficulties may arise. The apparently logical administrative stages covered may not fit all types of administration.

The determination of these questions, of course, should be made after careful study, investigation, and consideration.

While I feel that the Attorney General should not express an opinion upon the merits of those features of the bill which may become the subject of controversy, in view of some of the provisions of section 1, I call attention to the extensive work now being carried on under existing legislation, because apparently the bill contemplates considerable duplication of it. Section 11 of the Federal Register Act (49 Stat. 500), as amended by the act of June 19, 1937 (50 Stat. 304), provides for codification of all existing administrative rules and regulations which have general applicability and legal effect. As you know, for some months the several executive departments and agencies of the Government, under the supervision of the codification committee established under that section, have been engaged in the work of preparing these codifications. In title I of the Second Deficiency Appropriation Act of 1938, approved June 25, 1938 (Public, No. 723, 75th Cong., 3d sess.), the Congress has provided funds for the publication of these codifications when completed and approved by the President, and it is expected that publication will begin in the near future.

Other provisions of the Federal Register Act and the regulations prescribed thereunder require that rules and regulations or amendments hereafter issued and having general applicability and legal effect shall be filed with the Division of the Federal Register before becoming effective and shall be forthwith published in the Federal Register. The purpose of these requirements and of the preparation and publication of the codifications above-mentioned concerning all administrative rules and regulations as they exist at any particular time.

Therefore you may deem it sufficient if the provisions of section 1 of the proposed bill are limited to those relating to the issuance of new rules and amendments, the filing and publication of them, the dates upon which they are to become effective, and the protection of persons acting in good faith under a rule or regulation which has been rescinded or declared invalid.

It is suggested that a requirement that the President approve every rule or regulation or amendment of a rule or regulation, hereafter issued may place upon him a burden both onerous and unnecessary; and that, if regulations are not to become effective until published in the Federal Register except in cases where emergencies exist, the desired protection of the public can be assured by requiring that in cases of regulation issued under statutes which do not require the President's approval such approval shall nevertheless be required if they are issued under emergency provisions of the proposed bill and thus made effective prior to their publication.

It is noted that the proposed bill provides for the settlement of disputes arising in a department or in an independent agency whose governing body consists of a board of not less than three members, but no such provision seems to be made in the case of an independent agency whose governing head is not such a board. It does not appear whether this was intentional.

Respectfully,

GOLDEN W. BELL,
Assistant Solicitor General.

Mr. BURKE. Following that, there was a reply under date of October 21, 1938, by the chairman of the Special Committee on Administrative Law. I shall not read the full letter. The Solicitor General had pointed out some objections which had been urged to the administrative law bill, and one of them was that it was an attempt to standardize all the agencies—the Interstate Commerce Commission, the National Labor Relations Board, the Veterans' Administration, and other agencies, except those which were specifically exempted. I wish to read the answer which was given to that part of the statement:

I have noted your statement that an attempt to standardize administrative procedures and apply the standard procedure to all agencies might result in serious practical difficulties with respect to some of the agencies. This suggestion has been made by others. However, it will be noted that in the Constitution of the United States it required but a phrase to vest in the Federal courts jurisdiction over all cases arising in law, equity, or admiralty. Further, the judicial codes commencing with the first Judiciary Act did nothing more than attempt to establish a standard procedure to be followed in all litigation arising under the Constitution and the Federal statutes. It would seem that the same elements of fairness and justice as to the hearing of witnesses, building of record, and for judicial review should apply whether the issue involved be one arising under the contract laws or the Federal Trade Commission laws or whatever laws the administrator may be administering. At least, the committee has proceeded upon such a basis, because the alternative would necessitate an itemization of various and sundry statutes somewhat along the lines of the Logan bill pending before the Senate Judiciary Committee at the last Congress.

That was the bill which Senator Logan first introduced, and which we found defective in some particulars.

I ask unanimous consent that at this point in my remarks the full text of the letter from which I have just quoted may appear.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION,
SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON ADMINISTRATIVE LAW,
October 21, 1938.

Hon. GOLDEN W. BELL,
Assistant Solicitor General of the United States, Department of Justice, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BELL: I have your letter of the 18th instant to the effect that the Attorney General had referred to you my letter of the 16th ultimo relative to the draft of bill attached to the 1938 report of this committee to the Cleveland convention of the American Bar Association and wherein you inquire whether it might not be sufficient if the provisions of section 1 of the draft should be limited to those rules hereafter issued and to amendments of existing rules, the filing and publication of them, the dates upon which they are to become effective, and the protection of persons acting in good faith under a rule which has been rescinded or held invalid.

This inquiry appears to result from the fact that under section 11 of the Federal Register Act (49 Stat. 400), as amended by the act of June 19, 1937 (50 Stat. 304), the Department of Justice has been engaged in the codification of existing administrative rules having general applicability and legal effect. Also, that the operation of section 1 of the draft might result in some duplication of work.

The restriction of section 1 of the draft to rules hereafter issued and to amendments to existing rules, with protection to the citizen wherein the rules are rescinded or are held invalid would be better than the existing situation but would not meet the entire problem. As you know, it is a rare instance where administrative hearings are accorded preliminary to the issuance of rules and there exists no procedure—except in a very few specific statutes enacted at the last Congress—for a judicial review of a regulation as suggested. In other words, practically all of the existing regulations have been issued without hearing and in practically none of the instances has there been available a judicial remedy to test the legality of the rule. It seems to me that in order to place this matter upon a proper basis—and thus avoid much litigation for the purpose of establishing a rule—we must commence anew by holding of hearing, etc., as contemplated in sections 1 and 2 of our draft.

I think that upon further reflection you will agree that the work done and now in progress with respect to codification of existing rules having general applicability and legal effect will dovetail very nicely into sections 1 and 2 of our draft. That is to say, much preliminary administrative work would have to be done in any event to eliminate obsolete and conflicting regulations. This administrative work should be done before the proposed rule is placed on the agenda for hearing. I think that the work of codification, when completed, could and should be submitted to public hearing as to particular subject matter before they become effective with a limiting period thereafter within which to secure judicial review of such rules. In any event, I should like for you to consider this phase of the matter further in the light of the above.

There is, of course, merit in your suggestion that it would impose an onerous burden on the President to approve every rule or amendment thereof. However, it is not expected that as a matter of practice the President will do more than affix his signature. The work of reviewing the rules before they are promulgated could and should be performed by the Department of Justice as Executive orders submitted to the President are now reviewed and approved by that Department. In other words, the President had to informally establish the procedure now in effect with respect to Executive orders so as to secure a greater measure of assurance as to their legality. A similar procedure could, and should be adopted with respect to the rules. Such a requirement upon the Department of Justice would, of course, result in some increased work, but it is highly questionable whether such increase would equal the decrease in the amount of litigation now necessary because of invalid rules.

Furthermore such a requirement—if handled as suggested—would insure a larger measure of control in the Chief Executive over the daily work of the various and numerous agencies now in the executive branch of the Federal Government. Such a requirement would bring about, to some extent, that measure of Executive control thought necessary in the report of the President's Committee on Administrative Management.

In any event, I should like for you to further consider this second point in the light of the foregoing.

I have noted your statement that an attempt to standardize administrative procedures and apply the standardized procedure to all agencies might result in serious practical difficulties with respect to some of the agencies. This suggestion has been made by others. However, it will be noted that in the Constitution of the United States it required but a phrase to vest in the Federal courts jurisdiction over all cases arising in law, equity, or admiralty. Further, the judicial codes commencing with the first Judiciary Act did nothing more than attempt to establish a standard procedure to be followed in all litigation arising under the Constitution and the Federal statutes. It would seem that the same elements of fairness and justice, as to the hearing of witnesses, building of record, and for judicial review should apply whether the issue involved be one arising under the contract laws or the Federal Trade Commission laws or whatever laws the Administrator may be administering. At least, the committee has proceeded upon such a basis because the alternative would necessitate an itemization of various and sundry statutes somewhat along the lines of the Logan bill pending before the Senate Judiciary Committee at the last Congress, together with the vast addition if a judicial review is to be extended to other classes of controversies not included in said bill. The committee has doubted the wisdom of such a procedure of itemizing the matters included or attempting to incorporate by reference existing statutory procedures for hearings and judicial review or to write separate provisions for each class or various general classes of controversies.

I wish to assure you, and through you, both the Attorney General and Assistant Attorney General McFarland our appreciation for the study that you and they have given to this matter. If you feel that it is proper to do so, I should like to have your further comments for the information of the committee and the officials of the association.

Cordially and sincerely yours,

O. R. McGUIRE, Chairman.

Mr. BURKE. All the suggestions made on behalf of the Attorney General in 1938 were given careful consideration when a new draft of the bill was prepared in 1939. All these matters were before Senator Logan when he drafted Senate bill 915, and were considered by the subcommittee of which he was chairman. That subcommittee modified the proposal in many respects before it reported to the full committee. The full committee approved its action, and the bill has been on the Senate Calendar for almost a year and a half.

I have gone somewhat into detail concerning the history of the bill for the reason that some who desire to kill any legislation of this kind assert that it is a hastily conceived measure, loosely thrown together, and that no adequate consideration was ever given to the subject. That is an idea which by now should be pretty well exploded.

Mention must be made of the hearings which were held. The common assertion, repeated again today on the floor by the able junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], is that there is no record of hearings on Senate bill 915. In a strict and absolutely literal sense, that is true; but in reality it is a completely erroneous conclusion. These are the facts:

In an effort to deal constructively with the important problems connected with the so-called "fourth column" of government—the administrative tribunals—Senator Logan prepared and introduced in the Seventy-fifth Congress a bill known as Senate bill 3676. It seemed to the author of that measure that the most urgent feature had to do with the question of the simplification and expedition of judicial review of the determination of administrative boards. He therefore provided in his original bill for the creation of a new court, to be known as the United States court of appeals for administration, to be composed of a chief justice and 10 associate justices, and to have no other jurisdiction than to hear and determine appeals from administrative boards.

A subcommittee was appointed by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, consisting of Senator Logan as chairman, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], my colleague [Mr. NORRIS], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], and myself. Extended hearings were held. I have before me the five or six volumes containing those hearings. An array of distinguished witnesses gave us the benefit of their thought and study. At the first meeting of the committee, on April 1, 1938, there was presented to the committee, and printed in full in the hearings of that day, a bill worked out by the American Bar Association Committee on Administrative Law, which in essence is the bill now before the Senate. It was also pointed out that since both Houses of Congress had just passed bills creating something like 25 additional Federal judgeships, the proposal to establish a new court with 11 additional judges would be able to command scant support. For this and other reasons the question of a separate court faded into the background at once, at the first meeting of the committee, and the committee thereafter devoted its attention largely—and, as I say, from the very beginning—to the broad provisions of the bill now before us. At least three members of the American Bar Association committee testified in the course of the hearings, including its chairman, Dean Roscoe Pound. However, the adjournment of that session of Congress came without any action by the committee.

At the opening of the first session of the Seventy-sixth Congress Senator Logan introduced Senate bill 915, which he had developed as the result of the testimony offered in the hearings and as the result of a study by himself and the other members of the subcommittee of the proposals worked out through the years by the very able special committee of the American Bar Association. At the same time he introduced Senate bill 916, again providing for a separate court. The subcommittee was reconstituted, and held many meetings. There was no further formal taking of testimony. That had already been done to the satisfaction of the committee at the previous session. On numerous occasions we did invite different experts on the subject of administrative law to confer with us about the provisions of the bill which we were preparing to report. No consideration was given by the subcommittee to Senate bill 916, which, as I have said, provided for setting up a separate court of appeal. The committee concentrated solely on Senate bill 915.

Senator Logan was authorized to request the different administrative bodies to submit briefs outlining their views, or, if they desired, to have representatives appear before the committee. A number of them complied with the request to the extent of submitting certain statements.

After long study, the subcommittee reported to the full committee. Its report was approved. So, almost 18 months ago, Senate bill 915 was placed on the Senate Calendar. Meanwhile, the subcommittee of the House Committee on the Judiciary conducted rather extensive hearings on a similar bill. The full committee approved its work. As I recall, the measure was passed by the House by a majority of about 3 to 1.

In view of these facts, it would appear to me to be an understatement to say that the proposed legislation has had the careful consideration which its importance deserves. I think we may go further and say that very few measures which have come before Congress in recent years have had such long-continued and careful study by those within and without the Congress. However, it is said—and I come now to the point raised by the junior Senator from Indiana a few moments ago—that the Congress should not act until the Attorney General's committee has submitted a report.

Early in the year 1939 there was made public a letter from President Roosevelt to Attorney General Murphy from which I shall quote. I call attention to the fact that the year before, while the Honorable Homer Cummings was still Attorney General, the draft of a bill had been submitted to him, and correspondence went on for some months between the Assistant Solicitor General and those who were interested in drafting the legislation. Early in 1939, when it appeared that Congress was about to go ahead and take some action in the matter, when the committee had reported or was ready to report a bill, and there was general sentiment in favor of its passage, for the first time President Roosevelt wrote to the new Attorney General, Mr. Murphy.

I quote from his letter:

I have been greatly impressed by your statement to me that the experience of the Department of Justice in endeavoring to uphold actions of administrative agencies of the Government, when the validity of their decisions is challenged in the courts, leads you to the conclusion that there is need for procedural reform in the field of administrative law.

If I may interpolate there, apparently the Department of Justice was not so completely satisfied with the manner in which the Labor Board and other agencies—the Labor Board is not specifically mentioned, but I will say the Labor Board and other agencies—were handling their matters in the courts.

I proceed with the letter.

A thorough and comprehensive study should be made of existing practices and procedure with a view to detecting any existing deficiencies and pointing the way to improvement.

I shall be glad, therefore, if you will undertake to cause to be made an investigation and study of the entire problem with a view to recommending such action as may be deemed appropriate, and suggest that you appoint a committee for that purpose.

That letter was written rather early in the year 1939. Thereupon Attorney General Murphy appointed a very able committee with the then Assistant Attorney General Morris as chairman. The other members were Chief Justice Groner, of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, the then Assistant Attorney General McFarland, the then Assistant Solicitor General Bell, Dean Acheson, and former president Vanderbilt, of the American Bar Association.

All will admit that that was an extremely able committee. With all its membership I am well acquainted, and I should say that that committee, if given an opportunity, would not adopt dilatory tactics and delay what they set out to do. From the fact that that very able committee did not promptly, within 30 days, or 60 days, at the most, complete its study of the administrative agencies and make its report to the Attorney General to be submitted to the Congress, I can draw no other conclusion than that facilities were not furnished the committee, or it was not directed to proceed to make the study.

Thereafter the Attorney General's committee was enlarged, and other changes in personnel took place. A significant step was then taken—I am referring to a period of more than a year ago. Mr. Walter Gellhorn, a professor of law at Columbia University, and an active member of the C. I. O. organization known as the National Lawyers' Guild, was appointed secretary or research assistant to the Attorney General's committee. If Senators knew the circumstances, and knew Mr. Gellhorn's activities, they would understand why the very able committee whose names I read a moment ago did not proceed to carry on in their own way, as lawyers and judges would, a very worth-while investigation of the administrative agencies because Mr. Walter Gellhorn was made secretary or research assistant to the Attorney General's committee. It is my understanding that, for all practical purposes, the committee's activity from that time on has been not the activity of the members whose names I have read, but Gellhorn's activity.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Did the Senator receive that information from any member of the committee which has been mentioned by him as the Attorney General's committee?

Mr. BURKE. What information? Does the Senator refer to the opinion that I am now expressing?

Mr. BARKLEY. The opinion that Mr. Gellhorn has been, practically, the entire committee and that the committee has abandoned its part of the functions and turned them over to Mr. Gellhorn. That is the effect of what the Senator has stated.

Mr. BURKE. I have stated the fact that Mr. Gellhorn became the research assistant, and I shall show in a few moments from further testimony what has been done since then. I express my opinion from all the facts. I am not going to involve any member of the Attorney General's committee by saying that I talked to him and he told me that Gellhorn took charge of the matter. I give my opinion, based on facts.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is no question that Mr. Gellhorn, who is a distinguished lawyer, was made research secretary of the committee, but my information is—and I think I can demonstrate its accuracy, if necessary—that the committee has been quite active. It has not been in continuous session; but it has had numerous meetings; it has held public hearings; and I am informed by the Attorney General that it will make its final report in the third week in October. So, there has been no deliberate effort to delay the report.

Mr. BURKE. There have been at least a dozen occasions during the past year and a half when it was stated that the committee's report "was going to be presented before very long."

Mr. BARKLEY. No; there has never been a statement, either by the committee or by any Senator on the floor, that the committee's report would be ready earlier than October of this year.

Mr. BURKE. I think the Senator is mistaken about that; but I will say to him that I hope on the floor of the Senate very soon, before we adjourn, he will present the facts in reference to the committee; indeed, we can arrange for that right now, if the Senator is willing, for we can have a vote on the motion that is pending, and dispose of that measure, if the Senator will undertake to have someone representing the Walter-Logan bill recognized to present it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will discuss that matter in my own time.

Mr. BURKE. Very well. I will proceed with Mr. Gellhorn, and I say that when the occasion comes I can give further evidence to support my contention that the committee's activity has been, at least very largely since that time, Gellhorn's activity.

In this connection I ask the Senate to consider a letter sent to the members of the National Lawyers' Guild of which Mr. Gellhorn is a very active member, and, I am quite sure, has been an officer. This letter was sent on May 26, 1939, over the signature of the secretary of the National Lawyers' Guild. The letter recites that S. 915, to which it refers not as the Logan bill, but as the American Bar Association bill had been reported favorably by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary and was then on the Senate Calendar. The letter goes on to say that the National Lawyers' Guild is vigorously opposed to this legislation. It suggests that a letter from each member of the C. I. O. guild members addressed to Senators would be helpful.

At about the same time this letter was going out—and this is a significant fact—Mr. Walter Gellhorn, professor of law at Columbia University, and an active member, if not an officer—and I think he was an officer—of the National Lawyers' Guild, the very organization which was sending out the letter expressing its extreme opposition to the Logan-Walter bill and urging its members to write to Senators, through what means I do not know, became secretary or the research adviser on the Attorney General's committee, and, from then on the major portion of the activities of that committee, I charge again, were Mr. Gellhorn's activities, he being an active member of the organization, the National Lawyers Guild, that was violently opposing the enactment of any legislation of this kind. Still we are asked now, when another year and more has gone by, to wait until the Attorney General's committee makes its report.

Why not face the facts? Neither the C. I. O. nor its active body, the National Lawyers' Guild, wants Congress to pass the Logan bill, the Walter bill, or any bill which will impose any check or restraint whatever upon these administrative bodies, in some of which the C. I. O. has such a vital interest, both as to personnel and as to results obtained.

As evidence that this estimate of the results which may be expected from the Gellhorn committee is not overdrawn, let me cite an exhaustive analysis of the Gellhorn study of the Federal Communications Commission. I say "the Gellhorn study": You will recognize that I mean by that a study nominally by the Attorney General's special committee but conducted, I am told, by Mr. Gellhorn and by his nominees.

This analysis of the study of the Federal Communications Commission by the Attorney General's committee or its agent was prepared by Louis G. Caldwell, a recognized authority on administrative law. I am very glad to offer this statement by Mr. Caldwell. I know it will not be criticized, because although Mr. Caldwell was a member of the Special Committee on Administrative Law of the American Bar Association when it was set up, and worked diligently with it for some time, a year or more later he became convinced that in some ways this type of legislation was not satisfactory, and he has been critical of the Logan-Walter bill, and has offered some very helpful suggestions about improvement; so he is not one who comes altogether as a friendly witness on this point. This is what he has to say about the Gellhorn study of the Federal Communications Commission; and we are asked to wait until similar studies are made of all the 125 or more agencies which are covered by this bill before action is taken.

I quote from Mr. Caldwell. I have his full pamphlet here, but I quote only this part:

> The creation of the Attorney General's committee, a step which should have been taken years ago, was at least accelerated, if not caused, by widespread criticism of American administrative agencies and particularly by the rapid progress early in 1939 of the Logan-Walter bill in both Houses of Congress, in the press, and generally among the public. That the Logan-Walter bill has not already passed both Houses of Congress is largely due to an urgent plea by Attorney General Murphy that such drastic action not be taken until prerequisite fact-finding studies could be completed.

That was early in 1939.

This plea has seemed well founded. Its premise, however, is that the studies will be objective, will report facts accurately, and will not be made the vehicle for propaganda for any school of thought, new or old. Otherwise, the work will not promote progress toward sound conclusions and, in particular, will not be of help to Congress in resolving the issues raised by the Logan-Walter bill.

I will say, for the benefit of any Senators who may have come in since I started, that I am reading from a report prepared by Louis G. Caldwell, one of the best-known lawyers in the District of Columbia, a report which he prepared which he calls "Comments on the Report of the Staff of the Attorney General's Committee on Administrative Law in Reference to the Federal Communications Commission:"

I go on reading from Mr. Caldwell's report:

Even a superficial examination, however, is sufficient to reveal that all the monographs—

He is referring to all the reports which have been prepared so far by the Attorney General's committee in reference to these various agencies. This is what Mr. Caldwell says after a study of them all:

Even a superficial examination, however, is sufficient to reveal that all the monographs bear the imprint of a preconceived notion of what administrative procedure should be, both in basic structure and in detail.

It would be very helpful to Congress, certainly, in working out a measure to regulate these agencies, to have before it 128 or more monographs prepared by young men who started their examination of the agencies with "a preconceived notion of what administrative procedure should be."

This phenomenon, the reaching of conclusions before the facts are in, is, curiously enough, one of the principal counts in the indictment of the administrative process by its critics and one of the principal counts in the indictment of the Logan-Walter bill by its opponents.

Students of Federal administrative practice have welcomed the project undertaken by the Attorney General's committee—

This report of Mr. Caldwell's came off the press in March of 1940, some 6 months ago—realizing that the marshaling of the myriad facts under able and disinterested auspices is a helpful prerequisite to any correct diagnosis of the evils and prescription of enduring remedies. It is with deep disappointment that I report that the monograph on the Federal Communications Commission lacks accuracy and objectivity to such a degree that only with the greatest caution may use be made of its contents. When it is observed that the Commission's present procedure, credited with virtues and advantages which it does not have, is, to a large extent and with only mild criticisms, made the model in terms of which the procedures of other agencies are tacitly measured, there is occasion for genuine concern over the outcome.

Three causes, it seems to me—

This is still Mr. Caldwell speaking—have contributed to deficiencies such as those exhibited by the monograph under discussion:

1. The investigation has been made in the brief space of a few months by young men well equipped on the side of scholarship, no doubt, but without experience in the highly specialized fields assigned to them, lacking familiarity with the subject matter and its historical background, and taught to distrust the judicial process and all that goes with it. All this is unavoidable and forgiveable. Such persons should, however, be on their guard lest green spectacles be slipped on their noses as they explore the Land of Oz.

I interrupt myself in reading the report to say that in what Mr. Caldwell says about young men with some degrees attesting to their scholarship, no doubt, but wholly lacking in experience, being placed around in the administrative agencies to make this study, he is reciting only what the evidence of the Smith committee in the House conclusively shows is the way in which the Labor Board has handled its procedure. There was brought before the Board day after day the record of young attorneys, chiefly from eastern law schools, some of whom, before the ink on their diplomas was dry, were called in to sit on the review section of the National Labor Relations Board and determine the life or death of great business institutions and industries in this country. Mr. Caldwell tells us that these wonderful examinations of the agencies by the Attorney General's committee, which we must wait month after month to have completed before this great Congress may take any action, are being made by the same type of men and women who have brought the National Labor Relations Board into disrepute.

His second point is this:

2. Unfortunately, the studies are being carried on at a time when the issues raised by the Logan-Walter bill have crowded other issues off the stage and have prescribed a dead line for completion of the work. The purpose of the studies is not simply, I hope, or even primarily, to defeat the bill or to clear the agencies of the particular charges made by its sponsors. It should be to hew scrupulously to the line of facts, in trust that, when assembled and analyzed, they will, like filings around a magnet, arrange themselves in symmetric patterns. The monographs, however, bear evidence of conscious or unconscious briefing against the bill.

Bear in mind, Senators, that the studies which the Attorney General's committee is making, the monographs which it is preparing, when examined by an impartial and able lawyer who himself is critical of certain features of the Logan-Walter bill, "bear evidence of conscious or unconscious briefing against the bill."

3. Preconceived notions and a priori conclusions have been brought to the undertaking. In other words, the evils have been diagnosed and the remedies prescribed by mail or at least at an early stage in the study of the patient's symptoms. Categorical approval or disapproval of particular practices is repeatedly expressed, and changes have already been confidently recommended to the agencies, in several instances with success. Even more significant is the almost complete omission to report facts and problems of procedure which might tend to show that any fundamental or basic reform deserves consideration. To all appearances, the investigation is going forward on laissez-faire premises, such as (1) that diversity (multiplicity, overlapping, duplication, confusion, and all their kin) is so clearly a virtue or, at any rate, so clearly not an evil, that no time need be wasted on the matter, and (2) that all that is needed to cure the ills of Federal administrative practice is to sew a few patches here and there on procedural garments. Perhaps the apostles of diversity are right: We must continue to have unlimited experimentation in procedure even if it kills us. But I, for one, should like to see the facts correctly reported on experiences had and results achieved to date before deciding on such a course.

Mr. President, there appears to me to be only one way to secure that result, to take up the Logan-Walter bill for consideration, and pass it at this session of Congress. Experience under it will quickly demonstrate whether or not any changes in the act are necessary and, if so, what their nature should be. However, If Congress permits the administrative agencies to go on unchecked, there is a very real danger that they will bring so much discredit upon themselves that drastic remedies will be applied which may easily impair the usefulness of this arm of our Government.

The way to make sure that all that is good in the administrative agencies will be preserved is by removing now existing abuses by the enactment of the Logan-Walter bill. But we cannot do that unless we can get it officially before the Senate for action, and I think enough has been said and enough is known about the attitude of the leadership here to make it very certain that we will never get it before this body unless we stand up and fight for it.

It has been with very deep regret that I have delayed at all action on the motion of the distinguished junior Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] to bring before the Senate the measure in which he is interested, also a most important one, but we have decided that our only chance to secure action on the Logan-Walter bill at this session is to seek recognition whenever the pending matter is concluded, and to resist taking up any measure to the fullest extent of our ability, and we have attempted to do that in connection with the pending motion.

When the time comes to vote on the motion, which I hope may be very soon, I shall ask for a yea-and-nay vote. If we are able to command enough votes to postpone the consideration of the Ramspeck bill and proceed with the Walter-Logan bill, no one need have any doubt that the Senator from

New York will be able to get recognition and bring up his measure very quickly and have it passed. If, on the other hand, we are not able at this time to command a sufficient number of votes in the Senate to vote down the pending motion, we propose immediately to seek recognition, as I have said, and to debate at length the Logan-Walter bill. I shall not be the only one to speak. The other members of the subcommittee are prepared to go forward at very considerable length with their discussion.

I may also say, for the benefit of the leader on this side, if he has any interest in the matter, that the remarks I made yesterday, and in the time I have been talking today, are really just a foreword to the opinions I hope it will not be necessary to express, but which certainly will be expressed on this highly important measure if it shall become necessary.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I wish to say that, in my judgment, the Walter-Logan bill is of great importance and should be acted upon by the Senate before we adjourn. Although this has been a long session and many Members would like to return to their homes, the needs of the Nation in legislation should take precedence over all else for we have been called here for this purpose. Much important legislation has been enacted at this session of Congress, and yet none is more vitally needed than the Walter-Logan bill insofar as it embodies the principles of constitutional restraint upon executive agencies of government.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks an editorial from the Pittsburgh Press for September 21, entitled "Work Still Waiting," which emphasizes need for prompt action on the Walter-Logan bill and the Smith amendments now pending. The Senate Committee on Education and Labor is now holding hearings on the Smith amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the editorial will be printed in the RECORD.

The editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Pittsburgh Press of September 21, 1940]

WORK STILL WAITING

Congress is getting the adjournment itch again. We still think that, in times like these, Congress belongs on the job in Washington. But in the 3 months since early June, when many of the lawmakers were yearning to quit and President Roosevelt was trying to speed them homeward, a tremendous volume of defense legislation has gone through the mill.

So the Senators and Representatives may have some right to feel that they have earned a little vacation at election time. But—

They certainly should not rush home until they have completed action on two important domestic measures which got sidetracked last spring when Hitler's "blitzkriegs" began and national defense became the big issue. We mean:

1. The Smith amendments to the National Labor Relations Act.
2. The Walter-Logan bill.

We refer to these as domestic measures, but we believe they are also vital to national defense, since both are designed to insure fairer, better administration of Government. Both passed the House months ago by overwhelming majorities, drawing strong support from Democrats as well as Republicans. Both have been blocked in the Senate by administration supporters.

The purpose of the Smith amendments is to clean up the mess that has been made by biased and incompetent administration of the Labor Act. The purpose of the Walter-Logan bill is to provide checks and balances against abuse of bureaucratic power by Government agencies. Some Senators believe sincerely that these measures, as they came from the House, go too far. That view may be correct, but as to the urgent need for legislation on both subjects there is, in our opinion, no question at all.

The duty of the Senate is to debate the Walter-Logan bill and the Smith amendments, to improve them if need for improvement is shown, and to vote on them one way or the other before it thinks of quitting work.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HERRING in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the motion of the junior Senator from New York.

Mr. BURKE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Barkley	Byrd	Chavez
Andrews	Bilbo	Byrnes	Clark, Idaho
Austin	Bulow	Capper	Clark, Mo.
Bailey	Burke	Caraway	Connally
Danaher	Hayden	Neely	Stewart
Davis	Herring	Norris	Taft
Downey	Hill	Nye	Thomas, Idaho
Ellender	Holt	O'Mahoney	Thomas, Okla.
Frazier	Hughes	Overton	Thomas, Utah
George	Johnson, Calif.	Pepper	Townsend
Gerry	Johnson, Colo.	Pittman	Tydings
Gibson	Lodge	Radcliffe	Vandenberg
Gillette	McKellar	Reed	Van Nuys
Green	McNary	Schwartz	Wagner
Guffey	Maloney	Schwellenbach	Walsh
Gurney	Mead	Sheppard	Wheeler
Hale	Miller	Shipstead	White
Harrison	Minton	Smathers	Wiley
Hatch	Murray	Smith

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 960.

Mr. BURKE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. STEWART (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN]. I understand that if present he would vote as I desire to vote. I am therefore free to vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I am informed that if present he would vote "nay." If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. DAVIS. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER]. I understand that if present he would vote "yea." If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. My colleague the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] is absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senators from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST and Mr. HAYDEN], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], the Senators from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS and Mr. SLATTERY], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] are necessarily detained.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] has a pair on this question with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO]. If present, the Senator from Wisconsin would vote "yea" and the Senator from Mississippi would vote "nay."

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] has a general pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE].

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] has a general pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS].

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] is absent on official business.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN], and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] are necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 52, nays 18, as follows:

YEAS—52

Andrews	Byrd	Chavez	Downey
Barkley	Byrnes	Clark, Idaho	Frazier
Bulow	Caraway	Clark, Mo.	George

Gerry	Hughes	Nye	Thomas, Idaho
Gibson	Johnson, Colo.	O'Mahoney	Thomas, Okla.
Gillette	McKellar	Pepper	Thomas, Utah
Green	Maloney	Pittman	Tydings
Guffey	Mead	Radcliffe	Van Nuys
Harrison	Miller	Schwartz	Wagner
Hatch	Minton	Schwellenbach	Walsh
Herring	Murray	Sheppard	Wheeler
Hill	Neely	Smathers	White
Holt	Norris	Smith	Wiley

NAYS—18

Adams	Connally	Johnson, Calif.	Taft
Austin	Danaher	Lodge	Townsend
Bailey	Ellender	Overton	Vandenberg
Burke	Gurney	Reed
Capper	Hale	Stewart

NOT VOTING—25

Ashurst	Chandler	La Follette	Shipstead
Bankhead	Davis	Lee	Slattery
Barbour	Donahey	Lucas	Tobey
Bilbo	Glass	McCarran	Truman
Bone	Hayden	McNary
Bridges	Holman	Reynolds
Brown	King	Russell

So Mr. MEAD's motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 960) extending the classified executive civil service of the United States, which had been reported from the Committee on Civil Service, with amendments.

POSITION OF WENDELL L. WILLKIE ON THE POWER QUESTION

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, yesterday there was published in the Washington Evening Star an article by J. A. O'Leary, dated Portland, Oreg., September 23. I first read the headline:

WILLKIE FAVORS CHEAP POWER AT FEDERAL DAMS—TELLS OREGON CROWD LOCAL AREAS SHOULD DECIDE DISTRIBUTION

PORTLAND, OREG., September 23.—Wendell L. Willkie told the people of the Northwest today he favors making available to them "at the lowest possible rate" the power that will be generated at the Federal Government's two big dams in this area—Bonneville in Oregon and Grand Coulee in Washington.

In view of that statement and knowing the record of Mr. Willkie in reference to power, by reason of his being at the head of the holding company which owned two of the great power companies in Tennessee, and being familiar with Mr. Willkie's uniform course through a number of years in the power business, I wish to discuss for a few moments Mr. Willkie's attitude on the question of power.

In the first place, he says—and it is in quotations—that he favors making power available to the people at the lowest possible price. Mr. Willkie was president of the electric power company at Nashville, which also owned the streetcar company. That company distributed power in Nashville until the T. V. A. contract went into effect a year or more ago, by which the arrangement was changed.

What was Mr. Willkie's judgment as to reasonable price then? I read from a letter from one of my constituents. The letter was written in another connection, but it applies to this discussion.

All the while the Willkie corporation—

That is, the Willkie streetcar company of Nashville—

has been letting its streetcars run down, the Tennessee company continued to buy electric current from the National Government near Muscle Shoals at about 2 mills or less per kilowatt-hour and sell the current to Nashville light patrons at 10 cents (net) per kilowatt-hour, a profit of about 5,000 percent.

Until the advent of the T. V. A. in Tennessee, Mr. Willkie's idea, as shown by the action of his company, was to charge the light patrons of Nashville, Tenn., a profit of 5,000 percent on the cost of the power to him. Incidentally, at that time he bought the power at the dam. Senators will see the significance of the headline:

Willkie favors cheap power at Federal dams.

Yes; he favors cheap power at Federal dams, and he wants to distribute it at a reasonable price. That reasonable price, as fixed by Mr. Willkie's company at Nashville, represented a profit of about 5,000 percent levied on the users of electric power in the capital city of my State. Reasonable indeed!

The whole question of power is the question of its distribution. We all know what it costs to generate it. The T. V. A. generates it at a reasonable price. Mr. Willkie distributed it as long as he could at a profit of 5,000 percent or more. He charged even more than 10 cents per kilowatt-hour in the case of some of the little towns in Tennessee close to Muscle Shoals.

Mr. President, let us see the remarkable sentiment on the power question by Mr. Willkie. What does he say?

Mr. Willkie laid down the principle that local areas to be served should determine whether this Federal power, generated by water, ought to be distributed by municipal or private systems.

If they decide in favor of public distribution, then "appropriate machinery should be set up for determining the fair price to be paid for the existing privately owned systems," he declared.

His position on the water-power question has been awaited with keen interest, since he was the head of a big private utility corporation before winning the Republican Presidential nomination, and he selected this city, within 24 miles of Bonneville, to make his attitude clear.

Speaking to a large crowd in the city auditorium following a parade through Portland and vicinity, he declared:

"The United States Government has invested some $270,000,000 in the development of Bonneville and Grand Coulee Dams."

Listen to this, Senators—

"It seems inconceivable, therefore"—

I am quoting Mr. Willkie—

"that anyone would suggest that these projects should not be completed."

That is from Wendell Willkie. I see my distinguished friend from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] smiling, as well he may. Any other man who is familiar with the facts must of necessity smile when he hears such an idea coming from Mr. Willkie.

This is the same Mr. Willkie who not only conducted light and power plants and streetcar plants in my State at 5,000 percent profit, but also filed lawsuits in my State. As we all know, several years ago Mr. Willkie filed a lawsuit in my State on behalf of himself and his associates. The petition was filed on behalf of 7 holding companies and 12 other companies which were associated with him in Georgia, Alabama, and surrounding States—19 companies in all. What did they ask for? I call attention again to his present statement:

It seems inconceivable, therefore, that anyone would suggest that these projects should not be completed.

We have exactly the same kind of a water-power project on the Tennessee River that he is talking about at the Grand Coulee and Bonneville Dams in Oregon and Washington. All such projects are based upon the same principle, and they are all erected by the Government of the United States. What was Mr. Willkie's attitude 3 years ago? I have the record. After all, it is the record a man makes as he passes along the road which counts. This is the record of Mr. Willkie, who now says that—

It seems inconceivable, therefore, that anyone would suggest that these projects should not be completed.

This is what he said in his prayer for relief in the bill which he filed in the Federal court in my State a number of years ago, praying for an injunction against the T. V. A., against his own Government, against the United States. What did he pray for?

That this court—

The Federal court of the United States.

shall adjudge and decree that the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933 * * * and the power program * * * are severally in violation of the Constitution of the United States.

That statement is from the printed record at page 67.

There was another prayer—

That this court shall * * * enjoin the defendants * * * from purchasing, constructing, or otherwise acquiring works for the purpose of creating a supply of electric power for use in carrying on a federally owned electric public utility.

That is from page 67 of the record.

What are his words today when he is a candidate for office as the nominee of a party for which he never voted before in his life? What does he say today when he is a candidate? Here is what he says today:

It seems inconceivable, therefore, that anyone would suggest that these projects should not be completed.

Up to a short time ago he was praying for—what? To prevent the completion of exactly similar projects in the State of Tennessee, brought about in exactly the same way, by the Government of the United States.

But that is not all he prayed for. He further prayed:

From disposing of electricity generated at dams or other works constructed by or on behalf of the United States.

That is on page 67.

And again:

From constructing—

This covers the Bonneville Dam, if the prayer had been granted as it was granted by the judge to which the bill was first offered. Here is what it said:

From constructing, purchasing, or otherwise acquiring hydroelectric plants.

Of course, if the Government had been enjoined as the trial judge undertook to enjoin it, the construction of the Bonneville Dam would have been prevented.

That is on page 68 of the record.

Again:

From using Federal funds to construct or purchase electric-utility distribution systems.

That would take in the Bonneville Dam; it would take in the Grand Coulee Dam and other Federal construction. Yet this man, who went before the court in Tennessee and prayed that court in writing to issue an injunction prohibiting the use of Federal funds to construct or purchase electric-utility distribution systems, now less than 2 years afterward, tells American citizens away out in Oregon and Washington, nearly 3,000 miles from where he instituted his lawsuit, "You need not be bothered about Bonneville; you need not be bothered about Grand Coulee." For—

It seems inconceivable—

I read it again—

It seems inconceivable, therefore, that anyone would suggest that these projects should not be completed.

Yet that is the very man who in Tennessee filed the bill to prevent their further construction, to prevent the Government from using any of its money to construct these or any similar power plants.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GILLETTE in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. What the Senator has been quoting from Mr. Willkie, I understand, are political utterances, whereas what he said a few years back was in the form of a prayer, and a prayer is much more sacred, for when a man expresses his sentiments by prayer, of course, it comes from the very soul.

Mr. NORRIS. In that case the prayer should prevail, of course, and what he said in his prayer would apply to Bonneville, and that project would have to stop.

Mr. OVERTON. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course. It must be remembered, however, that at that time Mr. Willkie was not thinking of running for President of the United States. Mr. Willkie's desire—and I will come to that in a few moments—his only desire then was to get something for nothing by building up, by means of watered stock, public-utility holding companies. He had no further idea. He did not know what was going to happen in the future; he was looking at the present; and, therefore, he prayed—under oath, too, though I do not know whether he personally made the oath to the bill—for an injunction against the Government. There cannot be any doubt about Mr. Willkie being the father of that suit.

I have in my hand a copy of the Chattanooga Times of Chattanooga, Tenn., of the issue of Sunday, August 25, 1940. I believe the Chattanooga Times is a Willkie newspaper. They had a centennial or some kind of a memorial edition of that newspaper on August 25, 1940, and, among the various other things that had happened in Chattanooga about which articles were written in the newspaper, was the celebrated T. V. A.-Willkie case. I find on page 13–F of the Chattanooga Times of that date, August 25, 1940, a picture of the building in which sat the court to which Mr. Willkie had prayed, not to the people of the United States, but to three judges. Those three judges were Judge Gore, who issued the injunction against the United States and against the T. V. A.; Miss Florence Allen, a circuit judge of Ohio; and Judge John D. Martin, of Memphis, a district judge. They were the three judges who sat in the case, and I find in the picture, which is a very attractive picture of a very attractive courtroom, Mr. James Lawrence Fly standing arguing the case for the people, for the United States, and for the Tennessee Valley Authority, and sitting right behind him is—who? None other than Wendell Willkie, then the grand mogul of the power-utility interests of the country, the man who was representing the watered stock of the holding-utility companies of the United States. There [exhibiting] is the picture. Will it be said that he did not know? Will he try to get out of it by saying he did not know what he was saying in 1937 when he was praying to the court for relief by enjoining the United States, by enjoining the T. V. A. from doing the very things he now approves when he is a candidate for office?

It seems inconceivable, therefore, that anyone would suggest that these projects should be completed.

It is impossible for the present Mr. Willkie, the present—I started to say "Republican," and I believe he is a Republican now, though he claimed to be a Democrat a few weeks ago—it is impossible for the present Republican candidate for President of the United States to conceive how anybody would want to stop the grand work that he himself undertook to stop.

But if there be any doubt about his presence, I turn to page 12–F of the same newspaper. There we find a magnificent picture—I am sorry it cannot be put in the RECORD—and outstanding in the front place, right under the ears of the court, right at the desk, right behind the Tennessee Valley Authority's lawyer, sitting out in front, appears Mr. Willkie. He was there; he was the man who was forwarding the bill for injunction. He had prayed that the court enjoin the United States and the T. V. A. from further constructing this project.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. OVERTON. While the Senator is making observations as to who is sitting around, and where, let me say that when he began his discourse I noticed quite a number of Republican Senators on the floor and in their seats. Will he look around now and see how many have remained here during his observations about Mr. Willkie?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not see any just at this minute.

Mr. OVERTON. I see quite a number of Democrats.

Mr. McKELLAR. I take back that statement. I see the distinguished and handsome Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] standing by the clerk's desk; but I want to defend those gentlemen. My sympathy goes out to the Republicans in this campaign. I can understand how they feel about it. Here were a number of splendid Republicans. I see another one over there, my friend from Ohio [Mr. TAFT]. That makes two. [Laughter.] I can understand how they feel about the matter. There were a number of old-line Republicans who were candidates for the Presidential nomination at the hands of the Republican convention in Philadelphia, able and splendid men. Some of them I know, because I serve with them here all the time—men like the distinguished senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], for whom we all entertain the greatest respect and esteem and admiration. Then there is the rather younger Member from the State of Ohio, the distinguished Senator ROBERT A. TAFT, himself not only a Senator, not only a candidate for the Presidency of the United States, but the son of one of the most distinguished and one of the most beloved men who ever was in this Capitol, Chief Justice and former President Taft.

Then there were other candidates—my friend from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], who does not happen to be here; my friend from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], the gentleman who made—I had better qualify the statement I started to make. [Laughter.] I will strike it out altogether, because I have learned to like the Senator from New Hampshire. He is a fine fellow. He has many good qualities. He has a way of looking into affairs in other States more carefully than he looks into the affairs of his own State; but he means well, he is a fine fellow, an old-line Republican, and naturally he had some interest in the nomination. He wanted to be the Republican nominee for the Presidency, and we cannot blame him. We cannot blame any one of these four gentlemen, all of them with distinguished Republican records.

The father and grandfather of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], I know, were Republicans. One of them was Attorney General; and we know how long the other, his father, was a Republican. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] edits and owns a Republican newspaper. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] is a lifelong Republican, and so is the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER]. All of them believe in the tenets of their party as they understand them. All of them are honorable, high-minded men. They went to a convention, and there came a Democrat. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator should not overlook Dewey and Gannett.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am going to come to them in a minute.

When these four gentlemen got to the convention, they found the galleries ringing with another name. They had galleries there something like we have here. Not much was said about TAFT when his name was mentioned; not much was said about VANDENBERG when his name was mentioned; not much was said about BRIDGES when his name was mentioned; not much was said about ARTHUR CAPPER when his name was mentioned; but when somebody accidentally or inadvertently referred to a Democrat in that convention—a Democratic utility leader, a man who became famous for prosecuting the T. V. A. and prosecuting Government-owned public utilities of all kinds, going to the length of getting an injunction against the T. V. A., and fighting for years to put it out of business—whenever his name was mentioned, the galleries roared. The Power Trust was on guard at that convention.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, are they not still roaring? [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. I think they are still roaring. I do not know how much longer they will roar, but I think they will be by the still, still waters on the 6th of November.

But, Mr. President, referring again to those Republican candidates who are absent to such a large extent today, we cannot blame them. Here was a newcomer, not even a member of their own party, a man whose views were wholly at variance with the views of many Republicans, as he has shown, because while Mr. Willkie has given us Democrats Hades from time to time he has been very generous in giving some of the same Hades to his Republican friends, too. Not long ago we had a vote here on whether or not we should conscript wealth. We were conscripting the boys. Twenty-three Republicans voted on that question, and 8 of them voted against conscription of wealth—the Russell-Overton amendment, as it was commonly known. Ten of them voted for it, and 3 more were paired for it, making a total of 13 to 8. Then, the next morning, Mr. Willkie denounced all of the Republican Senators who voted for the Russell amendment as being Sovietized Americans, communistic Americans. Thirteen out of twenty-three Republicans voted for the amendment, and I am not including in that list the Progressives, like our splendid friend the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], and our splendid friend, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], and our splendid friend, poor Senator Lundeen, who lost his life by accident. All those Senators voted for the amendment or were paired for it. Mr. Willkie abused them all, just as he abused us Democrats. Under those circumstances, remembering how Mr. Willkie euchered the old-line Republicans at the Philadelphia convention and how he ran away with the nomination that nobody knew he was a candidate for until May 23, I believe, just a few weeks before the convention, I am not at all surprised that they are not here defending him. I do not blame them. They are in a very awkward position. I do not think I would defend a Democrat under those circumstances. I do not think I would defend a candidate on the ticket of my own party. I think I would do as the Republicans have done; I would say very little about him; and I think that is what they are going to do in this election.

But I have rather allowed my political interest to divert me from the power question, and I do not want to do that.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I yield.

Mr. NEELY. The distinguished Senator from Tennessee has in his inimitable way commented on the apparent unpopularity of Mr. Willkie in the Senate, as evidenced by the failure of any Republican Member to rise in his defense. Let me inform those present that Mr. Willkie is, if possible, even more unpopular among the Republicans of West Virginia than he is here. Because, according to the press, Mayor Boone Dawson, of Charleston, now the Republican nominee for Governor of the State, asserted, about the time of the Philadelphia convention, that 75 percent of the Republicans of West Virginia were for Dewey, and the remaining 25 percent of them were against Willkie. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I said some time ago that I thought if Mr. Willkie should do as well as Mr. Landon did last time, he would do pretty well in this campaign; and I am still sticking to that opinion, although there may be some little differences. I admit that there is a chance that the Republican ticket will gain some votes because of the Vice Presidential candidacy of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], whom we all admire, whom we all love and respect, who would be a splendid official of any kind, from the Presidency on down. He is an excellent Senator, and he would be a good Vice President, of course. He would be a good President, of course. We all respect him and admire him. We believe in his liberal policies. Nothing I could say of him would be too good; but I do not see how any Republican could very well defend the present head of the ticket, because he does not appear to have any views on anything except to agree with the Roosevelt policies. He has endorsed all the Roosevelt policies. The only difference is that he says, "All the Roosevelt policies are good, and I endorse them all, but I think I could run them a little better than Mr. Roosevelt does." He wants the people to accept his dictum about his ability to run them better than Mr. Roosevelt does, on the ground that he is a businessman and Mr. Roosevelt is not.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. As the Senator says, Mr. Willkie has embraced the New Deal, but has rejected the author of the New Deal.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is it.

Mr. MINTON. I notice in the morning's New York newspapers that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] made a speech in New York last night along orthodox Republican lines, in which he repudiated everything the New Deal has done. Apparently there is some confusion as to who won the nomination at Philadelphia. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall not take part in a Republican quarrel; but I yield to the Senator from Ohio, and will let him reply.

Mr. TAFT. I merely wish to ask unanimous consent to put in the RECORD the speech which I made last night at Brooklyn, in which I testified to the very high esteem in which I hold Mr. Willkie. I have never, since I came to the Senate, thought this was the place to make a political speech, and I do not propose to change my habits now. I try to confine my remarks to the matters before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator submit a unanimous-consent request to have his address printed in the RECORD?

Mr. TAFT. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator does not desire to put the speech in the RECORD at this point, I presume?

Mr. TAFT. No; at the end of the very able remarks of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is entirely all right.

Mr. TAFT'S address appears at the end of Mr. McKELLAR'S remarks.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I now come to the question of Mr. Willkie as a businessman.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. I invite the attention of the Senator from Tennessee to the fact that in the picture to which he has called attention——

Mr. McKELLAR. Which I am sorry I cannot have reproduced in the RECORD.

Mr. NEELY. The picture which was taken of Mr. Willkie at the bar of the Court in 1937, when he appeared for the purpose of helping to obstruct the operations of T. V. A., his hair is not tousled at all. [Laughter.] Why is that?

Mr. McKELLAR. That was before he entered into a political campaign. Someone must have told him that tousled hair made votes. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I stated a while ago that Willkie claimed that he could handle the job of President, that he was for the Roosevelt policies, and all the New Deal policies, but that he could handle the job better than Mr. Roosevelt does.

I have a letter here from a constituent in Nashville, Tenn., which is very interesting and very illuminating on that subject. It is addressed to me, and reads:

NASHVILLE, TENN., September 21, 1940.

August 16 last, I sent you a published copy of a letter written by our present Nashville mayor regarding the necessity of repairs being made on the streetcars, the "Willkie" line of streetcars, in Nashville.

Mr. Willkie, or his company, the Commonwealth & Southern, under the name of the Tennessee Power Co., owns a streetcar system in Nashville. We know much about Mr. Willkie in Tennessee. I proceed with the letter.

Little heed must have been paid to the letter of the mayor, for disastrous accidents have occurred in Nashville on the streetcar lines since the letter was written, and as a matter of fact such a letter could have been written wih equal propriety at any time during the past several years.

Five years ago there was passed, stealthily—

There must have been some lobbyists around, when he says "stealthily"—

Five years ago there was passed, stealthily, a local bill in the extra session of the Tennessee Legislature that took away from the people the right to vote on a franchise that would allow the Tennessee Electric Power Co. to change over from streetcars to buses by a simple vote of the Nashville City Council.

The change over was not made at the time because the later Mayor Howse of Nashville would never consent to the change unless the Tennessee Electric Power Co., a Willkie outfit, agreed in assuming an obligation to keep up its part of the streets that it should traverse with busses.

For several years, under the bossism of Willkie—

"Bossism of Willkie." The hearings which took place afterward disclosed the fact that, when a vote was to be taken, Mr. Willkie—"Boss" Willkie, as he was then—herded his employees, a hundred or more of them, and had them give their residences as on a vacant lot. They registered from a vacant lot so that they could vote as "Boss" Willkie desired. Vote for what? Vote against the very system which is to be found at the Bonneville Dam, and Grand Coulee, to vote against the people of Chattanooga having the right to buy their power and light where they pleased.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. My understanding was that Mr. Willkie's company had transferred to a hundred of his employees a certain lot the company owned in Chattanooga in order to qualify them as freeholders so they could vote in the election.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is what was done. I thought I said that, but if I did not make it clear I am much obliged to the Senator for suggesting it.

For several years under the bossism of Willkie the Nashville streetcars have been allowed to go down and down—

This businessman, who can perform the job of being President much better than can Mr. Roosevelt, according to Mr. Willkie's statement, let the streetcar company in Nashville go down—— until the cars became a public menace, evidently for the purpose of disgusting everyone so that all concerned would agree to give the Willkie corporation a bus franchise agreeable to Willkie's way of doing things, fleecing the public.

Dilapidated cars have had such leaky roofs—

Here in the capital of my State Mr. Willkie was operating a streetcar company whose dilapidated cars "had such leaky roofs that patrons of the lines that serve the poorer sections have had to raise umbrellas in the streetcars during rains and rainstorms to keep from being drenched."

Yet Mr. Willkie assumes, and he tells the people to believe him, that he is a better administrator than Mr. Roosevelt. If he cannot administer the affairs of this great Government any better than he handles the affairs of the Nashville Streetcar Co., God save America if he should ever have to administer our Government.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. HILL. I do not think the Senator from Tennessee should be so hard on Mr. Willkie in that regard. Mr. Willkie having engaged so much in watering stock, he naturally has a preference for water anyway. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator for his suggestion. I should like to join him in saying that I do not think Mr. Willkie should be too much blamed.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator would not suggest, however, that all of the water created by the Willkie watered stock has leaked on the people of Nashville, would he?

Mr. McKELLAR. Much of it did.

Mr. HILL. I am sure they got their share of it.

Mr. McKELLAR. The letter proceeds:

Wheels running off cars while in motion have endangered the lives of pedestrians and car riders.

Worn car-wheel flanges have caused cars to jump tracks, also to the jeopardy of pedestrians on the streets and the car riders.

Lack of repairs of boxes and spindles have caused noises from streetcar operations that could be heard for blocks off the streetcar lines.

Brakes on the streetcars were allowed to go unrepaired until few of the cars were regarded as safe by the operators.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Would the Senator say that probably that situation contributed to the flat wheels which are now found in Mr. Willkie's political caravansary?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is very hard for a man to change his habits. If he dealt with the flat wheels of a streetcar company, he is likely to find them in the bigger affairs of life.

Listen to this:

The car company had an obligation to pave and repair the streets within the rails and for 2 feet outside of the tracks. This legal obligation the company refused to comply with until it had piled up a debt to the city for such service that amounted to three-quarters of a million dollars.

That is business. Why does he not run that streetcar company if he is such a good administrator?

If anything should happen to our President and Willkie should by accident be elected, it would take all the loose baling wire in the country to hold the Capitol together in Washington.

All the while the Willkie corporation has been letting its streetcars run down, the Tennessee company continued to buy electric current from the National Government near Muscle Shoals at about 2 mills or less per kilowatt-hour and sell the current to Nashville light patrons at 10 cents (net) per kilowatt-hour, a profit of about 5,000 percent. Exorbitant rates were maintained until the threat of the T. V. A. coming to Nashville caused a reduction.

The same thing occurred in our other cities, and that is what caused the reduction. The companies were making 5,000 percent in all of our cities until T. V. A. came, and now the rates are very much reduced.

Not only that, but during the period Mr. Willkie, the head of the Commonwealth & Southern (holding-company owner of the Tennessee Electric Power Co.), the flimflamming of the investors of the Tennessee Willkie outfit continued in an unabating fashion. These investors in the preferred stock of the Tennessee Willkie corporation had been promised, when they purchased the preferred stock, that the stock buyers could cash in at any time on their stock at 100 cents on the dollar.

Instead, on account of the Insull debacle that caused much fear for investors of all utilities stock, and on account of the Hoover depression that caused much need, when holders of the power stock sought to cash in on their holdings, the Tennessee Electric Power Co. paid no heed to stockholders who tried to obtain par for their preferred stock.

Investors were forced to make a sacrifice of their holdings, many being required to sell as low as 50 cents on the dollar.

Certain defenders of Mr. Willkie, hereabouts, cite the fact that the bogus promises made in the selling of the preferred stock started before Mr. Willkie started as head man of the Commonwealth & Southern. While this was true as to when the stock sales commenced the sacrificing of the stock, and the failure of the Tennessee Willkie company to heed promises, made at the time the stock was sold, went on merrily under the term that Mr. Willkie served as president of the Commonwealth & Southern, parent company of the offending Tennessee Electric Power Co.

The investors were forced to sell at a sacrifice up to the very time that the deal was finally closed, whereby the Tennessee Valley Authority took over the Willkie outfit in Tennessee. Before that, no investor obtained anything like par except those who threatened a lawsuit, and in such cases the par value was forthcoming.

But there was something else of vital importance that happened in Tennessee for which the present miracle man of the G. O. P. has full credit for being in as leader at the start and the finish of the transaction. That was the effort of Willkie when he had 18 utilities join him in the attempt to destroy the T. V. A. in the courts of the Nation.

Surely that has not been forgotten. It cannot be glossed over or blotted out of the record of the Republican nominee.

Should you relate just the plain, unvarnished facts about this diabolical attempt to hamstring the T. V. A. in its great usefulness, that's "smear," but any kind of whispered falsehood can be told about the President and that is all right; it's gospel because its spread by the Roosevelt haters.

Let it be well understood, while the T. V. A. was hopelessly tied up with a temporary injunction, obtained in the Federal court under the leadership of Mr. Willkie, his Tennessee corporation attempted to preempt all of the Nashville territory by the construction of spite electric lines, reaching in all directions.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] remembers that transaction.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. HILL. The slogan in Alabama today is, "Life lines with Roosevelt. Spite lines with Willkie."

Mr. McKELLAR. That slogan grew out of this very situation.

Mr. HILL. Certainly, it grew out of that situation.

Mr. McKELLAR. The T. V. A. was faced with this bitter attitude toward it on the part of the utilities, which spent great amounts of money to defeat it. The utilities had the money. Any concern which makes 5,000-percent profit on a kilowatt-hour of power naturally has money to spend, and they spent money building these spite lines.

I continue to read:

That now is something else in the life of the G. O. P. nominee for President that cannot be erased or explained away. It is one of the several things that will keep Tennessee, along with the whole South, in the Democratic column—

And so forth. Mr. President, I ask that the entire letter be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

NASHVILLE, TENN., September 21, 1940.

Hon. KENNETH MCKELLAR,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MCKELLAR: August 16 last I sent you a published copy of a letter written by our present Nashville mayor regarding the necessity of repairs being made on the streetcars, the "Willkie" line of streetcars, in Nashville.

Little heed must have been paid to the letter of the mayor, for disastrous accidents have occurred in Nashville on the streetcar lines since the letter was written, and, as a matter of fact, such a letter could have been written with equal propriety at any time during the past several years.

Five years ago there was passed stealthily a local bill in the extra session of the Tennessee Legislature that took away from the people the right to vote on a franchise that would allow the Tennessee Electric Power Co. to change over from streetcars to busses by a simple vote of the Nashville City Council.

The change-over was not made at the time because the late Mayor Howse, of Nashville, would never consent to the change unless the Tennessee Electric Power Co., a Willkie outfit, agreed in assuming an obligation to keep up its part of the streets that it should traverse with busses.

For several years, under the bossism of Willkie, the Nashville streetcars have been allowed to go down and down until the cars became a public menace, evidently for the purpose of disgusting everyone, so that all concerned would agree to give the Willkie corporation a bus franchise agreeable to Willkie's way of doing things, fleecing the public.

Delapidated cars have had such leaky roofs that patrons of the lines that serve the poorer sections have had to raise umbrellas in the streetcars during rains and rainstorms to keep from being drenched.

Wheels running off cars while in motion have endangered the lives of pedestrians and car riders.

Worn car-wheel flanges have caused cars to jump tracks, also to the jeopardy of pedestrians on the streets and the car riders.

Lack of repairs of boxings and spindles have caused noises from streetcar operations that could be heard for blocks off the streetcar lines.

Brakes on the streetcars were allowed to go unrepaired until few of the cars were regarded as safe by the operators.

The car company had an obligation to pave and repair the streets within the rails and for 2 feet outside of the tracks. This legal obligation the company refused to comply with until it had piled up a debt to the city for such service that amounted to three-quarters of a million dollars.

If anything should happen to our President and Willkie should by accident be elected, it would take all the loose bailing wire in the country to hold the Capitol together in Washington. He would let it fall down, for the New Deal is already thinking about putting on a new roof.

All the while the Willkie corporation has been letting its streetcars run down, the Tennessee company continued to buy electric current from the National Government near Muscle Shoals at about 2 mills or less per kilowatt-hour and sell the current to Nashville light patrons at 10 cents (net) per kilowatt hour—a profit of about 5,000 percent. Exorbitant rates were maintained until the threat of the T. V. A. coming to Nashville caused a reduction.

Not only that, but during the period Mr. Willkie was the head of the Commonwealth & Southern (holding-company owner of the Tennessee Electric Power Co.) the flimflamming of the investors of the Tennessee Willkie outfit continued in an unabating fashion.

18 utilities join him in the attempt to destroy the T. V. A. in the courts of the nation.

Surely that has not been forgotten. It cannot be glossed over or blotted out of the record of the Republican nominee.

Should you relate just the plain, unvarnished facts about this diabolical attempt to hamstring the T. V. A. in its great usefulness, that's "smear," but any kind of whispered falsehood can be told about the President and that is all right; it's gospel because it's spread by the Roosevelt haters.

Let it be well understood, while the T. V. A. was hopelessly tied up with a temporary injunction, obtained in the Federal court under the leadership of Mr. Willkie, his Tennessee corporation attempted to preempt all of the Nashville territory by the construction of spite electric lines, reaching in all directions.

There was constructed electric power routes all around Nashville that the Willkie outfit here had refused for years to build these lines unless prospective patrons put up hundreds and thousands of dollars for each respective several lines, surrounding the capital city of the State.

Under the temporary hamstringing of the T. V. A. the Willkie corporation in Tennessee made a grand rush to construct these spite lines around Nashville in a desire to barricade this city against the entrance of the T. V. A. into this territory, and the lines were constructed without a penny's cost to any one of the prospective patrons. That was plain evidence of Willkie's hatred of the T. V. A.

That now is something else in the life of the G. O. P. nominee for President that cannot be erased or explained away. It is one of the several things that will keep Tennessee, along with the whole South, in the Democratic column in November, no matter what G. O. P. campaign funds are sent here in the fruitless effort to turn this Volunteer State against our great President.

Democrats in Tennessee are just as sure of success in November as the sun is sure to rise clear after a cloudless night.

Sincerely yours,

PAUL W. TREANOR,
Former City Commissioner, City of Nashville.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. Can the able Senator from Tennessee conceive any reason why the Republican Convention rejected or ignored distinguished Republicans such as Messrs. Taft, Dewey, Vandenberg, and Capper, and nominated Willkie, a renegade Democrat and deserter from Tammany Hall, for President?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know. It may be they knew they could not win the election, and so, desiring to wish the nomination on somebody, wished it on Mr. Willkie, rather than on someone else.

I desire to call attention to another matter contained in the article from which I read a few moments ago. It is strange how people become confused. Here Mr. Willkie announces that he is going to leave to the people of the area the determination whether they shall have Government distribution of power or private distribution of power. That could not settle anything. Where could Mr. Willkie get the machinery under the Federal Constitution to adopt any such plan? It is a ridiculous absurdity. It cannot be done. There is but one purpose in the suggestion.

I see standing before me the distinguished ex-Governor of the State of Oregon, WALTER M. PIERCE, one of the grand men of the House of Representatives. He is familiar with the Grand Coulee Dam. He has been working for the building of that dam for years. He is interested in it as a citizen of the State in which the dam is located, and as a legislator. He cannot be fooled by any such claptrap. There are many others who cannot be fooled by it, but there are some people who can be fooled by it.

I now wish to read an editorial published in this morning's Washington Post, one of the greatest newspapers in Washington. Ordinarily it has a very sensible editorial policy. I have a great deal of respect for that newspaper. Once in a great while I agree with it. But listen to how this candidate for President has fooled the great editor of the Washington Post. I read from the editorial contained in the Post of this morning:

MR. WILLKIE ON POWER

In discussing the supposed electric power issue at Portland, Oreg., Wendell L. Willkie took the position that most sensible and public-spirited citizens take. He analyzed the problem and stated his position with the detachment of a man who has never had any association with the utilities.

My heavens!

Mr. Willkie points out that the Government has invested large sums in power and irrigation dams. It would be an inexcusable waste of public funds to let those great projects remain uncompleted. When they are finished, says Mr. Willkie, the power should be distributed in the public interest at the lowest possible rates.

Who is going to distribute it? There is but one idea in Mr. Willkie's mind in that respect, and that is to let the utilities themselves distribute it, "and then we will fix the rate." There is no possible machinery of the Federal Government by which it can be done by the public under the plan announced by Mr. Willkie, but evidently the writer of this editorial had not examined the Constitution, had not examined our system of government, so he took the position he did in the editorial.

The people of the cities and towns should decide for themselves whether they wish to be served by public or private transmission facilities.

Willkie says that should be decided in the area. What area? Oregon could pass a law, but it would not do any good. Washington could pass a law, but it would not do any good. The area in question takes in other States besides Washington and Oregon. It takes in northern California, it takes in a part of Wyoming, it takes in a part of Idaho, and perhaps goes down as far as Utah. Electric transmission systems can carry power very far these days. Who is going to set up that area? Where is the power in the United States Government to set it up?

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I agree with the Senator from Tenessee that probably the Federal Government could not do it, but perhaps Mr. Willkie thinks that the State legislatures would do it, and that would place it in the hands of the private utilities, because they are expert in setting up laws of that kind for consideration in the legislatures in the first place, and then in conducting the elections, as they did the one in Chattanooga. If they need qualified freeholders, they take their own employees, as they did, 100 of them, and make them freeholders, and then contribute, as they did in Chattanooga, to the campaign, and, as the Senator from Tennessee recalls, they set up a standing committee in Chattanooga and spent $22,265, of which Mr. Willkie's company contributed $20,000, and then Mr. Willkie said that if he had not obtained the result he wanted, he would have spent more to obtain it and been glad to do so.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator from Indiana for that contribution.

In addition to that, they might do as they did another time in Tennessee and get a bill through the legislature of Oregon—I hope they never will, I may say to my good friend from Oregon—or get a bill through the Legislature of Washington—and I hope they never will—stealthily, as the evidence shows they got one through the Tennessee Legislature.

I continue to read from the editorial in today's Washington Post:

If public agencies are favored, he says, appropriate machinery should be set up to determine what is a fair price to be paid for existing private systems in the area.

There is not anything wrong about that, but where will the machinery be found under our system of government? It cannot be done.

That simple policy seems to dispose of any "utilities" issue in the campaign.

How easy it is to solve that question, ignoring the real fact, ignoring the fact that this man who now says that he favors the Bonneville Dam and favors the Grand Coulee Dam a short time ago tried to secure an injunction against the T. V. A. and, not being successful in the lower court, appealed the case to the appellate court, and then to the court of appeals, and lastly to the Supreme Court of the United States, which turned him down and held that the Government had the right to establish the T. V. A.

Mr. President, I have come to another matter in regard to Mr. Willkie and what he has said before on this very same subject, all of which controverts what he now says.

Private operation of our electric utilities has been economical to the consumer—

Said Mr. Willkie in the Chattanooga Times of February 14, 1934. Listen to it again:

Private operation of our electric utilities has been economical to the consumer.

Is it possible that anybody could say that 5,000 percent profit on current obtained from the Government at 2 mills per kilowatt-hour represents an economical distribution of that current to the consumer? It is ridiculous.

Again:

The great percentage of utility securities were issued after public hearing before commissions elected by the people or appointed by their elected representatives, and then only after showing that such securities were represented by at least an equal number of dollars invested at the time of the issuance of such securities.

I digress long enough to say that I happen to know something about some lawsuits in the days before I came to Congress. I shall give the facts with regard to one company about which I happen to know. A northern concern came to a southern city and bought a franchise from the city, paying $100,000 for it. It put in an underground electric system at a cost of $600,000 more, and issued $1,000,000 of bonds. Seven hundred thousand dollars of the bonds were used for the purpose of buying the franchise from the city and building the project. It then issued $2,000,000 worth of stock to go to those who bought the bonds. Every man who bought $1,000 of bonds received $2,000 of stock, for which he paid nothing. That is what we know as watered stock. That is the kind of stock which is issued by holding companies such as the one of which Mr. Willkie was the head. I suppose he is still as much interested in it as ever. It may be true that he has disposed of his interest. I do not know that he has sold his interest in it. I have never seen any public statement to that effect. I do not know and Willkie will not say or does not say.

The first year, the concern to which I refer made the interest on $1,000,000 worth of bonds, $300,000 of them still being in the treasury. It paid every bill in advance. It paid 6 percent on the $2,000,000 of watered stock, and, as I recall the amount, had $57,000 left in cash in the treasury at the end of the first year. That condition continued for 6 or 7 years, when a holding company, like the one in which Mr. Willkie is interested, came along, took charge of the operating company and put it in the hands of a receiver, and then rearranged matters for the interest of the holders of watered stock. The holding company continued to run the operating company at the same enormous profits from that time until the T. V. A. took it over and reduced the price of the current.

So when Mr. Willkie talks about value we know that holding companies have never put money into producing companies. They are merely watered-stock manipulators.

On March 5, 1936, Mr. Willkie said in a radio talk:

Whenever a householder in Tupelo, Miss., switches on a light, everybody in the United States helps to pay for it.

The man who made that statement wants to be President of the United States. He says that whenever a person in Tupelo, Miss., switches on an electric light, everybody in the United States pays for it. Does any one believe that? If any Senator believes it, let him rise and say so. No one rises. Of course no one believes it.

Listen to this:

Years prior to the existence of the T. V. A., the southern companies began a progressive reduction of their rates. But further reductions will be difficult to achieve because the threat of T. V. A. compels the companies to pay high interest rates on their capital requirements.

Of course, that has been proved not to be true.

In a speech on January 21, 1935, before the Economic Club of New York and the Harvard Business School Club, Mr. Willkie referred to Samuel Insull. We all remember Mr. Insull. What did Mr. Willkie say about him? He referred to him as a "forceful, dynamic, and attractive figure." Perhaps the same thing could be said of Mr. Willkie. He is forceful, or he says he is. He is dynamic, or he says he is. He is attractive, as we look at his picture in the theaters.

In the same talk he described the national development and control of waterpower resources as "a foolish fad and fancy of the moment." Think of that, Senators—"a foolish fad and fancy of the moment." Yet he now says that no reasonable man could conceive of opposition to public power projects.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the Senator think it is fair to kick a corpse around in the fashion in which he has been proceeding? [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. Perhaps it is not; but after one is dead, it does not make much difference anyway. [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. HILL. Especially when there are none here to do him honor. The Senator is throwing out the corpse unwept, unhonored, and unsung.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am merely stating the facts, and giving Mr. Willkie's words. Remember that this man is a candidate for the Presidency in a party for which he never before voted, according to the record.

Listen to this, from a speech he made at the Harvard Business School Club on January 21, 1935:

I want to say to you that no duty has ever come to me in my life—even that in the service of my country—which has so appealed to my sense of social obligation, patriotism, and love of mankind as this—my obligation to say and do what I can for the preservation of public utilities privately owned.

He puts his obligation to the utilities ahead of his patriotic zeal for his country—not even the service of his country comes ahead of his devotion to the public utilities. When he denies what he said in his prayers in a bill for injunction in Tennessee, and when he denies his own attitude about utilities, are we to take his word for it?

A moment ago the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] indirectly somewhat chided me for making a political speech. I wish to say that this is a political speech in one way and not a political speech in another. I will say to the Senator from Ohio, and to the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], who unhappily is not present, that if Mr. Willkie wins this fight the Tennessee Valley Authority, the Bonneville Dam, the Grand Coulee Dam, and every other enterprise of a similar character will go to the wall. They will go out of business. I am here fighting for the people of my country. I am here fighting to give cheaper power rates and cheaper light rates to the consumers of the country. Looked at in that sense, this is anything but a political speech. It is a speech in behalf of the best interests of my State, your State, and of the people of the country.

Mr. Willkie talks about standing up for the T. V. A., the Bonneville Dam, and the Grand Coulee Dam. Listen to what he said on March 5, 1936, in a radio broadcast:

The T. V. A. is the most useless and unnecessary of all the alphabetical joyrides.

If he were not a candidate today, he probably would say that the T. V. A. and Grand Coulee and Bonneville Dams are "the most useless and unnecessary of all the alphabetical joyrides." Yet he is telling the people that it is inconceivable that anybody could be against these worthy projects, which for years he tried to destroy.

Listen to this:

If the South permits the T. V. A. to take over electric transmission and distribution systems, or if the municipalities take over the distribution systems and purchase their power from the T. V. A., within 10 years, surely, and probably within half that time, it will find itself with high power rates, increased taxes, or bankrupt municipalities.

Is that true? Of course it is not true, and here is an example of its falsity. I quote from the Knoxville News-Sentinel:

HERE'S WHAT T. V. A. POWER CAN DO FOR A CITY

Chattanooga's system has been in operation 10½ months. And here's what it has done. Saved consumers $1,700,000 a year in power bills; paid a total of $243,963 in city, county, and State taxes; met all operating overhead, all interest on bonds, all depreciation charges, and all amounts set aside for paying bond premiums, and in addition has earned a net profit of $481,223.61.

I have not the figures for the city from which I come, Memphis, Tenn. In that city the plant did not belong to a Willkie company, but the T. V. A. bought it, and since then the proceeds from the distribution and electric plant in that city have been far greater than they were at Chattanooga.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. HILL. In Birmingham, Ala., since the T. V. A. came to Alabama the private power company operating at Birmingham has reduced its rates not once or twice or three times or four times, but seven different times. The rates have been reduced seven different times simply and solely because of the yardstick of the T. V. A.

Mr. McKELLAR. If by some accident, which nobody can now imagine, Mr. Willkie should happen to be elected in November, does the Senator think that condition in Birmingham would be changed?

Mr. HILL. I certainly do. I think the rates would go back to where they were.

Mr. McKELLAR. I read again from Mr. Willkie, quoting from the Edison Electric Bulletin of May 1936:

The T. V. A. program with its vast expenditures of public money collected from people in all parts of the country for the subsidizing of the electric rates of a few in a particular section is seriously threatening the financial stability of many utilities companies.

That is not correct. Utilities companies are making more money now than they ever did. The Government by establishing the yardstick of the T. V. A. and by the use of dams in other parts of the country has brought down the prices of electricity everywhere, but the utilities companies are successful; indeed, they are more successful than heretofore, notwithstanding the efforts of Mr. Willkie to destroy the T. V. A. and the other governmental power operations.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, as the Senator knows, because of the forced reduction of electric rates by the Government through the T. V. A., there has been an enormous increase in the consumption of power, and, as the Senator has well said, the utilities companies are all prosperous today; they are all making plenty of money.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator, and I will say to him that I have received a letter from one of the power officials of the T. V. A. at Memphis, stating that the consumption of power in Memphis had about doubled since the T. V. A. took over the plant and the rates were reduced.

Mr. Willkie said before the House Military Affairs Committee hearing on April 14, 1933:

I can say to you, as my deliberate judgment, that if this bill (T. V. A.) passes, this $400,000,000 worth of securities will be eventually destroyed.

Time has gone by and they have not been destroyed.

On May 1, 1935, before the United States Chamber of Commerce at Washington, Mr. Willkie said:

By reason of the attack and by reason of the Government competition and governmentally subsidized competition, the securities of utility companies have depreciated billions of dollars in market value in the last 2 years.

Everybody knows why stocks went down. They went down for other reasons.

Mr. President, to show the remarkable views of this Democratic candidate on the Republican ticket, let me say that a short time ago the distinguished senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] introduced a bill to reimburse the States and counties for tax losses brought about by reason of the T. V. A. buying private power plants from Mr. Willkie. The Senator from Nebraska proposed to arrange a way by law, which is the only way it could be arranged, to have the T. V. A. itself remunerate the counties and the States for their tax losses. Mr. Willkie was a witness before the committee in the House. What did he say about it? He had been charging for years that there had not been taken into account taxes in computing the profits of T. V. A. One would naturally think he would have been for the bill; but what did he say about the counties of Tennessee? He said, "No, I am not in favor of that bill; let them stew in their own juice." That is almost equivalent to what he said about the city of Chicago some days ago, when he told the whole city that it should go to hades. I do not believe he used the word hades, but the other word cannot be used here. Thus we have a candidate for President saying of 68 of the counties of a great State, "No, I do not want justice done to them; let them stew in their own juice. They would not do my bidding; they would not do as I told them; they would not obey my voice; let them stew in their own juice." He also said they should go bankrupt. It is a wonder he did not use a hotter term; it is a wonder he did not use an adjective before that expression.

Mr. President, I hope the splendid Washington Post and the other newspapers of this country will not be misled by these specious explanations of a position that cannot be explained. If we believe in the principle underlying the Bonneville Dam, if we believe in the principle underlying the Grand Coulee Dam; if we believe in the principle of the T. V. A., we should defeat Mr. Willkie for President; otherwise those great institutions, established for the benefit of the American people, will be destroyed. I do not want them destroyed.

Someone suggested here the other day that several years ago I voted for a resolution against the third Presidential term. It was said that when Mr. Coolidge was thought to be a candidate for a third term, together with other Senators, I voted for a resolution setting forth opposition to it. Of course that was so. I voted against Mr. Coolidge for a first term; I voted against him for a second term, and Heaven knows, there was not anything else for me to do but to be against him for a third term. The present situation is an entirely different one, and I think there will be a different result.

Mr. HOLT obtained the floor.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to put something in the RECORD?

Mr. HOLT. I intend to speak for only a few moments, but I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HILL. Anent the very able and interesting address of the Senator from Tennessee, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an editorial from the Montgomery Advertiser of September 21 last entitled "The Wild Bull of the Pampas." It closes with these words——

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, is that about Willkie, too?

Mr. HILL. I am going to read the closing paragraph and let the Senator guess who it is about.

As matters now stand we think the challenger should wait as long as Gene Tunney did. Gene waited until the champ had softened—even then he nearly lost his life, being saved only because of his greater stamina and a long count.

The "wild bull" of Indiana charged and hooked the champ, but he went to sleep in the second round. It was a gallant, but reckless charge. There was no sense in it. Walloping Wendell had not been sufficiently seasoned in the preliminaries. Ambition! "By that sin the angels fell."

I ask unanimous consent to print the entire editorial in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The address ordered printed in the RECORD, is as follows:

SENATOR TAFT SUMS UP ISSUES OF THE CAMPAIGN

It is a real pleasure for me to come to Long Island and meet so many Republicans who are going out to gather in the sinews of war. Raising money for political purposes is not an easy or pleasant task, but you can be sure it is one of the most necessary services that any of you can render. When you consider that we have to present our case to more than 40,000,000 voters, you will find that the cost of a national campaign would be $4,000,000 if you only spent 10 cents on each voter. It would take a good deal more than that to provide them adequately with the campaign literature and radio broadcasts which ought to reach every voter. Without the kind of work you are doing there would be no way to state the case to the people who must decide intelligently the issues of November. Unless the people do have all the facts before them, democracy will not work.

It is only 6 weeks to the national election of 1940, and then the people must determine whether Wendell Willkie or Franklin Roosevelt shall be President of the United States for the next 4 years. But they must determine far more than that. They must decide the whole nature of this country's government, not only for 4 years but for many years to come. Seldom has an election presented such fundamental issues affecting the whole future of the country. We are asked to set aside the wise rule of 150 years, approved by Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, that no individual shall exercise the tremendous powers of President of the United States for more than 8 years. We are asked to approve the setting aside of constitutional limitations on the power of the President and the power of the Federal Government. We are asked to endorse a deficit spending policy which is bound to lead to bankruptcy. We are asked to do all this on the ground that only the New Deal, and only Franklin D. Roosevelt, can carry on the policies which are alleged to have brought prosperity and happiness to the people of the United States; that only he can prepare the Nation for defense.

I question the whole premise on which this argument is based. On the contrary, if we weigh the real facts, we find that the policies of the New Deal have not brought prosperity or happiness or preparedness. On the contrary, they have prolonged depression, rendered government inefficient and extravagant, and brought it to the verge of bankruptcy. And we are not prepared to meet the new weapons of warfare developed abroad in the last 7 years.

The New Deal promised prosperity, employment in the city, and high prices on the farm. To accomplish those purposes, it asked for unlimited power and received more power than any Government of the United States has ever had. It asked for the setting aside of constitutional and statutory limitations, and they were set aside. Yet it has failed in the very purpose which it declared. There are still more than 8,000,000 people unemployed, more than 5,000,000 families on relief, a condition we have never faced before except at the bottom of a depression. This country cannot enjoy real prosperity while one-fifth of the workers are walking the streets looking for jobs.

The national income—that is, the income of all the people put together—was $80,000,000,000 in 1928 and 1929. In spite of the borrowing and spending of billions of dollars, the devaluation of the dollar, and every other kind of reckless inflation, it is still only about $70,000,000,000 today, and there are 12,000,000 more people among whom that income must be divided. That means that the average income per person is 20 percent less than it was 12 years ago. And that means that our standard of living is 20 percent lower than in the twenties, instead of being higher than before the depression, as it has been 10 years after every other depression we ever had. Among a few groups wage rates are higher, but the increase is more than balanced by the increased taxes which directly and indirectly now take at least 15 percent of the average workman's income.

In the 10-year period from 1929 to 1939 every other country in the world improved its industrial production and comparative reemployment with the exception of Canada, France, Belgium, and the United States, and the United States lost more in industrial production than any other country in the world except Belgium. Of course, it is true that times are better than they were at the bottom of the depression, but heretofore we have come out of every depression in less than 10 years to a higher standard of living, to a greater national income, and to a position where nearly every man who wanted a job could get a job. Only the New Deal has succeeded in making a depression permanent. Except for the war boom, farm prices are no better than they were before the elaborate New Deal control measures were instituted. Not only has the killing of little pigs and the whole policy of restricting and limiting production—the doctrine of scarcity—failed to produce general prosperity, but it has not even increased farm income. For the 7 years of the New Deal, farm income is far below the last 7 years of Republican administration, even if tremendous Government subsidies are included in the New Deal figure.

After 2 years in Washington, it is pretty obvious to me why business is unable to get going. It is checked at every crucial point by excessive Government regulation and taxation. It is checked by the deliberate hostility of New Deal bureaucrats. The new dealers are inspired by the theory of economic planning. They think they can run this country's business life by regulating prices and wages and hours and practices in every industry. They think they can run every man's business better than he can run it himself, and every farmer's farm better than the farmer. They have added a tremendous volume of regulation, some of it with worthy purposes, but the cumulative effect has crushed the incentive and the ability of men to go into business and to continue in business.

The administration of many of these regulations has been deliberately hostile to business, carried out by men who really believe in national socialism. For Washington is full of men, many in fairly responsible positions, who have completely lost confidence in the American way of life. While they work largely behind the scenes, because they know that they have no real support in Congress, whenever they make a real issue they can count on the support of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The National Labor Relations Board, instead of confining itself to its real purpose of assuring to workmen who wish to unionize the right to do so without restraint from their employers, has undertaken to unionize every industry in the United States, whether the employees actually desire it or not. They have perpetrated some of the grossest miscarriages of justice which this country has ever seen. They have made clear their prejudice against employers, and against the older established unions whenever those unions are opposed by a radical group. Amendments to the law are absolutely essential.

The wage-hour law has been administered without regard to common sense or practical conditions. Personally, I think that the hour provisions of the law should be repealed, because State laws adequately prevent unduly long hours.

The Guffey Coal Act, attempting to regulate wages and hours and practices in the coal industry, is so difficult to administer that prices have never yet been put into effect after 3 years of the law. When they do go into effect, the principal result will be to raise the price of coal to millions of consumers. The law ought to be repealed.

The regulation of agriculture has been extended to every detail of the farmer's activities, and to all the industries concerned with the distribution of farm products, until it is impossible to persuade any man to venture new capital or effort in this field. Farm regulation and subsidies can be somewhat reduced, and devices worked out to improve farm prices in the United States without telling every individual farmer what he must plant.

The S. E. C., whose only legitimate purpose is to protect the purchasers of securities from fraud, interests itself in determining and trying to control the channel in which capital shall be invested and those in which it shall not be invested. It has seriously checked the investment of moneys, particularly in the smaller enterprises. But I must admit the New Deal has given men plenty of other reasons to hesitate before entering the business field.

Many agents of the Internal Revenue Department, in their administration of tax laws, treat every taxpayer as presumably a crook until he proves otherwise, particularly if he is not in accord with the politics of the present administration.

Taxes like the undistributed profits tax and the present excess-profits tax have been imposed, not to secure revenue, but to punish someone who the administration feels is making more money than he should.

The excess-profits tax law we have just passed will produce only $150,000,000. The same day we passed an appropriation of 325 millions just for camps and barracks for the men about to be drafted. The new law is so complicated that no one can understand it. Excess-profits taxation is impossible without creating many unequal burdens. It is particularly discouraging to men who are willing to put their time and money into new enterprises. They have no record of earnings, and they are usually investing their own time rather than capital, so that all of their earnings are excess.

The whole tax structure should be revised at the earliest possible moment. It should be devised to raise needed revenue with as little interference as possible with the very business activity which will increase the revenue. But if that revision is made by the Roosevelt administration it will be full of economic planning instead of revenue.

I have only given a few examples of the manner in which the New Deal has checked and discouraged the development of prosperity. Every green grocer is burdened with taxes and with countless reports. The little businessman has to spend his time making out a dozen reports a month for State and Federal authorities until he can give no time or attention to the expansion of his own business.

America has been built up by the constant influx of countless men into the field of business. I remember in the twenties when the papers in Ohio carried every day 50 new incorporations. Each one put a few men to work. Many passed out of the picture, but others grew into moderate-sized or even into great industries. That was the process by which America has constantly grown for 150 years. That was the reason why we employed millions more men in 1930 than in 1900, or in 1800 for that matter.

Not only has this process stopped, but many who were in business have retired to accept a small return from Government bonds instead of the hazards of industry under the New Deal. There are many instances of direct Government competition and threats of Government competition. Of course no private individual can compete with a government which disregards deficits, and once the Government has invaded an industry it is almost impossible to get anyone else to enter that field. Big business can look after itself, but the growth of business has taken place in the past through thousands of small industries.

The defense program will stimulate a boom in this country. Already the New Deal "brain trust" economists are beginning to say that the expenditure of a few billion dollars will in 2 years increase our national income by thirty and forty billion dollars.

The real new dealers are tremendously pleased with the necessity of a defense program, because they think it may produce the prosperity they have in vain tried to achieve.

Of course it probably will produce some improvement in business prosperity, but as soon as the temporary effect has worn off we must face again the essentials which the New Deal is so anxious today to avoid.

If New Deal theories, backed by Franklin D. Roosevelt, still dominate the Government when the defense program begins to decline, we will face the worst depression this country has ever seen.

The defense program, incidentally, does not help the little man. The contracts go to big business, and the development is neither natural nor helpful in the long run. We cannot spend ourselves into prosperity. We have tried that for 7 years, and spent $25,000,000,000 of borrowed money. If that wasn't successful, then a few billion more for defense is going to hurt a good deal more than it will help.

The New Deal has failed in its declared purpose, but if Franklin D. Roosevelt is reelected, there will be no change in its discredited policies. The regulation of business will be constantly increased. Reports will multiply. The same men, with an intense antibusiness complex, will administer the National Labor Relations Board, the wage-hour law, the S. E. C., the Internal Revenue Department, and countless other bureaus. The stagnation of industry will continue, and the same vicious circle will force the Government into more and more fields of activity until the complete goal of national socialism is reached.

Wendell Willkie understands the business system of America, and how it works. He knows how prosperity can be produced. He knows how the abuses of business can be prevented without crushing an entire industry. Under his administration some laws can be repealed; many can be modified; the administration of all can be carried on in a spirit of helpfulness to private industry instead of an underlying purpose that it should be destroyed.

But there is another field in which those of us in Washington would grieve to contemplate the continuation of the Roosevelt administration for 4 years more. It is utterly lacking in efficient or coordinated administration. Scores of new bureaus have been created whose activities conflict and overlap. I used to talk about the need of reorganization, but I never realized until I reached Washington in what complete confusion are the activities of different bureaus.

Every bureau chief sits in a separate marble building and runs his own show, without the slightest consideration for what goes on in the marble building across the street. In the housing field alone, we have at least five separate agencies—the United States Housing Authority, the Federal Housing Administration, the Farm Security Administration, the Army, and the Navy. Now we are about to add the Federal Works Agency for $150,000,000 worth of defense housing.

The Treasury and the Federal Reserve Board have many of the same powers, and their views of Government financial policies are fundamentally at variance. The activities of Jesse Jones as head of the Federal Loan Agency overlap and in many cases exceed those of the Treasury itself.

In the field of defense his activities overlap those of the Army, the Navy, and the National Defense Advisory Commission.

Every activity heads up to the President himself, and he hasn't got the time or the inclination or the ability to do the coordinating that ought to be done.

The Cabinet, upon which every other President has relied, is largely a nonentity as an agency of administration. Every member reports to the President, and he takes little time to iron out their conflicts which all the world knows of. Coupled with this lack of coordination is a complete absence of responsibility in the field of spending.

There is no village council in this country that hasn't got more horse sense and a greater sense of responsibility about money than the Government of the United States. Financial affairs have never interested or concerned Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Only recently the President told a press conference that he wasn't interested in whether Congress raised the defense money by taxes or bond issues—all he wanted was the money to spend. Yet a wise plan of raising money is an essential part of any effective preparedness. He has not submitted a real Budget for 7 years. He has never been in the slightest degree interested in balancing the Budget. He has basked in the pleasant fallacy that Government deficits are a blessing in disguise, and that Government spending will produce prosperity. In the face of tremendously increased expenditures for defense, he has made no move to cut a single cent out of the excessive expenditures for domestic purposes, which are already more than double what they were under the Hoover administration. We must have an adequate Army and Navy, but if we are going to provide them without bankrupting the country, we are going to have to take in our belts in every other field. If we must have battleships and mechanized armies, as we must, then we must give up a lot of the other nice things we might like to have.

It is inevitable that we must look forward to a lower standard of living than we would otherwise under sound administration be able to have. But the President is still obsessed with the idea that as a people we can get something for nothing. The President has announced the pleasant theory that the only possible way to balance the Budget is to wait until the national income is greater. The difficulty is that the national income may not be greater, and if we wait until it is greater, the expenditures of the Government will be greater also—unless we end the New Deal method of government.

Of course we have to borrow money for a great emergency expenditure like that of national defense today, but some of these expenditures are permanent annual additions to the cost of government, and will annually recur for years to come. Probably the normal annual upkeep of the Army and Navy, recently approximating a billion and a half dollars, will be increased by at least $2,000,000,000, leaving out the initial cost of ships, equipment, camps, and bases. I believe that $2,000,000,000 can be cut out of our domestic expenditures, now amounting to nearly $10,000,000,000, and that a revision of the tax system must be enacted which will raise the money necessary to meet the cost of our domestic activities, plus the normal upkeep of our defense forces. Otherwise we are fooling ourselves and fooling the people.

We think we are getting something for nothing, but we will only have to pay an increased price later on. We must watch even the defense expenditures with a careful eye, for in the appropriation of billions of dollars for new things there can be a tremendous amount of waste. The President's attitude, and that of a good many otherwise intelligent people, is that since we obviously can't balance the Budget while the defense program is on, we might as well forget all about economy. The sky's the limit in Washington today. As a matter of fact, there is obviously all the more need for watching expenses and eliminating every item that isn't absolutely necessary.

Government lending is as bad or worse than Government spending. Let's not fool ourselves by thinking that the new R. F. C. loans to South American governments and to dummy corporations for airplane plants are business transactions. They may be necessary, but the ultimate repayment is extremely doubtful. The R. F. C. borrows on Government credit. These newly undertaken loans are just as much expenditures of the Government, producing an increase in Government debt, as are the ordinary appropriations.

If we continue the present administration for 4 years more, there is not the slightest chance that the Budget will ever be balanced; there is not the slightest chance of avoiding a constant and constantly growing increase in debt; there is not the slightest chance of avoiding ultimately the bankruptcy of the Government.

No man and no government can long continue to live on borrowed money. Sooner or later the day of reckoning must come, and when it comes it means an end of our whole business system.

I believe it would mean an end of American liberty as we have known it.

Governments don't go to the bankruptcy court, but they begin paying their bills with paper money, because the people can't see why they should burden themselves to pay the debts of past generations.

When that time comes, prices increase so rapidly that the dollar is soon of no value at all.

Savings and life-insurance policies are worthless.

The real effect of inflation is that the Government pays its debts by confiscating the savings of its people—at the same time upsetting and destroying the very machinery which creates prosperity under our system. In such a break-down the Government would be called in to run the country's business, and the goal of national socialism would be reached.

That's one reason the true new dealer looks with complacence at our growing debt.

At the time when large sums must be borrowed it is all the more important that government be efficient and economical. Wendell Willkie has had to meet a pay roll. He has had to apply, and has applied, the same principles in private business which ought to be applied in government. He would be able to restore efficiency to the Government, and create the kind of organization which could secure cooperation between the different departments. I don't know any man who more nearly meets the immediate present-day requirements for intelligent government.

The absolute necessity for an efficient Government is ever greater in the face of the present crisis. Every defect of the New Deal is obvious in its administration of defense. There is the same feverish activity, there is the same lack of plan, and the same lack of coordination.

It is said that only Franklin D. Roosevelt is competent to carry on a defense program.

For heaven's sake, on what ground?

If our defenses are today completely inadequate to meet the threat of a German attack, and the President himself admits it, no one can be to blame but the President himself. When he came to office in 1933, Hitler had only just acquired power in Germany in January. He had an army of 100,000 men, poorly equipped and with few airplanes. Our Army and Navy were small, it is true, but armament is entirely relative, and they were completely adequate to meet the situation of that day.

In fact, Franklin D. Roosevelt himself criticized their expenses, promised a reduction in both Army and Navy, and carried it out in 1933.

The growth of the German Army, with its tremendous air force and its mechanized units, has taken place entirely within the 7 years of the Roosevelt administration.

The increase in the Japanese Fleet has taken place entirely in the administration of Franklin D. Roosevelt, and Japanese battleships have been built at a much faster rate than New Deal battleships.

It isn't as if money was denied the President, because vast billions have been spent during those 7 years for every conceivable purpose which might please the voters or any considerable special group of the voters.

When the first $3,300,000,000 blank check appropriation was made, the President was urged to devote $2,000,000,000 of it to the mechanization of the Army. He almost did so, but one day Secretary Ickes and Mrs. Perkins were seen coming out of his office, and the next day most of the sum went for public works.

The truth is the New Deal has been a good deal more interested in its own pet projects and the votes to keep it in office than it has been in the national defense.

Today there are many departments and many individual men doing a magnificent job of adding to the defenses of the Nation. But I have yet to see a plan of any kind. No one knows what defense will cost. No one knows how many parts of the world we are going to defend. As far as I can see, no one even has authority to make a complete plan.

The Defense Advisory Commission is made up of seven men without a chairman. Each man advises the President directly, so that, in effect, we have seven new bureaus to coordinate existing bureaus, all heading up to the President. He never has made any well-thought-out comprehensive plan in advance in any field. I hope when everything is done we will find that one way or another we have stumbled into a sound defensive position, but I don't feel any confidence.

For many years the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy have annually published a so-called Industrial Mobilization Plan. The very central feature of this plan is the creation of a War Resources Administration, with a single head, to undertake the industrial mobilization of the Nation and the procurement of Army and Navy equipment. Every nation in the World War found it necessary to create a ministry of munitions. A coordinated plan of industrial mobilization is just as essential today as an army or navy. The power to carry it through must be delegated to someone of ability and experience.

But the President is apparently unwilling to delegate an iota of the power which is his. His hands must be on every detail, although no human being could possibly do the job himself. The new dealers want him to keep his hand on every detail, so that national defense may never interfere in the slightest degree with any of the pet projects of the New Deal.

In short, the very faults which have brought about failure in the attempt to improve our domestic affairs will produce serious defects in our defense program. It is bound to be extravagant because administered by those who regard spending as a virtue in itself. It will overlap and yet leave blank spaces. From a financial standpoint the country will be utterly unprepared, and if war should unhappily come, we would have little borrowing power left and would face a financial collapse at the very time when we ought to be strong.

If Franklin D. Roosevelt is reelected, there will never be a real plan of defense, any more than there has been during the last 7 years.

For the reasons I have frankly stated, the future welfare of this country depends on a change of administration now. Now is the time when we need a business administration. Now is the time when we need to forget class hatred and invite the cooperation of employer and employee alike.

Now is the time when we need a man who can plan comprehensively and does not hesitate to call into conference and authority the kind of men who can make our Government work as smoothly and efficiently as a machine. Now is the time when we need a man whose abilities are the kind that exactly contrast with the failures of New Deal administration. That man is Wendell L. Willkie.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURKE in the chair). The present occupant of the chair would like to say that after leaving the chair, and on the appropriate occasion, he will have a word or two to say about the closing remarks of the senior Senator from Tennessee in reference to a vote which he cast in this body a few years ago.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I do not desire to discuss President Roosevelt or Wendell Willkie; but the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] has discussed the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation.

Anybody who has followed my record knows that I have been opposing the unfair and vicious practices of utilities ever since I have been in public life. As chairman of a committee in the West Virginia Legislature, I exposed many of their practices. I think the whole story ought to be told, however. I sent out and got Martindale's Legal Directory, and on page 1122 what do I find? I find the law firm of Winthrop, Stimson, Putnam, and Roberts, 32 Liberty Street, New York, N. Y. Who is in the firm? Let me read: Henry L. Stimson, and then the directory lists the other members of the firm. I shall not burden the RECORD with their names; but down underneath that, here is what the book says, on page 1122. I certainly would like to have a photostatic copy of it. It says that the firm of Mr. Henry L. Stimson is counsel for the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation; Bonbright & Co., Inc.; General Telephone Co.; Franklin Savings Bank; and the Atlantic Coast Fisheries Co.

I think the public should know that Henry L. Stimson, of whom the President of the United States thought so much that he went clear beyond the pale of his party and picked him out as his Secretary of War, who has much control over public power in the United States, particularly in connection with national defense, is a member of the law firm of Winthrop, Stimson, Putnam, and Roberts, which is listed in its own biographical report in Martindale's Legal Directory on page 1122 as counsel for the terrible corporation of which the Senator from Tennessee has spoken so much. He was counsel for it at that time, and no doubt that firm advised the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation how to do many of the things of which the Senator from Tennessee complains.

As I say, I am not discussing Mr. Willkie; I am not discussing the President; but I say that the counsel for Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, which has been fighting T. V. A., has been recently named Secretary of War by the President himself; so why complain?

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I entered the Chamber as a remark was made by the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] to the effect that no Republican would rise in defense of Mr. Willkie.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I did not say that.

Mr. WILEY. I so understood the Senator, and if I misunderstood him I beg his pardon.

I say that Mr. Willkie does not need any defense. I have never seen the time when there has been so much fuss over a worthy citizen, Mr. Willkie, leaving another group that he could not get along with, a group that he did not want to get along with because of some of their "crack-pot" notions. I have never before seen so much fuss over an incident of that kind; and I am sure never before in the history of the United States Senate has a man been given so much prominence because he dared to follow his conviction. He says the Democratic Party left him. Apparently he is missed.

Something was said by the distinguished Senator from Tennessee to the effect that Mr. Willkie was inconsistent when he made his speech out in Oregon. I realize that in an argument one should stick to his text, but I want to show you something about the inconsistency of the distinguished Senator from Tennessee. I want to show you when he stood for monopoly, when he stood against the public operating utilities, and I want to introduce the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to sustain my position.

At one time the Senator appears not to have been so militantly opposed to monopoly. I refer to the RECORD of December 7, 1922, at page 178 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 64, part I, Sixty-seventh Congress, where the Senator did not appear to be opposing the Underwood bill, which proposed to lease the Muscle Shoals Dam to the Alabama Power Co., and his subsequent action in favor of Mr. Ford is more convincing evidence of this view.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I know the Senator wants to have the RECORD straight. That has been a long time ago, but I am quite sure I never agreed with Mr. Underwood on power in my life. I think the Senator must have gotten the RECORD wrong. I should like to have the reference to the RECORD to see about it. I recall having voted once for Henry Ford's proposal.

Mr. WILEY. I shall come to that, sir.

Mr. MCKELLAR. But not for Mr. Underwood's proposal about the Alabama Power Co. I have been against the Alabama Power Co. from time immemorial.

Mr. WILEY. The Senator can be sure that I want the RECORD straight. I do not want to misstate anything or misrepresent the distinguished Senator's position. I believe the RECORD will demonstrate that the Senator who now is such an advocate of public ownership was against public ownership, was for giving Henry Ford a monopoly, and was against the Government owning T. V. A.

Shortly afterward the Senator supported Henry Ford's offer for the Muscle Shoals Dam; he said on December 10, 1924, on page 392 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 66, part II, 68th Congress—listen to this, now:

> I do not believe that the Government ought to be put in business if it is possible to avoid it.

What do you think of that? [Laughter.]

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I say that today, if the Senator will permit me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. WILEY. I did not interrupt the Senator from Tennessee, Mr. President. I shall be glad to have him reply later on, if he can. I wonder if he would still support the Ford proposal.

On page 393 of the same RECORD the Senator said:

I am opposed to municipal operation or governmental operation. I would dislike to see that plant go into the hands of the Government for operation, because I do not know what would happen to it. * * * I cannot bring myself,—

I am still quoting—

with my rearing and education—

Think of it—"my rearing and education" [laughter]—

along political lines, to believe that Government operation of the plant can be as successful as private operation. * * *

On page 396 of the same RECORD—get this, now—we find that Senator Underwood had this to say, referring to the distinguished Senator from Tennessee:

I have not been able to find out yet what the Senator from Tennessee is for. He is not for the proposal of the Senator from Nebraska—

That is the Norris bill, and I call the attention of the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] to this statement. I am glad he is in the Senate—of the Senator from Nebraska for a superpower system. * * *

He was not in favor of it then.

The Senator now says he is not for the Alabama Power Co. offer, and I do not know what the Senator from Tennessee is for.

That was the distinguished Oscar Underwood speaking at that time.

But I have not finished. We have heard many references to a distinguished gentleman who had not only the common sense but the patriotic sense to leave a gang of looters who looted this country—and we will go into that before we are through in reply—and to come over to the Republican Party instead of being nominated by a packed convention, with the superintendent of the sewers of Chicago packing a convention with contrivances from below so that he could hoot out "We're for Roosevelt!" It is the undisputed fact that the man who is in charge of the sewers of Chicago did that to the Democratic convention, and oh, you can smell it clear over to Washington. [Laughter.]

All the talk heard today by the gentlemen of the opposition cannot divert the attention of the American people from the Chicago scandal.

Now, I shall go ahead with what further was said.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I shall be very happy to yield to the Senator afterward; but I want to continue on this line of thought, which is so illuminating, and which will be a counterirritant to what has been said.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was merely wondering whether it is Wisconsin cheese which the Senator is smelling, instead of the sewers.

Mr. WILEY. I am happy to have that gratuitous remark. If it had been Wisconsin cheese that the Democrats had, they would at least have had something on their stomachs that would have taught them where they should go. As it was, they did not have the intestinal fortitude—and I say that advisedly—to say, "No." They listened to the crack of the whip. The whip cracked, and you fell into line, and the whole country knows it. It was the first time there has been such an exhibition since this Government was established. If you doubt what I am saying, go into your cloakrooms and talk among yourselves, because I have heard you talk. You put your tails between your legs, and you discussed this thing in shame. You know what happened; but I do not want to get away from the record of the distinguished Senator from Tennessee.

On January 12, 1925, page 1671 of the RECORD, volume 66, part 2, Sixty-eighth Congress, we find what Senator Heflin, of Alabama, said while speaking of the Senator from Tennessee, and it all relates to this glorious power issue which has been injected into the political question here today. This is what Senator Heflin said, speaking of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]:

The Senator is supporting a bill the author of which himself declares that in his judgment they will never make an ounce of fertilizer under any bill at Muscle Shoals. * * * It reminds me of the old fellow out in Texas who wrote back to a friend in Tennessee. He said: "Dear Bill: If you have not started for Texas, don't. This is the most hellacious climate in the world."

I beg the pardon of the Senator from Texas. [Laughter.]

"On yesterday, while driving a yoke of steers across the prairie, one of them had a sunstroke, and while I was skinning him the other one froze to death." That was a quick change in the weather, Mr. President, but not much quicker than the changes of my friend from Tennessee.

[Laughter.]

Oh, how the past comes up to strike us in the face. Shades of yesterday. [Laughter.] Let me continue. On May 27, 1925, page 9723 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 69, part 9, Seventieth Congress, we find that the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] had this to say. I quote:

Mr. President, I expect to leave no stone unturned to defeat this bill as long as Cove Creek is in it.

He was speaking of the Norris bill. I again ask for the attention of the distinguished senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. I continue the quotation, where he was speaking of the Norris bill:

Mr. President, I expect to leave no stone unturned to defeat this bill as long as Cove Creek is in it.

Speaking of the Norris bill.

Let there be no misunderstanding about that. It is a matter of such vast importance that I propose to leave no stone unturned to defeat the bill. If it is a matter of physical endurance, it is going to be a matter of physical endurance. I am going to use every ounce of energy of which I am possessed to defeat the bill unless Cove Creek is taken out of it.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. WILEY. On March 1, 1926, page 4767, volume 67, part 5, Sixty-ninth Congress, this occurred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. WILEY. Not at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. WILEY. I shall be glad to engage in a very spirited debate after I get the record complete. I read:

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?
Mr. MCKELLAR. Certainly.
Mr. CARAWAY. Then why was the Senator for Henry Ford's bill?
Mr. MCKELLAR. That was a proposed law which would defeat this law, and for reasons that were then perfectly good I was for it.

So now, Mr. President, reviewing the record we find that the senior Senator from Tennessee was apparently for the Alabama Power Co. He knew, as I have previously indicated, that the Alabama Power Co. was renting dam No. 2 at what he regarded as a very nominal sum, and apparently he viewed that lease with either indifference or approval. He stated emphatically that he was opposed to governmental operation, that he believed that Government operation could not be as successful as private operation. We find that Senator Underwood said that the Senator from Tennessee was not for the proposal of the Senator from Nebraska, and Senator Underwood says that he (Senator MCKELLAR) is not now for the Alabama Power Co., and that he—Underwood—did not know what the Senator from Tennessee is for. The record also shows that the Senator from Tennessee became enamored with the so-called Henry Ford bill because it would defeat the proposed law.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee rises to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I do not think the Senator should be allowed to make statements which are untrue assertions in regard to the RECORD. I wish to say that never in my career have I been for the Alabama Power Co., under any circumstances, and there is no record to show it, and when the Senator continues to harp on it, I demand that his words be taken down and that the record be brought forward.

Mr. WILEY. My words are taken down. I did not think I would have the honor of being the only Senator to speak in the United States Senate whose words would not be taken down. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is unfamiliar with the rule. If he does not know the rules of the Senate, he should make himself acquainted with them.

Mr. WILEY. We find that the Senator turned against the Norris bill and favored the Ford bill which proposed to give Henry Ford a fee title to $140,000,000 of Government investments at Muscle Shoals and a 99-year lease on the Muscle Shoals Dam, together with such other dams as the Government was to build farther up the river. After the Ford bid was withdrawn, the Senator supported the Norris bill again, until a Republican Representative from Tennessee introduced a resolution to appropriate $2,000,000 to build the Cove Creek Dam—Norris Dam.

Of course, all of us know where the Senator stands on the T. V. A. today.

Mr. President, I had no idea of interjecting the distinguished Senator's positions on T. V. A. into the RECORD, but the notations on his inconsistencies were handed to me. I rose to reply to the assault on Wendell Willkie. Almost with disgust I sat back in my seat and heard the tirade made in the Senate. I take off my hat to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] who rises and says, in mild voice, but with a rebuke which will sting down through the years, "I do not believe the Senate of the United States is a place where we should make a political speech." I echo that sentiment. I think such things have no place here now, when the world is afire. But when supposed leaders rise in the Senate and have a holiday, so to speak, a field day, striking at one who is not present, I ask in all sincerity, is that gentlemanlike, is that statesmanlike, is it fair, is it decent? These gentlemen have a chance to report their conclusions through the press but they use the Senate for such an exhibition. The T. V. A. has received $700,000,000 to $800,000,000 of the peoples' money. Mr. Willkie took a bankrupt concern; he was, like many of the Senators here, a country lawyer from a country town; he was chosen because of his ability and his integrity to take over that concern. He took it over and he put value where value was not. He did that, not by dishonesty, not by chiseling or grafting, but by doubling the sales and reducing the cost to the consumer by 50 percent. Thereby he demonstrated to the Nation his first qualification for becoming the next President of the United States.

If there is anything this country needs, it needs a man of integrity and honesty of purpose, with level-headedness and common sense, who can take a busted concern, a concern that is running into the red, reduce the cost to the consumer, make labor and capital and management and the public satisfied, as he did. That is what this Government needs.

After 7½ years of extravagant public works, debasement of the currency, concentration of power in the Executive, an attempt to undermine the judiciary, excessive subsidies, government by decree, encouragement of subversive forces, imposition of confiscatory taxes, restriction of private investment, unbalanced Budget, imposed planned economy, fostered class conflicts, destroyed morale of industry, excessive borrowing, enlarged bureaucracy, excessive national debt, hopeless deficits, conscript army.

With those conditions, I ask in all simplicity, what is it that America needs? It needs a man who can do things, a man who can build, a man who can create values, and satisfy labor, capital, and consumer.

From what was said here today, it appears that, what Willkie said some time ago is correct, "some folks have the jitters." And how!

A statement was made to the effect that the Republicans and Mr. Willkie were in disagreement. I hope there will be more disagreement. We have had too many "yes" men in the last 7½ years with the result that there is in this country what we have now, an unbalanced economy, an army of unemployed, millions of men with broken morale, farmers wondering what tomorrow is going to bring them. We have a Nation unprepared. As the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] said last night, 7½ years ago Mr. Roosevelt and Hitler came onto the stage of action at the same time. At that time this country, with its relatively small Navy and Army, was in comparison with these dictator governments, prepared, because preparedness is relative. In other words, if you have one gun and I have one gun, we are prepared. But in the last 7½ years the totalitarian governments came into being, and during that time this Nation slept, under the present leadership, and in the last 18 months or 16 months or 14 months from the top down, as manifested here today, the jitters have caused creeping paralysis among some of our friends on the other side of this Chamber. They are afraid that America will wake up to the fact that the job which should have been done in the United States under this leadership was not done, with the result that now the administration is calling businessmen into the Cabinet, two Secretaries, and they are calling on Stettinius and Knudsen, businessmen, to do what the administration could not do.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I prefer to continue my remarks, but I shall be happy to have the Senator interrogate me when I conclude.

Mr. STEWART. I wish to ask the Senator a question. I want to know whether he supported Willkie prior to the Philadelphia convention.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I think I got the gist of that question. The Senator asked if I supported Mr. Willkie before he was nominated. I am not ashamed to face that problem. I was a Senator of the United States and did not interfere with the run-off in our State. A primary was conducted in our State, and in that primary Mr. Willkie was not on the ticket.

I wish to go to another phase of the remarks made by the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]. He spoke of the Republican convention. All the smoke screen caused by the tepid hot air now thrown upon the atmosphere here will not prevent the people of this country from knowing the truth. The ballot showed Mr. Dewey leading, Mr. Taft coming up, Mr. Taft leading, Mr. Willkie coming up, and as every newspaper in the country and every columnist in the country said, here was democracy in action. Here was America as it should be. Here were delegates, most of them pledged to other candidates, but when they saw this man, and shook his hand, and saw the clearness of his eyes, and the conviction in his soul, he swung the convention, and no one disputed it. Democratic columnist after Democratic columnist so stated. Newspapers said it.

Then the Democrats went to Chicago, and all one has to do is to read the article written by the distinguished columnist who had sat at the feet of the President of the United States for 7 years, Raymond Clapper, and we can see how his stomach turned after he witnessed what took place there. [Laughter.] That was not all, Mr. President.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I decline to yield at this time. I wish to say that that was not all. The country then saw for the first time who it was that 3 years ago and 4 years ago became the exponent of the third term. Senators know that Mr. Roosevelt keeps his promise. He is the great man who keeps his promises to those who serve him. When we look at the Democratic platform of 1932 and compare it with the performance, we see there is not one promise kept. But he kept this one, because he "ordered," that the Secretary of Agriculture be placed on the ticket. I use that word "ordered" because it was given to me by gentlemen of the opposition. The convention was ordered to do that, and once again the convention got a case of nausea. However, they obeyed that order because they had been trained that way, trained to say, "Yes, yes, yes, yes," and all the time down in the bowels of the earth, underneath the convention hall, there was the superintendent of the sewers of Chicago, manipulating his loud-speaker outfit so that it would be Roosevelt and Wallace; Roosevelt and Wallace. And the loud speakers kept it up, "Roosevelt and Wallace."

Well, Senators, you asked for it. You might as well have the facts. That is what took place.

Now Senators say that Mr. Willkie had endorsed all of Mr. Roosevelt's policies. Again there must be a serious mistake. Mr. Willkie has eliminated to a large extent this question that might have been precipitated into the campaign, and Senators should honor him for it. He has eliminated the question of whether there shall be unity in America on one of the great fundamental propositions. Senators should not get up and attempt to paint him or plaster him for that.

But he does not agree with the way the Executive handled the foreign policy of this country, and while he says you have used certain palliatives, you have made the disease chronic. Any doctor who took a patient who had suddenly become sick because of something that had occurred, and after 7½ years had not cured the patient, would be fired very quickly by any one of us. We would not wait that long before firing him. I think the American people are waking up to that situation, unless the doctor has a strangle hold on the patient, unless he has used the Treasury of the United States and is feeding so many persons with the people's money that they have developed a dependency, or unless—pray God it will not be true—that the morale of this people has become weakened, because they have gotten away from initiative and independence and creative judgment, to where they have become dependent on government; unless government pap is of such a character that it can hold sway over the electorate; unless the influence, in spite of the Hatch Act, of some of your Government agencies still controls the electorate.

We have had our experience with the W. P. A., and we know how the poor folks are whipped into line. I heard the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] make a statement as to West Virginia voters. I will make a statement about West Virginia. Sunday I took the ferry over from Annapolis and into Maryland, and on that day there were three distinguished citizens from West Virginia on the ferry, all of whom said they had voted for Roosevelt, but they would not vote for Roosevelt again. I asked, "Why." They said, "Because of the third term."

Oh, consistency, thou art indeed a jewel.

Listen to this, and I call the attention of the Senator from Tennessee. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] introduced a resolution in 1928, which is to be found on page 2842 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 10, 1928. Here is the resolution:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the precedent established by Washington and other Presidents of the United States in retiring from the Presidential office after their second term has become, by universal concurrence, a part of our Government, and that a departure from this custom would be unwise and unpatriotic and fraught with peril to our great institutions.

There I find among other names the name of the distinguished senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], who voted "yea" on that resolution, and the names of many other Senators.

Mr. President, I wish now to comment on that, because it throws a little light on the situation involved in this debate. Did Senators vote in favor of that resolution because of political expediency, or did they have convictions at that time? And now, when they are endorsing their leader for a third term, is it a question of expediency or conviction?

At that time they saw—and listen to this language—that to support a man for a third term in the White House—would be unwise and unpatriotic and fraught with peril to our great institutions.

Mr. President, I endorse that resolution. I think the Senate of the United States, when it adopted the resolution, with the aid of the Senator from Tennessee, spoke the heart of America, and I think today if the heart of America could speak, without being swayed by illogical statements and arguments that are not related to the issue, America would once more endorse the conclusion of the statement then endorsed by the Senator from Tennessee and other distinguished Senators.

Is it not strange, Mr. President, after $800,000,000 was gotten in the Tennessee Valley—is it not strange after this country has gone into debt $20,000,000,000 more than it was in debt when the President took office—is it not strange that a bureaucracy topping the highest point in numbers in our history, running over a million employees—in view of all that is it strange that men cannot be consistent, cannot be held to their convictions?

Mr. President, just a word more in relation to the Republican candidate. I said this country needs a man who can do things, a man who can balance budgets, a man who can build; but I wish to say more than that, it needs a man with conviction, conviction on several important matters. First, he must have an understanding of finance and the value of the dollar, as well as an understanding of the position of a trustee. How does one get such an understanding? By handling other people's business, by going through the school of hard knocks, by graduating from the university of experience, not simply by taking the easy road paved by someone else.

What this country needs more than anything else is a man of common sense, a man of practicality, a man who can do things economically, a man who can build. As the president of utility companies it was Mr. Willkie's duty as a trustee to test out the debatable question as to whether or not the T. V. A. was constitutional. He accepted the Court's decision.

Much has been said about Mr. Willkie spending $22,000. I wish the people of the country to know that the people's Treasury has spent between $700,000,000 and $800,000,000 for one little valley down in the Tennessee region. It is the people's money which was spent down there. While I have not the exact proportion, in order to adjust rates so that electricity could be sold more cheaply than a private concern could sell it, the Government took about 40 percent of the cost of $700,000,000 or $800,000,000 and said, "We will charge that to flood control, navigation, and so forth."

If any utility in the world had a $1,000,000 investment, or a $1,000,000,000 investment, and someone should come along and say, "We will give you 40 percent of that," the company could sell electricity much more cheaply. It could afford to reduce by 40 percent the return which it must have. Did I hear the distinguished Senator from Tennessee say anything about that? No; but I should like to have the people of the country know that they have put about $700,000,000 or $800,000,000 into the Tennessee Valley, and that about 40 percent, or $320,000,000, has been deducted and charged to flood control and navigation in the Tennessee Valley. The people will never get a return on that investment; but the Government is saying, "When we fix the rates we will charge only the rate we ought to have on 60 percent of the investment." So it is easy to camouflage a fact, or state a half truth. I should like to have the country know just what the situation is in that connection.

We are in the midst of a campaign; and I hope that after today it will be fought outside the Senate. However, I give notice that every time any Senator rises and by slur or innuendo, or the use of the paint brush, attempts to impugn the character of a man who is not present—I do not care whether he be a Senator or anyone else—I shall rise to his defense.

Mr. MINTON. Does that include Mr. Roosevelt?

Mr. WILEY. Does the Senator wish me to speak on that subject?

Mr. MINTON. Yes.

Mr. WILEY. I will say, using the words of Bob Ingersoll, that Mr. Roosevelt has so many able defenders in this audience that he does not need my defense. Many times in the past, when he had no defender, I have defended some of his positions.

Mr. McKELLAR and Mr. STEWART rose.

Mr. WILEY. I shall be glad to be asked any questions by the distinguished senior Senator from Tennessee or the junior Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator give us his authority? He said someone gave him a list of excerpts from the RECORD, which he was supposed to read, but which he did not read.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I read the list into the RECORD. I gave the volume, the page, and the date. I have never yet seen a Scotchman who, with that information, could not get to the bottom of things. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. I am not a Scotchman. I am an American of Scotch ancestry, and I propose to get to the bottom of the matter. I shall show that the Senator, in making his assault upon me this afternoon, is wholly without the RECORD. He has not made a statement which was true, and I think he ought to withdraw what he has said. If he is an honorable man, he will do it. If he is not an honorable man, he will not do it.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President——

Mr. STEWART. With that statement, I think that anybody, whether a Scotchman or otherwise, can thoroughly understand and get to the bottom of things, as the Senator has suggested.

Mr. WILEY. I did not catch the remarks of the junior Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. STEWART. I shall be glad to repeat them if the Senator will yield.

Mr. WILEY. Just a moment. Let me answer the senior Senator from Tennessee. One at a time is the rule in the Senate. I exact that right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The junior Senator from Tennessee will suspend until he is properly recognized. The Senator from Wisconsin has the floor and declines to yield to the junior Senator from Tennessee. Any remarks by the junior Senator from Tennessee are out of order. The Senator from Wisconsin has the floor. Does he yield to the senior Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. WILEY. I will yield as soon as I shall have had an opportunity to reply to his statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin declines to yield at this moment.

Mr. WILEY. So far as the senior Senator from Tennessee is concerned, if I have said anything which does not square with the RECORD, I shall be very happy to retract what has been said. I will say to the Senator that I admire him. I think he is a fine gentleman. He is a wonderful advocate. He has obtained more out of the Treasury of the United States for his State than any half dozen other Senators. I will say further——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. WILEY. I shall be glad to yield after I shall have answered.

I wish to say further that in discussing this matter I did not indulge in any personalities. I quoted from the RECORD. I gave the page, the volume, and the date. If there is any misstatement, we shall have it checked, and if the RECORD does not square with my statement I shall be the first one to clear up any misrepresentation.

Mr. President, we must remember that Mr. Willkie was not present today. We must remember also that an attack was made on him on the basis of what he said to the people in relation to the Bonneville Dam. Mr. Willkie said that with relation to such large plants he was in favor of cheap power at Federal dams. When the insinuation was made that Mr. Willkie's word could not be taken, I say that was not a very clean way of approach. I say further than when the statements which I put in the RECORD give the Senator's words, and give the exact words of his colleague in the Senate at that time as to what his position was, I cannot see that that is a question of personal privilege, or an attack on the Senator by me. "Consistency, thou are a jewel." Consistency does not obtain in any of us.

I shall be very happy to yield to the senior Senator from Tennessee, or to the junior Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator yield the floor?

Mr. WILEY. I yield for a question or a comment.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will wait.

Mr. WILEY. I shall be glad to yield to the junior Senator from Tennessee, or to the majority leader, or to any other Senator, who wishes to comment or ask a question on anything I have said.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator answer my question? I asked it before, and the Senator did not answer it. From whom did he obtain the record of excerpts? Who gave it to him? The Senator said that someone gave him a list of excerpts from the RECORD. Will the Senator give us the name of his informant?

Mr. WILEY. No; I will not say who told me. I will simply say that the RECORD is available. Let us make it clear that the RECORD to which I refer is the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which anyone may examine and read.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator did not read it, except in one instance, and that was not anything I had said, but something which Senator Heflin had said concerning the Norris bill. No one was more against the Norris bill than was Senator Heflin at that time.

The Senator is a new Member. He may be excused for making the kind of argument he has just made. He did not defend his champion, Mr. Willkie. He simply abused the other side. Everybody knows the old story about the lawyer who, when he had no case, jumped on the lawyer on the other side. The Senator did not defend Mr. Willkie. He simply undertook to refer to statements from the RECORD——

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be glad to yield in a moment. The Senator referred to statements from the RECORD which evidently he had not examined. Evidently he does not know anything about the matter. Evidently he had never looked into the questions which came up at that time. He was not a Member of the Senate at that time. He could not have remembered what happened. He had never read the RECORD. He said he obtained a list of excerpts from a memorandum which had been handed to him; and when I asked him when it was handed to him, and by whom, he would not give his authority. I do not think that is a fair method of discussion of the subject.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. I merely wish to ask the Senator a question. Does the Senator think he treated Wendell Willkie with toilet water?

Mr. McKELLAR. I did not make Mr. Willkie's record. I quoted what Mr. Willkie said. I did not first make Mr. Willkie a Democrat, and afterward get him into the Republican Party. I did not have anything to do with that. That is a sin which cannot be visited upon me. I did not know to what party he belonged; and I did not care.

I see the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] is moving away from me. [Laughter.] I shall not run him out of the Chamber, as Willkie ran him out of the convention at Philadelphia. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. The distinguished Senator said he quoted Mr. Willkie. I referred to quotation after quotation from what the Senator said——

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no.

Mr. WILEY. I referred to what Senator Underwood and other distinguished Senators said.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator quoted what Senator Underwood said.

Mr. WILEY. I quoted from what Senator Underwood and other distinguished Senators said about the matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator quoted what Senator Underwood and others said about me, but he did not quote what I said. He merely stated what somebody had told him I had said. As a matter of fact, those of us who were Members of the Senate at that time recall what took place. I see the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] in the Chamber. He will recall that there was a filibuster against his bill. He will also recall that the reason for the filibuster was that I thought Tennessee had not been treated fairly in the bill. The next year, after that bill was defeated, the Senator from Nebraska realized that the position which I took in that debate was correct, because he inserted in the bill a provision for compensation to the State of Tennessee for the use of the waters of the Tennessee River.

It is in the law now; the very provision that I fought and filibustered for in this body at that time is in the law at this very moment, except that it has been modified in a way for the benefit of the people of my State. I admire the Senator from Nebraska extravagantly for his broad vision in being willing to accept an amendment which he evidently considered to be fair. I repeat, it is in the law now, and if the Senator wants to read it he can do so. I fought for what I thought to be right at that time.

I never in my life was in favor of Mr. Underwood's proposal for the Alabama Power Co. to receive the benefits of the Muscle Shoals Dam. I was for a short time for the Ford offer until Mr. Ford withdrew it; and after that time I joined the Senator from Nebraska in fighting for the improvement of the Tennessee River by the Government building all the dams from Muscle Shoals on down; indeed, if the record will be examined, it will be found that when I was a Member of the other House in 1916, 24 years ago, I offered the first amendment that was ever offered for the improvement of the Tennessee River at Muscle Shoals. It was afterward taken up by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] in this body. The Senator from South Carolina is still here. It is the law and was introduced by the Senator from South Carolina and not by me. My measure was defeated in the other House by Mr. John McKenzie and Mr. Nicholas Longworth, distinguished Republican Members of the House at that time; but in the Senate substantially the same provision was offered by the Senator from South Carolina and is the law today. It provided for the first improvement of that river. I have been for the Government control and the Government improvement of that river ever since the year 1916.

Of course, the Senator from Wisconsin is entirely mistaken. When I see the RECORD in the morning I will examine the references which he cites, but which he probably never examined, and I think I will show conclusively not only to him but to every other Member of the Senate that he is wholly mistaken in the attitude he would ascribe to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the first amendment reported by the committee.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 3, after line 2, it is proposed to strike out:

(b) Notwithstanding any of the provisions of subsection (a), no person shall be covered into the civil service, appointed, transferred, or promoted to, any position covered into the classified civil service under the provisions of section 1 of this act, if such person is from a State whose quota of positions in the classified civil service is more than filled unless and until the quota of all States whose quota of positions in the classified civil service is unfilled has become filled. As used in this section the term "State" includes a Territory and the District of Columbia.

And to insert:

(b) That from and after the effective date of this act any person who shall have served for 4 years as a clerk or assistant clerk to a Senator, Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner, or as a clerk or assistant clerk to a standing committee of the Senate or House of Representatives or as a clerical or administrative employee under an officer of the Senate or House of Representatives and who terminates his services without prejudice, shall acquire, upon such tests of fitness as the Civil Service Commission may prescribe, a classified civil-service status for transfer to a position in the clasified civil service, notwithstanding any contrary provisions of the civil service laws or regulations: Provided, That any individual who may hold such a position in the legislative branch must obtain such transfer within 2 years from the date of separation of service, and nothing in this act shall be construed to impair any right of transfer provided for under the civil-service laws or regulations made thereunder.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I do not think the Senate should adopt the committee amendment that has just been read; that is, the amendment to strike out lines 3 to 12, inclusive, on page 3, embracing subsection 2 (b). The question involved in that subsection was thoroughly discussed by the lower House and that body saw fit to retain the provision in the bill. The subsection deals with the question of apportionment.

I discussed the subject yesterday to some extent and attempted to point out that the original act which was passed in 1883 contained a specific provision to the effect that all employees coming within the purview of the act and who were employed in the city of Washington should be apportioned among the States in proportion to population.

That part of the act was abused to a great extent in the past, and, as I attempted to point out yesterday, steps have been taken by the Civil Service Commission in recent years to remedy that condition. The Commission has made good progress along that line, and now, if we strike out the subsection of the bill contained on page 3, from lines 3 to 12, it will mean a return, to a certain extent, to the conditions which prevailed prior to 1933.

The subsection of the House bill which deals with apportionment, and which the pending committee amendment seeks to eliminate, is very simple, and is in conformity with the law as now written. Let me read it to the Senate.

(b) Notwithstanding any of the provisions of subsection (a), no person shall be covered into the civil service, appointed, transferred, or promoted to, any position covered into the classified civil service under the provisions of section 1 of this act, if such person is from a State whose quota of positions in the classified civil service is more than filled unless and until the quota of all States whose quota of positions in the classified civil service is unfilled has become filled. As used in this section the term "State" includes a Territory and the District of Columbia.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The amendment on page 3 proposes to strike out the provision of the House bill and insert an amendment upon an entirely different subject. Since I have been a Member of this body I do not recall seeing this sort of a situation being presented. My inquiry is whether or not it is possible to have a division of the question in such a way that those who might be in favor of the House provision and still be in favor of the Senate committee amendment could vote for both of them. As it now stands, a Senator might be in favor of what is inserted by the Senate committee and also be in favor of the provision adopted by the House but would have no opportunity of voting on the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that the proposal to strike out and the proposal to insert cover two altogether separate matters. It is not an amendment to strike out and substitute something else in its stead but to strike out one provision and insert another provision on a different subject, and the two provisions are in fact separate and distinct amendments. The question before the Senate therefore is the motion to strike out lines 3 to 12 on page 3.

Mr. ELLENDER. That is my understanding of the parliamentary situation. There is no relationship between the amendment I am discussing and the amendment to insert new matter. It was a mistake, most probably, on the part of the desk to treat the two proposals as one amendment. The amendments must be considered separately.

Mr. President, to again refer to the question of apportionment, why that proposition has been a part and parcel of the civil-service law since its enactment. It is still in the existing law, but now we are being asked to sanction a violation of that statute.

In the pamphlet to which I referred yesterday, entitled "General Information Regarding the United States Civil Service," being Form 2346, on the question of apportionment, the Civil Service has this to say:

The Civil Service law requires that, as nearly as the conditions of good administration will warrant, appointments to positions in the departments at Washington shall be apportioned among the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia upon the basis of population as ascertained in the last preceding census.

In order that appointments to positions in the departments at Washington may be so apportioned, appointments are charged to the several States and Territories according to the residence of the appointees; and whenever a person becomes separated from the service, the State to which his appointment stands charged is credited. Eligibles granted veterans' preference are not subject to the apportionment, but they cannot be certified for appointment to apportioned positions until they have furnished the evidence of residence required by statute.

This is a declaration from the Civil Service Commission as to its stand on apportionment. If we should pass this bill without the subsection which was inserted by the House, we would be legislating contrary to the provisions of the apportionment law, and we would be aggravating, as it were, the discrepancies which now exist among the apportionment quotas of the various States of the Union.

Let me point out the apportionment situation to the Senate; and I ask the attention of Senators with reference to the figures for their respective States. I read from page 4 of the report submitted to the Senate by the Senate Committee on Civil Service:

The Virgin Islands are entitled to nine positions under the apportionment. None has been allotted.

Puerto Rico is entitled to 650 positions under the apportionment. It has been allotted 46 positions.

California is entitled to 2,392 positions under the apportionment. It has 857 positions.

Texas is entitled to 2,454 positions under the apportionment. It has received 997 positions.

Michigan is entitled to 2,040 positions under the apportionment. It has 991 positions.

Louisiana is entitled to 885 positions under the apportionment. It has been allotted 422 positions.

Arizona is entitled to 183 positions, and has been allotted 101. South Carolina should have 732 positions, and has received only 409. New Jersey is apportioned 1,702 positions, and has been given 999. Ohio is entitled to 2,800 positions, and has gotten only 1,700. Mississippi should have 847 positions, and has only 518. Alabama is entitled to 1,115 positions, and has been given only 691. Arkansas has a quota of 781 positions, but only 493 appointments. Oklahoma has a quota of 1,009 positions, and only 648 appointments. Georgia is entitled to 1,225 positions, and has received 796.

And so on down the line, Mr. President—the list furnished by the Civil Service Commission shows that as of February 29, 1940, 33 States and the 4 Territories of Virgin Islands, Puerto Rico, Hawaii, and Alaska were in arrears on their apportionment quotas of departmental jobs, while 15 States and the District of Columbia were ahead of their quotas.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What would be the mechanics of working this thing out? I cannot quite see through it. Would the examinations hereafter be confined to the States which are below quota? How would the Senator be sure to have persons appointed in accordance with the quotas?

Mr. ELLENDER. No, Mr. President; there are eligible lists for each State. The United States has been divided into 12 civil-service districts. For instance, my State is in the tenth district. Examinations are held from time to time for stenographers, typists, and other types of employment, the applicants take the examinations, and those who pass are placed on civil-service registers, the grades they make determining their relative positions on the registers. Whenever a position is open it is the duty of the Commission to select the appointee from one of those registers, but it must also try to apportion the jobs among the States according to population; that is, with respect to jobs that are located in the city of Washington.

The Civil Service Commission in the past, however, has not abided by the apportionment provision of the law. As a result, most of the positions have been given to applicants who live in the city of Washington and the nearby States. As I pointed out on yesterday, the State of Virginia has over twice the number of jobs it ought to have. The District of Columbia is entitled to 205 jobs, and it has 8,873 jobs.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I completely sympathize with the Senator's objective, but I do not see how the mechanics would work. Let us say there is a vacancy in a clerkship, and there is an eligibility roster for that clerkship with 300 eligibles on it, and half of those eligibles are from States which are under quota. How is it decided which eligible from which State is entitled to the job?

Mr. ELLENDER. I am assuming that if the Civil Service Commission were desirous of carrying out the law as it is written, the position would first be offered to applicants from States that have the least numbers of jobs. It is practicable to accomplish that object. I know that in my own State we have a list of eligibles almost as long as my arm, and yet when the time comes for jobs to be filled they are usually filled by persons from other States. How that is done, I do not know, but I have suspicions. It may be that persons with a little more influence are able to get the jobs, I do not know, and I do not want to accuse anybody; but I know that the law is not followed with respect to apportionment. I know that thousands of persons who would be covered by this bill if it were enacted as presently drafted are from nearby States which have large quotas, in fact quotas far in excess of their prorata share, and by the enactment of this bill we would further aggravate that situation.

As I said, the House saw fit to incorporate in the pending bill the provision calling for apportionment—in other words, restating the desire of the Congress that departmental jobs be allocated to the various States on a population basis, and asking the Commission to apportion these new jobs to the various States so as to overcome the shortages in State quotas to which I have just referred.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does the law also provide that the eligibles on the roster shall be taken in order of their seniority?

Mr. ELLENDER. The law provides that a list of three applicants, the three highest in grade, shall be submitted to the departmental head, and the departmental head makes the selection from one of the three highest.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Theoretically, are not those three the senior three on the eligibility list?

Mr. ELLENDER. That is correct.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is what I was trying to find out.

Mr. ELLENDER. But the appointing power, the departmental head, is not obliged to select number 1.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I understand.

Mr. ELLENDER. He may select number 3 if he desires. The choice is left to him.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What I am getting at is, then the requirement for seniority might collide with the requirement for apportionment?

Mr. ELLENDER. That may be true and it may occur.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In that event, which would take priority?

Mr. ELLENDER. Under the present set-up there may be a conflict, as I have just indicated, but the Commission could make its eligible lists so that each State would have a list from which positions could be filled for department jobs in the District of Columbia. If such a list were in existence, there would be no difficulty in carrying out the intent and purpose of the law. Each State has an eligible list of persons who have taken the examination for field work, for stenographic work, for accounting—in fact, for work in all the various departments of Government. The Civil Service Commission has a list of all of those persons; and it would be a very easy matter for it to select persons from these States for the vacancies if only they tried to do so. It would be an easy matter to fill the various quotas, I am sure, provided the jobs are there, and this pending bill provides those jobs. I am simply asking that this amendment as to apportionment, which was considered and agreed to by the lower House, be agreed to by the Senate, so that the discrepancies to which I have just referred will not be further provoked.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I have no previous predilections concerning this matter. What little I know about it was learned from the hearings before the committee.

The testimony before the committee persuaded me in the committee that I should vote for the elimination of the House provision. Further consideration of the matter has confirmed me in the judgment that the Senate committee acted wisely in striking the House provision from the bill. I think the committee of the Senate should be sustained at this time by this body.

Mr. President, I take it we may all safely assume that the Civil Service Commission is not interested in Michigan or Louisiana or Maine or any other particular section of the country, but is concerned in efficient administration of the affairs of the Government of the United States.

Let me say, in the first instance, that there is some misapprehension as to the law. The provision for the distribution of civil service places among the States in proportion to population is not a mandatory provision of law at all; it is merely a preference statute. The Civil Service Commission in making a report in writing to the committee said, and I read from a written communication sent to the chairman of our committee from the president of the Civil Service Commission:

> It may be pointed out at the outset that under existing law the apportionment clause of the Civil Service Act is not mandatory but operates merely as a preference statute. The Civil Service Act of 1883 confers upon the President authority to promulgate civil service rules and provides:
> "Among other things, said rules shall provide and declare as nearly as the conditions of good administration will warrant as follows:
> "* * * Appointment to the public service aforesaid in the departments at Washington shall be apportioned among the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia upon the basis of population as ascertained at the last preceding census * * *."

Then the Commission proceeds:

> Pursuant to this mandate of the statute, section 3 of civil service rule VII was promulgated by the President, reading as follows:
> "Apportionment.—Certification for appointment in the departments or independent offices at Washington shall be so made as to maintain, as nearly as the conditions of good administration warrant, the apportionment of appointments among the several States and Territories.

I emphasize the following words:

> As nearly as the conditions of good administration warrant, the apportionment of appointments among the several States and Territories.

Mr. President, I have read that much to bring to the attention of the Senate that the provision suggesting apportionment among the States is not a mandatory provision of law, but is a rule to be followed so far as good administration and efficient administration make it practicable.

The commission itself through its president in the report states very definitely that—

> In the absence of any national emergency which would again require the appointment of persons without regard to residence, no reason is seen why further progress along this line should not be made under the existing provisions of the apportionment law. The Commission believes that the amendment contained in section 2 (b) of H. R. 960 is not administratively feasible and earnestly recommends that consideration be given to its deletion from the bill.

Just before that language in the Commission's report, the Commission gave some illustrations of the progress which has been made during recent years in bringing out equality of representation in the service in Washington according to population. It tells us that a great dislocation came about during the time of the World War when there was a tremendous expansion, hurriedly made, in the governmental service in the District of Columbia.

In 1933, for illustration—and there are figures for all of the States, but three States are mentioned as illustrative—the State of Virginia had 344 percent of its quota. That has been dropping until in January 1940 it had 207 percent. Very definite progress has been made toward bringing Virginia in line with the quota contemplated.

Maryland, another nearby State, in 1933 had 475 percent of its quota. In January of this year Maryland had 313 percent of its quota.

In 1933 the District of Columbia had 8,165 percent of its quota. In January of this year it had only 4,400 percent of its quota.

These figures do not indicate the accomplishment of what should be brought about, but they indicate a very definite forward movement toward bringing back the several States of the Union to the desired equality of representation in the governmental service.

When the President of the Civil Service Commission appeared before the committee to testify orally he recognized that, while these discrepancies existed, he asserted that the Commission was, so far as practicable, and so far as it could be accomplished with proper regard for sound administration, constantly seeking to bring about the desired equality among the States based upon population.

Coming to the amendment which appeared in the House bill and which the Senate committee has stricken from the bill, the President of the Commission made this statement:

> Mr. MITCHELL. Now, under the Keller-Nichols amendment it would require the Civil Service Commission to include within the classified civil service only persons from States in arrears. That means, from our viewpoint, a practically impossible situation.

He took a particular State to illustrate what was in his mind:

> For instance, at the present time, in the State of West Virginia, there are 13 places in arrears, or 13 positions that could be appointed from the State of West Virginia, but there may be 40 persons from the State of West Virginia in some particular agency, or all the agencies together, and the Commissioners have no way of deciding which 13 of those 40 should be classified. The same applies through practically all the States.

Then he proceeded:

> Under the present apportionment the States in arrears are assigned altogether 12,675 places. We estimate that under this bill somewhere between 125,000 and 150,000 positions would eventually be brought under the civil-service law. Now, we would have to fill all those 12,000 positions, including 604 from Puerto Rico and 9 from the Virgin Islands, before we could classify persons from the States that are in excess. Practically speaking, it is just an impossibility, from the administration standpoint, as we see it.

Mr. President, that written testimony of the president of the commission, and the oral testimony of the president of the commission, and other testimony to like effect, persuaded me, as I believe it persuaded other members of the Committee on Civil Service of the Senate, that what was proposed by the Kellogg-Nichols amendment was an impossible thing, not making contribution to good administration, but confusing and confounding the administration of the departments in Washington.

Mr. President, I think the committee amendment should have the approval of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee to strike out lines 3 to 12, inclusive, on page 3. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it. The noes have it, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I did not quite understand what happened to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MEAD. There seems to be some confusion. Was the committee amendment agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was rejected.

Mr. MEAD. I ask for a division.

Mr. ELLENDER. It is too late. The Chair has announced the vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would be too late, unless the action taken by the Senate were reconsidered.

Mr. MEAD. I move that the vote by which the amendment was rejected be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New York.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 3, to strike out lines 3 to 12, inclusive.

Mr. WHITE. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHITE. I understood the parliamentary situation to be that on the vote just taken the committee amendment was agreed to. Am I right?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendment was rejected, and then a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected prevailed. Now the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. ELLENDER. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. ELLENDER. What is the status of the motion to reconsider?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion was agreed to. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The next amendment of the committee was on page 3, after line 12, to insert the following:

(b) That from and after the effective date of this act any person who shall have served for 4 years as a clerk or assistant clerk to a Senator, Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner, or as a clerk or assistant clerk to a standing committee of the Senate or House of Representatives or as a clerical or administrative employee under an officer of the Senate or House of Representatives and who terminates his services without prejudice, shall acquire, upon such tests of fitness as the Civil Service Commission may prescribe, a classified civil-service status for transfer to a position in the classified civil service, notwithstanding any contrary provisions of the civil service laws or regulations: Provided, That any individual who may hold such a position in the legislative branch must obtain such transfer within 2 years from the date of separation of service, and nothing in this act shall be construed to impair any right of transfer provided for under the civil-service laws or regulations made thereunder.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The next committee amendment was, under the heading "Title II—Extension of Classification Act," on page 8, line 6, after the word "amended", to insert a comma and "including those offices and positions transferred under the provisions of the Act of Congress approved April 3, 1939, to the Department of State by part 1, section 1, of Reorganization Plan Numbered II, effective July 1, 1939"; on the same page, line 14, after "(46 Stat. 1207)", to insert a comma and "including those offices and positions transferred under the provisions of the Act of Congress approved April 3, 1939, to the Department of State by part 1, section 1, of Reorganization Plan Numbered II, effective July 1, 1939"; after line 18, to strike out:

(viii) Offices or positions of commercial attachés, assistant commercial attachés, trade commissioners, and assistant trade commissioners in the Foreign Commerce Service of the Department of Commerce, the compensation of which is fixed under an Act of Congress approved March 3, 1927 (44 Stat. 1394), as amended;

On the same page, line 25, before the word "Offices", to strike out "(ix)" and insert "(viii)"; on page 9, line 6, before the word "Offices", to strike out "(x)" and insert "(ix)"; in line 11, before the word "Offices", to strike out "(xi)" and insert "(x)"; and in line 17, before the word "offices", to strike out "(xii)" and insert "(xi)"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. (a) Subject to the limitations contained in this section, whenever the President, after such classification and compensation surveys or investigations as he may direct the Commission to undertake, and upon consideration of the Commission's resulting reports and recommendations, shall find and declare that an extension of the provisions of the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, to any offices or positions in the agencies of the Government is necessary to the more efficient operation of the Government, he may by Executive order extend the provisions of the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, to any such offices or positions not at the time subject to such provisions: Provided, That in the case of any federally owned and controlled corporation organized under the laws of any State, Territory, or possession of the United States (including the Philippine Islands), or the District of Columbia, the President is authorized to direct that such action be taken as will permit the compensation of such offices or positions to be fixed in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, consistently with the laws of any such State, Territory, or possession, or the District of Columbia, or with the charter or articles of incorporation of any such corporation.

(b) Whenever the President, upon report and recommendation by the Commission, shall find and declare that one or more officers or positions to which the Classification Act of 1923, as amended and extended, is applicable, may not fairly and reasonably be allocated to the professional and scientific service, the subprofessional service, the clerical, administrative, and fiscal service, the custodial service, or the clerical-mechanical service, as described in the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, he may by Executive order prescribe and define such additional classification services and grades thereof as he may deem necessary and shall describe, and fix the ranges of compensation for, the grades of such services within the limits of the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, so that they shall be comparable, as nearly as may be, with the grades in said act, as amended, for offices or positions that are comparable as to duties, responsibilities, qualifications required, and other conditions of employment.

(c) Whenever the President, upon report and recommendation by the Commission, shall find and declare that the rates of the compensation schedules of the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, are inadequate for any offices or positions under such act, as amended and extended, he may by Executive order establish necessary schedules of differentials in the rates prescribed in such compensation schedules, but the differentials in the compensation of any such office or position shall not exceed 25 percent of the minimum rate of the grade to which such office or position is allocated under such compensation schedules: Provided, That the provisions of this subsection shall be applicable only to such offices or positions having the following characteristics:

Offices or positions which are located at stations that are isolated, remote, or inaccessible when compared with stations at which offices or positions of the same character are usually located, or which involve physical hardships or hazards that are excessive when compared with those usually involved in offices or positions of the same character, or which are located outside the States of the United States and the District of Columbia: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall preclude the Commission from taking the factor of isolation, hardship, hazard, or foreign service into consideration in allocating a given class of offices or positions to a service and grade under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, if such factor is uniformly involved in each office or position in the class, in which event no differential is authorized under this section.

(d) Except as Congress may otherwise provide by law, the power granted to the President by this section shall not apply to the following:

(i) Offices or positions in the Postal Service the compensation of which is fixed under an act of Congress approved February 28, 1925 (43 Stat. 1033), as amended;

(ii) Offices or positions of teachers, librarians, school-attendance officers, and employees of the community-center department under the Board of Education of the District of Columbia, the compensation of which is fixed under an act of Congress approved June 4, 1924 (43 Stat. 367), as amended;

(iii) Offices or positions in the Metropolitan Police, in the Fire Department of the District of Columbia, and in the United States Park Police, the compensation of which is fixed under an act of Congress approved July 1, 1930 (46 Stat. 839);

(iv) Commissioned officers and enlisted personnel in the military and naval services and the Coast Guard, and commissioned officers in the Public Health Service and the Coast and Geodetic Survey, the compensation of which is fixed under an act of Congress approved June 10, 1922 (42 Stat. 625), as amended;

(v) Offices or positions in the Government Printing Office, the compensation of which is fixed under an act of Congress approved June 7, 1924 (43 Stat. 658);

(vi) Offices or positions of foreign-service officers in the Foreign Service of the United States, the compensation of which is fixed under an act of Congress approved May 24, 1924 (43 Stat. 140), as amended, including those offices and positions transferred under the provisions of the act of Congress approved April 3, 1939, to the Department of State by part 1, section 1, of Reorganization Plan No. II, effective July 1, 1939;

(vii) Offices or positions of clerks in the Foreign Service of the United States, the compensation of which is fixed under an act of Congress approved February 23, 1931 (46 Stat. 1207), including those offices and positions transferred under the provisions of the act of Congress approved April 3, 1939, to the Department of State by part 1, section 1, of Reorganization Plan No. II, effective July 1, 1939;

(viii) Offices or positions of verifiers-openers-packers, clerks, guards, inspectors, station inspectors, and laborers in the Customs Service of the Treasury Department, the compensation of which is fixed under an act of Congress approved May 29, 1928 (45 Stat. 955), as amended;

(ix) Offices or positions of inspectors in the Immigration and Naturalization Service of the Department of Labor, the compensation of which is fixed under an act of Congress approved May 29, 1928 (45 Stat. 954), as amended;

(x) Offices or positions the duties of which are to serve as an officer or member of the crew of a vessel, except that the President may, by Executive order, extend the provisions of the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, to offices or positions in the Bureau of Lighthouses; and

(xi) Offices or positions the duties of which are to perform the work of an apprentice, helper, or journeyman in a recognized trade or craft, or other skilled mechanical craft, or the work of an unskilled, semiskilled, or skilled laborer, except that whenever such offices or positions involve work in the regular custody, operation, or maintenance of a Government building, or other Government property, or work which is subordinate, incidental, or preparatory to work of a professional, scientific, or technical character, the President, upon a finding that the characteristics and working conditions of such offices or positions render them substantially the same as comparable offices or positions in the District of Columbia included within the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, may by Executive order extend the provisions of such act to include them.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 10, before the period, it is proposed to insert the following:

Or to any position to which appointments are made by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I send to the desk a substitute for that amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New York to explain his amendment.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, the purpose of the amendment which I have sent to the desk——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say that the amendment in the nature of a substitute presented by the Senator from Louisiana should be read at this time.

Mr. ELLENDER. I ask that my substitute amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In lieu of the amendment offered by Mr. MEAD, on page 2, line 10, before the period, it is proposed to insert a comma, and the following:

To any position to which appointments are made by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or to positions of assistant United States district attorney, deputy United States marshal, or deputy collector of internal revenue.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I presented my amendment to clarify a matter that was discussed here yesterday. It was held that the all-embracing language of the bill, as reported by the committee, would deny the Senate the right of confirmation with reference to positions in the Presidential class. The amendment I offered would clear up that question, and leave where it is now the matter of confirmation associated with Presidential nominations.

The substitute offered by the distinguished Senator from Louisiana strikes at the very heart of the bill, in that we are trying to cover the deputy collectors of internal revenue, for instance, and his amendment would eliminate them, would bar them from the coverage which we intend should be theirs under the bill. My amendment only pertains to those whose nomination requires Senate confirmation. The amendment of the Senator from Louisiana goes to the very heart of the bill and strikes a deep blow at it, as it were.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, as the Senator from New York just stated, the first part of my amendment follows the language of his amendment, that is, it exempts from the bill all officials who are appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and I have added the following to that:

Or to positions of assistant United States district attorney, deputy United States marshal, or deputy collector of internal revenue.

I will not insist on the latter part of that amendment if another amendment which I shall propose to the Senate is adopted.

One of the amendments I propose to submit to the Senate deals with competitive examinations; that is, it will require all positions within the departments that are covered into the civil service under the terms of the pending bill to be filled by competitive examinations which shall be open to the public.

If that amendment prevails, it would not be my purpose to insist on the latter part of the amendment that I have just read, that is, to exclude from the bill deputy marshals, assistant United States attorneys, and deputy collectors of internal revenue.

As I attempted to point out yesterday, the primary purpose of the civil-service law was to establish a merit system in this country. It seems that quite a few persons talk about the merit system, they give lip service to it, but when they have the opportunity to vote for a real merit system they are not at home.

As I pointed out yesterday, we have in this country today over 800,000 men and women who have taken civil-service examinations and are on the waiting lists seeking Federal appointments. They are now being denied the right to compete for these 200,000 positions that are being covered into the civil service.

They have taken civil-service examinations, they have abided by the civil-service laws, and by the rules and regulations of the Civil Service Commission, and I maintain that they are entitled to consideration.

Let me call the Senate's attention once more to the large number of persons who have taken these examinations in previous years, who are on the eligible lists, and who are entitled to appointment but have not been appointed. Why? Could it be because they did not have someone to work in their behalf?

I have before me a statement from which I shall read, found in the fifty-sixth annual report, United States Civil Service Commission, at page 149. It shows that from July 16, 1883, to July 30, 1939—listen to these figures, Senators—in that period of time 10,264,668 men and women took examinations in order to qualify for the various civil-service positions in the Government. Of that amount 6,924,015 have passed the examinations, have qualified for appointment, and only 2,168,738 have been given positions.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I am in sympathy with what the Senator is saying now, but I cannot understand why the latter part of his amendment, especially, would help the situation. It seems to me it would make it worse. Let us take as an example a deputy United States marshal. Have these examinations been held for qualified persons to act as deputy United States marshals?

Mr. ELLENDER. No, sir; the reason that no examinations have been held for those positions is that the positions have never been put under civil service, and the same thing applies to assistant United States district attorneys. Deputy collectors of internal revenue were placed under civil service years ago, but somehow they were taken out.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand, the deputy United States marshals are not now under civil service, are they?

Mr. ELLENDER. No, sir; they are not.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator agree with me that they ought to be put under civil service?

Mr. ELLENDER. I agree, yes; provided that competitive examinations are given for the positions.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, that is what civil service means, does it not?

Mr. ELLENDER. That is correct, but under this bill, if it is adopted in the form recommended by the committee, every United States deputy marshal who now holds a job, every United States assistant district attorney, every deputy collector of internal revenue will come in without a competitive examination. That is the basis of my complaint.

Mr. NORRIS. If they were under civil service they could not go in without examination, could they?

Mr. ELLENDER. No, sir; but they are not now under civil service. The pending bill seeks to put them under civil service without a competitive examination.

Mr. NORRIS. Then it would follow that they would have to pass an examination, would it not?

Mr. ELLENDER. They would have to take a noncompetitive examination, after being in the service for a certain period, and after having received a favorable recommendation from the departmental head.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not understand it that way.

Mr. ELLENDER. That is what the bill provides, and it is that feature of the bill to which I am opposed.

Mr. NORRIS. Maybe that is true, but if you were a United States marshal and wanted to appoint me as your deputy, and that position was under civil service, the Civil Service Commission in connection with your request and all others over the country, would hold an examination, and I would have to pass that in order to be qualified, would I not?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes; but it would not be competitive.

Mr. NORRIS. If I did not pass it I would not be appointed.

Mr. ELLENDER. The bill which we are now considering would take under the umbrella, as it were, every United States deputy marshal, every assistant district attorney, every deputy collector, without the necessity of their taking a competitive examination. Of course, the noncompetitive examination is to be given only to the incumbents as of the date the position is covered into the civil service. Thereafter, any new appointments would be subject to competitive examinations. It may be that the Senator from Nebraska has that situation in mind. As I said in my opening remarks, I would not insist on that part of my amendment which is now under discussion if I felt that the Senate would adopt another amendment which I have offered, forcing competitive examinations. If the Senate should adopt my amendment, which would compel all appointees to these new civil-service jobs to take a competitive examination, I should ask for reconsideration of this amendment and strike out the part pertaining to assistant marshals, assistant district attorneys, and assistant deputy collectors.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield for a question.

Mr. BARKLEY. I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Nebraska. As I understand the situation, under the terms of the bill there is no difference between the status of deputy marshals, deputy collectors, and assistant United States attorneys, and that of any other Government employee who is affected by the bill.

Mr. ELLENDER. Any other Government employee who is not under civil service.

Mr. BARKLEY. The bill affects only those not under civil service. They all must take a noncompetitive examination, before which they must be certified by the heads of the agencies, who must certify that they have rendered acceptable, competent service, and are meritorious. If the employees do not obtain the certificate, they may not even take the noncompetitve examination. Of course, that statement applies only to those who are now in the positions. If new Government employees are to be appointed in any class covered by the bill, there will be a competitive examination, which everybody has an opportunity to take. The right to be appointed after a noncompetitive examination applies only to those who are now in the positions or who will be in the positions when the law becomes effective, provided they are certified as worthy by the head of the agency. That is true, as it has always been, only because the experience which they have acquired while they have been performing the duties is supposed to give them some qualification which will entitle them to take a noncompetitive examination, by which they must demonstrate to the Civil Service Commission that by reason of their experience they are qualified to perform the duties of the position.

Mr. ELLENDER. The amendment that I have submitted with respect to competitive examinations takes care of those in the Government service by allowing them 10 points for the experience to which the Senator from Kentucky refers.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. Gladly.

Mr. WALSH. Am I to understand that even with respect to the noncompetitive examinations the applicants will have to meet the age requirements and the physical requirements which the Civil Service Commission may set up? As I understand, the noncompetitive examination is only for the experience and intellectual tests; but the physical requirements and age requirements which the Civil Service Commission may set up will become operative at once.

Mr. ELLENDER. I presume that will be true because, as I understand what the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] said yesterday, noncompetitive examinations are the same kind of examinations as competitive examinations, and I presume the same rules and regulations would apply.

Mr. WALSH. But there is no competition in meeting the age requirements, and no competition in meeting the physical requirements?

Mr. ELLENDER. The bill does not say anything about the physical requirements and——

Mr. WALSH. When the law was passed placing postmasters under the civil-service laws, some postmasters who naturally would have been reappointed were taken out of the service because they were unable to meet the physical requirements. I refer to such cases as that of a man without an arm or a person who had sustained a mild shock, but who was able to carry on his duties. So I assume that a noncompetitive examination means an examination as to intellectual and experience qualifications in the particular field of work, but that the civil-service requirements for maximum and minimum age and for physical good health would have to be met. Am I correct?

Mr. ELLENDER. I have no doubt that is true. It should be, at any rate.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. The qualifications with reference to age have been eliminated from consideration.

Mr. WALSH. In this bill?

Mr. MEAD. In this bill.

Mr. WALSH. So a man 70 years of age might come under the civil service.

Mr. MEAD. It is assumed that he has been employed in the agency, filling his position satisfactorily; and if he is recommended by his superior, the age requirements are waived but no other requirements.

Mr. WALSH. How about the physical requirements?

Mr. MEAD. They are not waived.

Mr. WALSH. So each of the persons to be given a noncompetitive examination must meet the physical requirements; and, of course, properly so, because the moment the law becomes operative, he will be entitled to retirement pay, and, of course, he must be in fair physical condition if he is to be given retirement pay.

Mr. ELLENDER. As I stated a while ago, it is my purpose to propose another amendment which will strike from the bill the provision which permits noncompetitive examinations. I shall refrain from going further into details until that amendment is before the Senate. If that amendment shall be adopted whereby every applicant for a position would be put under civil service through a competitive examination in accord with the provisions of the civil-service law, I shall have nothing further to say.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It seems to me that we could simplify the whole process by first passing upon the question of competitive and noncompetitive examinations, because a number of other amendments hang upon that decision. I suggest to the able Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] that as a matter of expedition we should do better if we should temporarily withdraw the pending question and settle the question of competitive versus noncompetitive examinations.

Mr. ELLENDER. That is what I suggested privately to the Senator from New York a while ago. I did not receive an affirmative answer.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, that would actually destroy the purposes of the bill. We are thinking in terms of covering positions into the civil service, while the Senator is thinking in terms of covering individuals into the civil service.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What I am suggesting has nothing to do with the merits of the argument. It is purely a question of the easiest order in which to consider the amendments; and I am suggesting to the Senator that in the view of many of us this is the key amendment. The problem of the Senator would be much simplified if we should first settle the question of competitive versus noncompetitive examinations.

Mr. MEAD. It is my opinion that it is not the key amendment. It is the killing amendment.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is beside the point.

Mr. MEAD. I really believe we can strengthen the bill as we go along by amending it line by line. In view of the fact that we assume that the Senate will go on record consistently with the platforms of both parties, and that we shall not kill the bill, we should merely be wasting our time by anticipating an amendment which is not in order at this time. Let us go along in an orderly fashion, line by line, adopting amendments to strengthen the bill. There will then be fewer Members of the Senate anxious to vote affirmatively on an amendment which would strike at the very heart and center of the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is obvious that we cannot complete the consideration of the bill or the pending amendment today. Does the Senator from Louisiana wish to continue?

Mr. ELLENDER. I shall be glad to suspend at this time.

POSITION OF WENDELL L. WILLKIE ON THE POWER QUESTION

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, there has been considerable discussion this afternoon about the speech delivered by Mr. Willkie night before last at Portland, Oreg., in reference to power developments in the States of Oregon and Washington. I have not participated in those discussions, and I do not care to do so.

However, today the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Ickes, who, as the Administrator of Public Works, has had much to do with the great power developments in my State, and on the Columbia River between the States of Oregon and Washington, sent to Mr. Willkie at Spokane a very interesting telegram. I do not know whether or not Mr. Willkie will answer the telegram; but in order that the RECORD may be kept straight, and that there may be added to the discussion which has occurred this afternoon a very definite statement in reference to the great power developments in the Pacific Northwest, I ask unanimous consent that the telegram which Mr. Ickes sent to Mr. Willkie be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should rather have the telegram read.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I ask unanimous consent that the telegram be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the telegram will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

WENDELL L. WILLKIE, Esq.,
Care Western Union, Spokane, Wash.:

Before you leave the Northwest you owe it to the people of that region and the country to be really frank as to what your attitude will be on the vital question of public power if you are elected President. I have carefully read what you said yesterday on the subject at Portland, Oreg., but you said as little as possible. I hoped that you would develop the subject further last night in Seattle, but I was disappointed, as apparently were the people of Oregon and Washington, that you could not spare time to visit the Bonneville and Grand Coulee Dams, that are the hope of that region. You are covering up your record as a foe of public power, and the people are entitled to the facts since you are pleading to be elected President.

You either misspoke on January 21, 1935, in New York City, when you said, "No duty has ever come to me in my life, even that in the service of my country, which so appealed to my sense of social obligation, patriotism, and love of mankind, as this, my obligation to say and do what I can for the preservation of public utilities, privately owned," or you misspoke in Portland yesterday when you said, "It is my belief that the power generated in connection with these projects should be sold for the benefit of the people." Tell the people of the Northwest which is your true view.

You either misspoke on November 23, 1938, when you told a congressional investigating committee, "It is my personal belief that the T. V. A. should go out of the power business * * * I have always been convinced that the power activities of the T. V. A. violate the Federal Constitution by putting the Federal Government in a business it is not authorized to be engaged in, thus destroying the property and business of a citizen. It is my view that the soundest solution both for the Government and the utilities would be for the T. V. A. to dispose of the power generated by it to the utilities at the switchboard." Or you misspoke yesterday when you said, "The people of the areas affected should determine how they want power distributed, whether through private or public hands."

You did not tell the people of the Northwest that you had opposed the building of transmission lines by the T. V. A. which were necessary to get public power to local public agencies which wanted public power. Least of all did you disclose the reprehensible and unscrupulous methods employed to defeat the people in their effort to build their own transmission lines and distribution systems.

You "misspoke" when you said you stood with Senator MCNARY on the power issue. Yesterday at Portland you said that the people, rather than the Government, should decide whether privately owned companies or public-power districts should sell the cheap power that the New Deal projects generate. That's dodging. Senator MCNARY, in his acceptance speech, clearly differed with you when he said, "The Government, having made this power available, should have an indisputable right to control its utilization and distribution." You can't confuse the people of the Northwest, who have lived with public power 25 years, with that sort of weaseling. They know what they want.

You either "misspoke" when you condemned the public-power policies of the Roosevelt administration with specific mention of Bonneville and Grand Coulee in the Atlantic Monthly of August, 1937, or you "misspoke" in the Northwest yesterday when you said that you would not only see that Bonneville and Grand Coulee, which you heretofore have opposed, were completed but that they were "operated for the full benefit of the people of this and adjoining areas."

You know full well that power companies, such as you have served, are making a desperate fight to ruin the Northwest hydroelectric projects just as you, as president of Commonwealth & Southern, fought T. V. A., which you called "one of the most cruel, un-American" agencies ever devised. You know the methods of large utility corporations in hiring swarms of lawyers, in destroying independent newspapers, in using money recklessly, and in fomenting dissension to block public ownership and distribution. You know just how it's done because you have done all of these things, and now you're trying to fool the people of the Northwest, dodge the issue and hide your record.

While you are in the Northwest, tell the people the whole truth. They are in earnest. I know because I am the responsible official of the Government with respect to the Grand Coulee, Bonneville, and Central Valley developments. I know the Northwest puts its faith and future in those developments.

You either deceived the interests supporting you when you took the nomination in the East on a record of opposing public power, or you are trying to deceive the Northwest by appearing as a friend of public power now.

You can't pose as a friend of public power in the West and be a foe of public power in Wall Street.

HAROLD L. ICKES.

THIRD PRESIDENTIAL TERM

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. We have heard a great deal this afternoon on the floor of the Senate, and just now in a telegram which was read, about electric power. I desire to present for the RECORD a matter relating to political power.

This morning, before the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee holding hearings on the question of a constitutional amendment to limit the tenure of office of President of the United States and place some control upon the exercise of political power, there appeared as one of the witnesses Richard F. Cleveland, distinguished lawyer and son of President Grover Cleveland. He made a statement of outstanding importance. I should like to read the first few sentences:

There is no doubt whatever in my mind that if the voters of the United States in 1940 sanction a third Presidential term, they will remove our most effective check against the world's present tendency toward concentration of political power. That step is far more significant, of course, than giving President Roosevelt a third term. It is a landmark, a River Rubicon. It is true in all human affairs that after the first momentous overthrow of a restraint, the succeeding moves in the same direction become easy and almost inevitable.

And Mr. Cleveland concludes his statement with this one sentence:

I solemnly believe that unless a third term for any man is forestalled by the voters in free election, or by suitable legislative action, we shall pass the great divide between democratic processes and power government.

Gentleman who are so greatly interested in electric power—which is an important subject—may very well consider at the same time these solemn words of the son of our great Democratic President about the danger of the extension of political power by permitting any man to perpetuate himself in office beyond 8 years.

I ask unanimous consent that the whole statement of Mr. Richard F. Cleveland may be inserted in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWARTZ in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in that connection I believe Mr. Cleveland a few days ago announced that he was supporting Mr. Willkie, as are practically all the witnesses who have been before the committee up to this time, I believe.

Mr. BURKE. If the Senator will yield, I should like to say that that unfortunately is true. We have urged our majority leader and the other 15 Democratic Senators to appear before us; and we now extend also to my colleague, the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], all of whom voted for a limitation to two terms, an invitation to appear before us. We have heretofore urged the 16 Democratic Senators to come before the committee and tell us their views. We have extended a public, although not an embossed, invitation to Secretary Ickes, the original third termer, to come and give us his views; and we shall welcome any of you gentlemen. Let us know when you will be there, and we shall be ready to receive your testimony with the utmost of courtesy.

Mr. BARKLEY. And give it slight consideration. [Laughter.] What I have to say on that subject I can say here. I do not have to go before a subcommittee.

REGULATION OF ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURE

Mr. President, I wish to make a very brief statement regarding another matter, which has been under discussion here for the last 2 or 3 days. I refer to the situation with reference to the Logan-Walter bill. I am sure the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] will be interested in what I have to say.

I shall not enter upon a discussion of the merits of the bill. Nor do I intend to make any extended remarks as to what has heretofore occurred respecting it. I think we all recall that for weeks, when the bill was called on the calendar, during practically the whole session of 1939, I objected to its consideration. I did not believe then and I do not believe now it is the type of bill which should be passed by unanimous consent on a call of the calendar. It is an extremely technical measure.

I doubt very seriously whether a dozen members of the Senate have had time to give such study to the bill as to know what effect, in its present form, it would have on the various departments and agencies of the Government. I have read it over and over again, I have read the arguments, both for it and against it, and it grows more confusing and more technical when one tries to apply it to the various agencies and departments of the Government.

I had objected to its consideration for weeks when the calendar was called. On one occasion when I was temporarily called from the Chamber to answer the telephone the bill was called, no one objected, and it was passed. I doubt very much whether any similar important bill, which has been repeatedly objected to during my membership in the Senate, was passed under such circumstances. I know that frequently when Senators who have continuously objected to the consideration of bills on the call of the calendar have been temporarily called from the Chamber, even the sponsors of the bills would have them passed over in the absence of Senators who had been repeatedly objecting to them, and were known to desire to object to them. That was not done on the occasion when this bill was passed, however, although I think that I am speaking the truth when I say that most, if not all, those who favor the bill, thought it should be passed after discussion, and not on a call of the calendar for the consideration of unobjected-to bills.

My late colleague, Senator Logan, one of the most honorable men who ever served in this body and who was, of course, anxious to secure the enactment of the bill, was not very readily agreeable to the reconsideration of the vote, in the technical situation in which the bill found itself as a result of my absence from the Chamber. Finally, however, the vote was reconsidered and the bill was placed back on the calendar, and what was said at that time has been quoted time and again, the understanding being that the bill would be taken up early in the next session, which is this session.

I do not know why it is necessary to repeat what I said at that time, unless it is for the purpose of trying to convince the Senate that I am not a man of my word, and that an agreement into which I entered would not be kept.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I am one who has been advocating the consideration and passage of the Logan-Walter bill. I know that I speak for the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], who sits by my side, when I say that there has been no idea on the part of either of us, or of any other Senator, of implying by any means whatsoever that the Senator from Kentucky is not a man of his word.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate that statement, and I do not attribute any such sentiment to the Senators; but every time this matter has come up, my words have been quoted as if to indicate that I entered into an ironclad agreement about the matter which I have not kept.

Mr. HATCH. We may have been a little bit persistent, and perhaps a little annoying at times, but we have not questioned the honor of the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. I doubt whether the Senator has been more annoying than he has been annoyed.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. I, myself, quoted the Senator's words once or twice, and have rather approved having them quoted more often, because it explains the situation, and I am sure the Senator was entirely sincere in saying at that time that he felt that the bill should come up for discussion early in this session. I agree with him fully that it certainly was not the kind of a bill which should have been passed by unanimous consent, and I understand the Senator's position fully that the condition has changed sufficiently, with the Attorney General's committee working on the matter and about ready to report, so that the Senator has felt, although it was understood it would come up early in the session, that we should wait. I, myself, think that there has been far more justification for the Senator recognizing the change in conditions in considering bringing this matter up early in the session than there is in either the Senator's case or that of the senior Senator from Tennessee, who sits beside him, in changing their positions now in reference to an action they took in 1928 in voting that a third term for any President would be inimical to the best interests of the country.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not see any need for bringing up that obsession of the Senator from Nebraska every time we get into a discussion of something else.

Mr. BURKE. It seems particularly appropriate.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The only statement I wanted to make at this time was that I hope the Senator from Kentucky will disregard the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska as to the third term, and continue his remarks on the Logan-Walter bill, because I am very much interested in what the Senator is going to say.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, before the Senator proceeds, will he yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. As one Senator who has had nothing to do with quoting the previous position of the Senator from Kentucky, and who does not even now know how he might vote on the Logan-Walter bill, because there are certain provisions in it, if I understand it correctly, for which I could not vote, although I am very much in favor of the general principle of it, and agreeing entirely with the proposition of the Senator from Kentucky that this is a measure which should not have been passed without consideration or debate a year and a half ago, and that it might well be postponed for discussion, does the Senator have any idea when such discussion could take place?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am coming to that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator has been coming to it for a long time. I have heard that Dean Acheson has written the Senator suggesting postponement of the matter.

Mr. BARKLEY. I beg the Senator's pardon. I have never received such a letter from Dean Acheson on the subject.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have misunderstood what the Senator told me, then.

Mr. BARKLEY. Dean Acheson wrote a letter to the Attorney General which I had put into the RECORD some time ago.

When I made the statement which has been quoted, for whatever purpose—and I accept the statement of the Senator, that it has not been quoted for any purpose except as a matter of emphasis, I suppose—I was not aware then of the situation which developed later with regard to the appointment of a committee by the Attorney General, at the request of the President of the United States.

I think we all agree that the President of the United States is a part of the legislative machinery. He must either sign or veto measures, and in determining whether he would sign or veto a measure of such technical import and so comprehensively dealing with the various agencies and departments of the Government, I think the President was not only guilty of no impropriety in asking the Attorney General to appoint a committee to investigate the whole subject of administrative law, but that he owed it to himself and to the departments, and even to the Congress and the country, to ask for the most minute investigation of the subject, which is a difficult and technical and involved one, before any action should be taken.

The committee was appointed, and I think there has not been a more outstanding and able committee appointed by any department or by Congress than the committee appointed by Attorney General Murphy.

I ask to have inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks an address delivered 2 weeks ago before the American Bar Association, in the city of Philadelphia, by Dean Acheson, chairman of the committee. He does not go into a discussion of the terms of the bill, but he does in a very interesting fashion recite what the committee has been doing, the work it has done, and the method it has adopted in dealing with this very intricate subject.

I wish to read a paragraph to show the caliber of the men who are on the committee:

> I hope that it is not immodest for me to pay tribute to the then Attorney General, Mr. Justice Murphy, for the appointments which he made. For the committee is composed not only of men of judgment and ability, but of men who represent to an unusual degree many points of view and points of contact with the subject. Half of its members are practicing lawyers or judges and half are teachers and scholars who have long worked in this field. Chief Justice Groner, of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, and Judge Morris, of the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, bring to our work the experience of two courts, one of appeal and one of first instance, which, more than any others, review or pass upon the work of administrative agencies. The Solicitor General, first Mr. Jackson and now Mr. Biddle, contributes an understanding of the problems arising in the defense of this work before the courts. The practicing lawyers, Mr. Arthur Vanderbilt, a former president of this association; Mr. Carl McFarland, a former Assistant Attorney General; and myself know the situation from the point of view of the private interests affected by the administrative powers. From the academic world we have Dean Garrison, of Wisconsin, himself a former administrative official who has maintained close contact with the practical problems of administration in State and Federal Government; Dean Stason, of Michigan, a teacher and adviser of legislatures and officials in this field; Prof. Ralph Fuchs, of Washington University in St. Louis, a member of this association's committee on administrative law and a nationally known writer upon the subject; Professor Shulman, of the Yale Law School, well known to members of the American Law Institute as one of its most brilliant reporters; and Professor Hart, of Harvard, coauthor of a prior report upon the procedure of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, and now engaged in advising upon the problems incident to its transfer to the Department of Justice. As one who has presided over the monthly meetings of this group, and who knows the time and effort which its members have given to the work, the keenness of their examination of witnesses and staff reports, and the breadth of their experience and knowledge, I am confident that their report will not lack thoroughness as well as ripe and broad judgment.

Mr. President, I have objected to taking up the bill until the report of the Attorney General's committee is available for whatever value it may have to Congress. The committee has been holding meetings all this time. I think the impression was at first created that the President asked for the appointment of the committee in order to delay and stall off any action on the subject. Quite the contrary is true. I believe I can state from contacts I have had with some members of the committee, that they have gone into the subject in a more practical and detailed way than was possible for any committee of Congress to do, and more so than any committee of Congress has done, because they have taken, I believe, about 2,000 pages of testimony. They have now the first draft of their final report drawn. They have considered the subject from the point of view of the effect the bill would have on each separate agency and department whose problems are not always identical with those of any other department, but are matters of first consideration to itself, without undertaking to blanket agencies or departments under a formula that would not apply to them.

The committee will hold one more meeting, about the middle of October, when they will go over the rough draft of their final report to make it final, and make their report to the Attorney General, which will be in turn submitted to the President, and in turn by him submitted to Congress.

In view of that situation, if we should pass the bill which is now on the Calendar substantially in the form in which it now is written, while I make no effort to speak for the President, I do not see how he could do otherwise than veto it, in view of the fact that within 3 weeks the final report of this outstanding committee will be available for Congress. When it has been made and submitted, if Congress desires to disregard it, or throw it out, or give it no consideration whatever, that is a matter for Congress to determine; but it seems to me, since within a very short period the wealth of knowledge garnered by this investigation will be available to us, that we certainly ought to wait until the report has been submitted to us so that we may take it under consideration.

It might be that the recommendations of the Attorney General, or the committee appointed by him, would so appeal to the Committee on the Judiciary, or the subcommittee which had charge of this measure, that they would want to rewrite their own bill, or at least amend it in important particulars, because of the effect it might have upon individual agencies and departments.

In view of that situation I have suggested to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], who is not now present, and also the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, that the bill be allowed to go over until we have an opportunity to consider the report for whatever value it may have.

I do not know what is going to happen in the way of adjournment. Nobody knows. We may adjourn. We may not. We may recess. We may not. I will say to the Senate publicly what I have said privately, that after the report is available and submitted to the Senate and to the House of Representatives, I would not ask that there be any further delay in the consideration of the bill. That might mean that if we adjourn sine die the bill might go over until January under that arrangement, because Congress would not be in session. If we recess until, say, the 15th of November and come back here, and the report is available—which it will be, I have no doubt, if made in the middle of October—I would not urge that the bill be put off until January, but that it be taken up in November, in the remaining portion of the session of Congress, to which we will come back as the result of a recess.

I do not think that is an unfair proposition; I think it is reasonable. No Senator ought to have any desire to take action which would be futile, because if the Senate should pass the House bill, with such amendments even as have been put in it by the committee, it is my honest judgment—I speak for nobody but myself—that the bill could not become a law and that we would not gain anything, and in that case it would have to go over until January and be taken up anew.

If we come back here in November, or at any other time before the next session, and the report is available, it seems to me the Senate would be wise to wait to see what it may contain and give it consideration.

I felt I ought to make this statement at least in justification of my course here in not agreeing that the bill be taken up before the report is available. It may be that Senators may not have a very high regard for the committee which has been doing this work. I have. It may be that the report will be of no value to Senators, but I should at least like to see it, and I think other Senators would like to see what the result of this labor has been before we consider the measure.

I wanted to be frank with the Senate about it, as I try to be at all times with reference to legislation. I have not been trying to stall around simply to keep this subject from coming up, but I want it to come up, when it comes up, with all the knowledge and approach to it that it is possible to obtain, and I think Congress so desires.

Mr. President, I renew my request that the address by Dean Acheson, chairman, attorney general's committee on administrative procedure, before the American Bar Association, section of judicial administration, Philadelphia, Pa., Tuesday, September 10, 1940, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE APPOINTMENT AND MEMBERSHIP OF THE COMMITTEE AND ITS STAFF

I am very glad to have this opportunity for a brief report to you on the character and progress of the work of the Attorney General's committee on administrative procedure. The committee was appointed a year and a half ago, in February 1939, at the request of the President, to investigate, in his words, "The need for procedural reform in the field of administrative law." His instructions were that the committee should make "a thorough and comprehensive study of existing practices and procedures with a view to detecting any existing deficiencies and pointing the way to improvements."

I hope that it is not immodest for me to pay tribute to the then Attorney General, Mr. Justice Murphy, for the appointments which he made. For the committee is composed not only of men of judgment and ability, but of men who represent to an unusual degree many points of view and points of contact with the subject. Half of its members are practicing lawyers or judges and half are teachers and scholars who have long worked in this field. Chief Justice Groner, of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, and Judge Morris, of the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, bring to our work the experience of two courts, one of appeal and one of first instance, which more than any others review or pass upon the work of administrative agencies. The Solicitor General, first Mr. Jackson and now Mr. Biddle, contributes an understanding of the problems arising in the defense of this work before the courts. The practicing lawyers, Mr. Arthur Vanderbilt, a former president of this association; Mr. Carl McFarland, a former assistant attorney general, and myself know the situation from the point of view of the private interests affected by the administrative powers. From the academic world we have Dean Garrison, of Wisconsin, himself a former administrative official who has maintained close contact with the practical problems of administration in State and Federal government; Dean Stason, of Michigan, a teacher and adviser of legislatures and officials in this field; Prof. Ralph Fuchs, of Washington University in St. Louis, a member of this association's committee on administrative law and a nationally known writer upon the subject; Professor Shulman, of the Yale Law School, well known to members of the American Law Institute as one of its most brilliant reporters; and Professor Hart, of Harvard, coauthor of a prior report upon the procedure of the immigration and Naturalization Service and now engaged in advising upon the problems incident to its transfer to the Department of Justice. As one who has presided over the monthly meetings of this group, and who knows the time and effort which its members have given to the work, the keenness of their examination of witnesses and staff reports, and the breadth of their experience and knowledge, I am confident that their report will not lack thoroughness as well as ripe and broad judgment.

The committee was fortunate in getting as director of its staff and research Prof. Walter Gellhorn, of Columbia University Law School, who has had experience both as an adviser in establishing administrative procedures and as a student of them. Under his guidance, a small staff of extremely able lawyer-investigators, Messrs. Kenneth Davis, Ralph Boyd, William Golub, Richard Salant, Martin Norr, Arthur Armstrong, and Robert Ginnane—have done a series of thorough investigations into and reports upon the procedures and practices of the principal agencies of the Federal Government. These investigations and reports represent a volume of work nothing short of amazing. If we are able to throw new light upon any of the perplexing questions of administrative procedure, it will be because the members of our staff have laid for us a foundation of knowledge which has never before been available.

THE SCOPE AND METHODS OF INVESTIGATION

You are all so familiar with the many criticisms of administrative agencies which have been made by members of the bar and others that I need not review them. It is enough to say here that two of the problems raised by these criticisms we have felt to be largely beyond our province, although of the most vital importance. The first is the problem of personnel. We know, as you all do, that any system will be made or marred by the men and women who administer it. The recruiting, selection, and training of personnel, however, is already being studied by the President's Committee on Civil Service Improvement, the so-called Reed committee. This is reason enough for us to stick to the field marked out for us, which is, in all conscience, large enough.

The second problem is that of administrative organization and management. This whole subject, involving knowledge and experience quite different from that involved in the understanding of procedural questions, has again been studied, and is being studied, by other groups better qualified than we are for the task. We shall content ourselves with pointing out the instances where improvement in organization and management is necessary to permit improvement in procedural practices, as, for example, that the overburdened heads of certain agencies be relieved of administrative detail to enable them better to perform their more important duties of regulation or adjudication. In some cases the fields will undoubtedly come closer, as, for instance, where changes in internal organization may be necessary to assure just, speedy, and skilled decisions.

At the very outset of our work, it was plain that to discuss generalities and abstractions would be of little value. We had to know what the facts were; what, in fact, the various agencies did; who, in fact, made the charge or the investigation or the decision; what, in fact, was the specialized skill or knowledge or experience required to accomplish the purposes which Congress had ordained. There was no literature which would give us this. So we began our work by making our own researches.

We began by selecting those agencies which have power to make rules or regulations or to decide matters involving the interests of persons outside the Government. We did not concern ourselves with service agencies like the Bureau of Standards, purely executive agencies like the Navy Department, proprietary agencies like the T. V. A. and the R. F. C., and many, many others which did not meet our main test of rule making or adjudication affecting outside interests.

The list was still long enough—9 departments and 18 independent agencies, including all that you members of the bar wrestle with or before—all except the Patent Office. Limitations of time, personnel, and funds made us regretfully conclude not to study this large and highly technical agency.

The method of study was to obtain from an agency, first, answers to a long and elaborate questionnaire requiring documents as well as information. Then a member of our staff, after study of the questionnaire material, examined the actual working of the agency on the spot. He questioned officers and employees, examined files, attended hearings and conferences, followed specific cases in their progress through the agency. He had discussions with representatives of special groups of the bar specializing in practice before the agency concerned and conferences within the staff to compare the information which he obtained with similar information obtained by other members of the staff from other agencies. Finally a draft of a monograph was prepared, edited by the Director, and submitted to the committee and to the agency heads for consideration.

Then the committee, at its monthly meeting, heard the heads of the agency, who commented on the monograph and were examined by the committee members on points which were disputed or not clear. As a result of this hearing, inaccuracies of fact, so far as they could be ascertained, were corrected. The report was then made public, not as a conclusion of the committee but as the best statement of the facts obtainable to date, with the request for criticism, correction, and suggestion. Finally, the committee held public hearings in June and July at which over a thousand pages of testimony were taken and far more material submitted in writing from all over the country. Some of this was in vigorous criticism of our own preliminary studies, some in supplement of it and some in support of the facts there reported.

As a result of this year or more of research, the committee believes that it has amassed a wealth of material on the actual workings of the administrative system which is unique in the study of the subject. We have attempted not merely to describe the problems of the agencies and the practices and procedures used to deal with them, but to determine quantitatively the matters which come before an agency, the types of procedure most employed, and the number and classification of personnel available and necessary for different kinds of proceedings.

These studies have presented considerations which, I frankly confess, were novel to me. For instance, most of my thinking about administrative procedure had tacitly assumed that the typical proceeding was a more or less formal one of the adversary type. But the figures leave no doubt that in all agencies, even those charged almost entirely with duties of a policing character, the great bulk of matters never reach such a stage. They are disposed of—and must be disposed of from their nature and number—by agreement or understanding reached through informal procedures. This does not minimize the importance of those that go on to formal hearings, but it does caution us that there are other procedures of equal importance and that recommendations of a generalized character intended to improve one type of procedure, may, quite without any such intention, create confusion or difficulty in another.

Against most of us talk in generalities when we are thinking concretely. I remember an older man saying to me that when one heard a man begin a sentence by saying "The trouble with most women is" etc., one would be fairly sure that he was describing some particularly irritating (to him) characteristic of his own wife. What we have been trying to do by our studies is to broaden the scope of our concrete thinking.

We must think concretely not only about particular types of proceedings before the Labor Board or the Federal Trade Commission, but about the whole problem and performance of those agencies, and of many others, of many of which I had never even heard. The Grazing Service of the Department of the Interior, or the Grain Standards Administration of the Department of Agriculture, for example, are almost unknown to the average practitioner; yet their procedures, highly particularized to meet special problems, are of great importance to thousands of people. Procedures which might be highly desirable for adjudications by such agencies as the F. T. C., or the Securities and Exchange Commission would completely disrupt the activities of these other fine agencies.

THE PRESENT STAGE OF THE WORK

With the conclusion of the hearings, our work has entered the stage of consolidating and coordinating the material collected, so that problems may be considered in the light of their relative importance, their bearing upon one another, and of the pertinent facts. There has been a division of labor among the members of the committee and the staff. Some are becoming specialists in the procedure of the agencies specifically assigned to them so that they may both make proposals, and check the proposals of others in their application to concrete situations. Other members are collecting and organizing material on specific subjects, such as the procedures in use and useful for making interpretative rules, for making rules which have the force of law, and are not merely interpretative, and for making rules or standards which are requested to be supported by a record made and reviewable. Another is working on informal procedures; another on the specialization of the adjudicating function through separate deciding officers without or within the agencies, and the factors which are important in evaluating the various methods of adjudication.

All of this work will be brought together during the current month, and meetings will be resumed for the consideration of drafts of sections of the report. It is our hope and expectation that we shall conclude our work and our report before the end of this year.

I doubt whether I should have had the hardihood to accept membership on the committee if I had had at the start any conception of the time and effort which it would involve. But even now, with the hardest part still ahead, I have no regrets. For here we have had a rare opportunity to study broadly and deeply what Aristotle said many centuries ago was the most vital and worthwhile subject of all study, the art of government. It is a true art, because the materials which must be used, the factors which must be weighed are not capable of exact measurement, and problems never present themselves as repetitions of the same pattern. The history and tradition of every agency, the field in which it works, the men and women with whom it must deal, the purposes which it serves are different from those of every other. Even within the same agency the changes in problems which time brings produce vitally different responses. The Interstate Commerce Commission of the days when physical valuation and the enforcement of the recapture clause were burning issues was viewed far differently by the carriers than it is at a time when the railroads are struggling against the competition of truck and airplane. One witness before us, who, while waiting to express his unqualified approval of I. C. C. procedure, listened to the most severe criticisms of another agency, said that they brought to his mind the remark of the Victorian lady, who, at the conclusion of Antony and Cleopatra, sighed to her husband "How different from the home life of our own dear queen."

So approval or disapproval of procedures by those affected or by the bar cannot alone and without the closest analysis be accepted as a criterion. We know that a stomach ache may come from many things, from nervous exhaustion to cancer. So complaints about an agency do not necessarily mean that the complainer is a good diagnostician when he calls for an operation on the procedures. We must, of course, examine them critically and advise the operation if we find them diseased. But we examine other possible causes, too. We must see whether the complaint is perhaps, against the statute itself, or the personalities of the administrators, or because in some situations even the wisdom of Solomon could not produce satisfaction. And when we get through we shall have a judgment which cannot be mathematically proved. We may believe it to be an informed judgment and hope that others will believe so, too. But there are no formulas which can coerce its acceptance. We are dealing with an art and people can still say "I don't know anything about art, but I know what I like."

There has never been a time or place in the history of the world when it was more important than now and here to judge success or failure in the practice of the art of government by pragmatic tests. Government must work. It must accomplish the public purposes for which the times call. Without this our system will fall before the competition of others and everything which we value will fall with it. But if it must draw life and form from the fact of the unity of society, it must draw also from a fighting faith in the worth of the individual. Effectiveness does not require ruthlessness or unfairness. Neither does justice to the individual require checks to the point of administrative paralysis. The checks must come when the accumulated experience of the past shows us that they are needed and not in subservience to a dogma. We know that an advocate cannot objectively judge the merits of his own case. We know also that we must rely on the judgment of the officer who tests our skill as an applicant for a driver's license. The need for impartial decision does not require that the authority to decide be lodged in another official to whom the first must describe his observations. The problem in each case is to weigh the necessities of action, the probabilities of extraneous pressures, the limitations of the human agents through whom government must act, and devise a procedure which will permit the essential public purposes to be effectively achieved, while giving assurance that they will be achieved with impartiality and with fairness.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Kentucky has made a very sensible suggestion with reference to the handling of the bill, and undoubtedly within a day or two it will definitely be determined whether Congress is going to adjourn sine die Saturday, or within a few days thereafter.

Mr. BARKLEY. I can say to the Senate now that it will not adjourn sine die Saturday.

Mr. BURKE. That is definitely out?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is definitely out of the window.

Mr. BURKE. In addition to saying that I feel it is a very sensible suggestion that we should have the committee report, which will be available soon, before action is taken, I wish to say for myself, and I am sure other members of the committee agree, that under circumstances such as these, probably there has never been set up a more capable committee than the one appointed by the Attorney General. Every member of the committee is outstanding.

I said this morning in discussing the matter, that for a period of about a year—I think it is not now true—the activities of the committee were concentrated solely in the hands of Prof. Walter Gellhorn, who was an active member of the C. I. O., which was perfectly all right, except that the C. I. O. Lawyers' Guild in this case was fighting any bill of this kind. I am very sure that if the Senator will check on the matter he will find that for more than a year the committee did nothing except function through Professor Gellhorn. The situation may be different today.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think the Senator is mistaken about that. I do not know Professor Gellhorn. I never saw him. He was a member of the Lawyers' Guild.

Mr. BURKE. He still is. That is the same Lawyers' Guild which Mr. Berle, Mr. Jackson, and others have left because they could not countenance its subversive activities.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think that necessarily indicts the work he has done; but, in addition to Mr. Gellhorn, the committee has had an outstanding staff. Mr. Gellhorn could not investigate all the departments. The committee has gone through some of the departments with a fine-tooth comb to find out what their procedure now is, and how it ought to be remedied to produce greater speed and greater justice. We shall find out the result of that investigation when we receive the report.

Mr. BURKE. I agree with that; and I think we should have the report. Certainly if we are to be in session 6 weeks from now we should wait until we receive the report of the committee and have the subcommittee study it before taking action on this matter. I think the Senator from Kentucky can understand why some of us have felt a little uncertain in this matter when I call his attention to the fact that on May 13, 1939, when Senate bill 915 was called on the calendar, the Senator from Kentucky asked that it go over on the ground that we ought to wait until the Attorney General's committee should make its report. That was 16 months ago. However, if we are now about to receive the report, a few more days delay is not important.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the members of the committee are either engaged in the practice of law or in some Government position, or are teachers of law at universities. They could not devote all their time to the work. They receive no pay for it. They are not compensated in any way. They have been holding monthly meetings and going over the result of the investigations made by their staff. They have held public hearings upon some of the recommendations of their staff.

Mr. BURKE. Within the past few weeks.

Mr. BARKLEY. Within the past few weeks. The hearings are finished, and the committee is practically ready to make its report to the Attorney General. Yesterday the Attorney General informed me that the committee will meet in the middle of October to go over the corrected draft of its report to him. I feel the Senators and Members of Congress generally would be interested in knowing that we are about to receive the report.

Mr. BURKE. If the study of the committee is no more valuable than Mr. Louis Caldwell indicated its study of the Federal Communications Commission was, it is not of very much worth. However, it should be received.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the Senator attach any significance to the fact that by some peculiar coincidence the committee has postponed its last meeting until a time when it is hoped and believed by nearly everybody that Congress will have adjourned sine die?

Mr. BARKLEY. There is no significance to that, because more than 2 months ago, when the matter was under discussion, prior to the defense legislation, which sidetracked everything, I stated that I had been informed by the Attorney General that the report would be ready in October. He has confirmed that statement. No one then knew whether or not the Congress would adjourn by October. That was in May or June.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. A year ago I heard the statement made on the floor that the committee would soon be ready to report. A year has elapsed. We are now confronted with a situation in which there is a very great desire on the part of many Members of both branches of Congress to adjourn. The present Speaker of the House has announced from the grandstand that so far as he is concerned he will not agree to a motion to recess.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am informed that the House of Representatives probably will not vote to adjourn; so if Congress does not vote to adjourn and does not vote to take a recess, it will be in session continuously until Christmas.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. My information came from the Speaker of the House himself. It was to the effect that he thought the House would vote to adjourn.

Mr. BARKLEY. I talked to the Speaker this morning.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator has talked to him later than I have.

Mr. BARKLEY. Personally, I will say that I think Congress ought to do something to get a little rest. I think Congress is tired and worn out. I think it would do Congress good, and do the people good, if Congress should go back home and discuss with the people many of the problems with which we have been dealing.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think I was the first Member of either branch of the Congress to advocate Congress staying in session, because it was my theory that if Congress should stay in session we might keep the country out of war. In the meantime, every time the President goes on a week-end trip he comes back with a recommendation for another four- or five-billion-dollar appropriation.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is a rather facetious, and I suppose humorous, remark.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No; it is not.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is not intended to be taken seriously?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I intend it to be taken very seriously. By staying in session we have cost the American people some $15,000,000,000. We have conscription saddled upon us. By staying in session we have not been able to prevent the President from diverting one-seventh of our Navy. So I do not see any reason why we should not go home, because certainly the President cannot appropriate money in the absence of the Congress.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Missouri is entitled to his views about all these matters. We have threshed them out time and time again. The Senator does not agree with what the President has done and evidently feels in a critical mood with respect to the appropriations.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No, Mr. President; I feel that Congress is in a futile position. We might as well adjourn and go home, because the President will do what he pleases anyway.

Mr. BARKLEY. Be that as it may, we are not able to say whether or not we shall adjourn or take a recess.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I have been trying for some time to obtain recognition. I think the parliamentary situation was that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] had the floor and sat down, and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] have been dividing the time since then.

Mr. BARKLEY. I still have the floor. I am willing to yield the floor, or to yield to the Senator.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise to make a suggestion in an effort to reach a solution of the problem which will be satisfactory to everyone. I meant what I said a while ago about the attitude of the Senator from Kentucky.

Some of us have had the idea that Congress should legislate when it sees fit to legislate; but certainly there has been no disrespect for any of the members of the committee studying the problem. I, for one, should be very glad to have the result of their labors and studies.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. HATCH. Not now. I wish to state my suggestion.

I am very much opposed to this session ending without action on the bill, because I know it means that we shall start all over again at the next session and go through perhaps 1 year or 2 years with hearings, and then perhaps not attain any results.

A thought occurred to me while the Senator from Kentucky was speaking. Why not let the matter go over until the committee reports in October? Let us have the advantage of the committee's studies and findings. I am sure the subcommittee, of which I am a member, will be very glad to have the report. We will agree to that procedure, provided Congress is still in session, if the majority leader will agree that if it becomes evident that Congress is about to adjourn before we can have the study and take up the bill he will join us and take up the bill before adjournment and dispose of it one way or the other. That seems to me to be a very fair proposition.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the Senator does not intend to do so, but he is placing me in the position of stating that even though the report shall not have been received, if Congress shall decide within a week or so to adjourn, we will take up the bill.

Mr. HATCH. Yes. We could dispose of it within a day or two.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think so. We could not dispose of the bill in its present condition in a day, or 2 days, or a week.

Mr. HATCH. We will agree on the basis of a week or 2 weeks.

Mr. BARKLEY. That evades what I think is the important thing. I think it is infinitely more important to get a good bill, and one which can become a law, than it is to pass the bill on a day certain, or before the week is up.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I believe I have the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I have the floor. I have not yielded, but I am willing to yield to the Senator.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield the floor.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator ignores the fact that some of us who have been working on the bill for many, many months are convinced that we have a good bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am sure of that; but there are many more of us——

Mr. BURKE. Who have not studied the bill——

Mr. BARKLEY. Some of us, at least, have studied it. I am quite sure that a number of Members of the Senate who are not on the committee, as well as some who are on the committee, are not in entire agreement as to the virtues of the bill, and do not agree with the Senator that it is a good bill.

However, that is a matter which we can determine in a way which it seems to me would be fair to everybody. We should take advantage of all the information we can obtain. Even if the matter should go over until January, if we should adjourn—which I very seriously doubt—that is only 2 or 3 months off. The Senator will be here. Unfortunately our friend from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] will not be.

Mr. BURKE. That will be a very minor loss.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; we do not agree that that will be a minor loss, because the Senator from Nebraska is one of the ablest and, as I have often said, one of the most sincere Members of this body. Though he and I have frequently differed, to my great regret, I have never had any doubt of his sincerity or his ability in any position he took; but I should not want to be in the position of saying now that if Congress should unexpectedly adjourn in the next few days we ought to take up this bill and dispose of it before doing so.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I merely wish to make a suggestion which I think is a fair and a reasonable one. All we who have supported this bill have asked is that we have a vote on it in the Senate; that the Senate itself have an opportunity of saying whether it wants this legislation enacted or whether it does not. I think I can speak for all the committee and say that we will consent to any agreement or any suggestion which the majority floor leader has in mind to make, provided only that we have a right to vote on this measure before the adjournment of the Congress.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, I could not enter into such an agreement as that now, for the reason that I cannot tell what Congress is going to do.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator is most efficient in determining what the Senate will do.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; not always. I try to be, but I have many failures and heartaches with respect to it. I am sure the Senator realizes, however, that I feel that it would be more important and infinitely more beneficial to the country and the Government and Congress and the departments and everyone involved in this whole problem if we could pass a bill in which we could all join. I might be with the Senator from New Mexico in regard to it.

Mr. HATCH. I am quite sure the Senator will be when he fully understands this bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. If I am permitted to weigh the bill which is here now in connection with any recommendations which the committee may make, I may be here in October or November or December, or even in January fighting with the Senator for some legislation on the subject.

Mr. HATCH. Any time before January. Let us not let the session die.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think probably it is not going to die soon.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, as I stated a moment ago, this is a bill which I have not studied in detail, and about which I have no very vigorous convictions except as to the principle, but I am impressed with the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky that a bill having passed the House of Representatives, having once passed the Senate and been reconsidered for reasons which have been explained without reflection on anybody, having been considered by the Judiciary Committees of both Houses, and being now in a position for final passage, shall be postponed until a day uncertain, possibly after the sine die adjournment of this Congress, which would require this legislation in the next Congress, no matter what might be the recommendation of the Dean Acheson committee, to start in all over again, be introduced separately in each body or at least in one body, go through the Judiciary Committees of both bodies, get on the calendar, go through the legislative mill again, and possibly come out just before adjournment in the next Congress precisely where it is now.

I am reminded of a story which I heard when I was a boy about a lad named Elias out on a farm in Missouri, the son of a poor farmer. He went out and caught himself a succulent 'possum. He took it to the house. His mother was very fine at cooking 'possums. She cooked it, and just as the family was about to sit down to the table on Sunday, up drove notoriously the biggest eater in the county, a great, big man. He came in and was, of course, invited to dinner. The children were not allowed to eat at the first table when they had company. The boy kept looking through the door, and the old man kept taking one piece after another of his 'possum. The boy kept looking through, and finally he started to bulge in. His mother turned around and said, "Stand back, Elias. Stand back, Elias. Stand back, Elias." The old man took another helping of the 'possum. Finally he got down to the last leg, and passed his plate again to take the last leg, and the boy came bulging in, and his mother said, "Stand back, Elias." The boy said, "Yes; stand back, Elias, and stand back, Elias, and stand back, Elias, and that old devil is eating up the last leg of my 'possum." [Laughter.]

That is the situation of those who think this subject ought to be considered at this session of the Congress. It has been "Stand back, Elias; stand back, Elias; stand back, Elias!" now for nearly 18 months. The bill passed the Senate once and was reconsidered by unanimous consent. The understanding was that this famous committee would make a report very shortly. They may make a report at some time. They now say they are going to report at a date probably after the sine die adjournment of the Congress.

As I said a moment ago, I do not know whether I shall vote for this bill or not. I understand that it contains certain provisions for which I should not like to vote; but I think the subject is one of such consummate importance that the Congress ought to have an opportunity before it adjourns of considering the subject instead of starting the bill back all over again through the legislative mill from the beginning.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, it seems to me the suggestion made by the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] is a very sensible one, which is that since we all want the benefit—whatever there may be—of the report of the Attorney General's famous committee, if Congress is going to be in session in November, we will go ahead with our other business now; and when we return in November, the subcommittee meanwhile having had an opportunity to consider the report, we will take up the matter.

There is only this additional suggestion made by the Senator from New Mexico, that if, contrary to the present belief of everyone present, we find that within the next few days or week or so Congress is going to adjourn, we may then have a chance to bring up this matter and discuss it briefly and have a vote of the Senate. That will not deprive those who place such great faith in the Attorney General's report of any right. If that circumstance should develop, and Congress should be approaching adjournment, and we were to bring up this report, all the majority leader and the whip and the rest of them would need to say is "Why, Members of the Senate, the Attorney General's committee is going to have a report ready now."

They could even say in the middle of November, or at some other time, "We think this matter ought to go over until January"; and if they were able to convince the Senate that there was enough possible merit in waiting for the Attorney General's report they would vote down the bill, and that is all there would be to it.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. Has the Senator any idea that the Senate would be deprived of the first draft of the recommendations which apparently have already been made, judging from the statement made today?

Mr. BURKE. No; that is a very excellent thought, also, that apparently a draft is already made. The first draft needs only polishing up a little, gathering in the members of the committee who are scattered about in various places and busy, getting them in to give their final O. K. to it, so that when the Senate came to consider the matter they would have, as the Senator from New Mexico says, the benefit of the draft.

In any event, Mr. President, without delaying the mattter, it seems to me that in the absence of any agreement along this line the proponents of this measure must proceed in accordance with the program which we have heretofore outlined, and which is, in the absence of an agreement, to seek to bring up this matter immediately upon the conclusion of the civil-service measure. If someone else should be recognized then to move to bring up another measure, we should have to discuss at that time the real merits of the Logan-Walter bill in connection with that motion.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWARTZ in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting several nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

A treaty between the United States of America and Canada signed at Washington September 6, 1940, amending in their application to Canada certain provisions of the treaty for the advancement of peace between the United States of America and Great Britain, signed at Washington, September 15, 1914 (Ex. Rept. No. 11);

Executive N. A treaty between the United States of America and the Dominion of New Zealand signed at Washington, September 6, 1940, amending in their application to New Zealand, certain provisions of the treaty for the advancement of peace between the United States of America and Great Britain, signed at Washington, September 15, 1914 (Ex. Rept. No. 12); and Executive O. A convention entitled "Convention on the Provisional Administration of European Colonies and Possessions in the Americas," signed at Habana on July 30, 1940 (Ex. Rept. No. 13).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Charles Fahy to be Assistant Solicitor General.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I do not want to let this occasion pass without paying tribute to Mr. Fahy for his splendid personal qualities and brilliant record of public service. I speak of these things now because his modesty and devotion to duty are such that he has never won the public recognition he so richly deserves.

Charles Fahy has served for 5 years as general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board, having been appointed to that office immediately after the organization of the Board in September 1935. He has actively directed the Board's legal staff in this difficult, unexplored field of labor law, including opposition to more than 100 injunction suits, the preparation of the first five test cases before the Supreme Court, and the subsequent establishment before that Court of precedents to guide administration of the act. The constitutional issues, the defense of the procedures of the act and the Board, and the clarification of the scope and principles of the Labor Act placed on the Board a burden of litigation unusual in Government history. The legal staff of the Board under Mr. Fahy has consisted of about 240 attorneys in the 22 regional offices and in Washington.

Mr. Fahy personally handled the bulk of the work of the Board in the Supreme Court, and has built up an exceptionally fine record of forceful, scholarly, and successful presentation before that tribunal. In 26 cases the Court has sustained the Board fully or with modifications in 24 cases and reversed the Board in toto only twice. It is fair to say that the first Supreme Court decisions upholding the act were based on the theory of constitutional law which Mr. Fahy had developed in his brief and urged in argument before the Court.

In addition to the 26 cases decided by the Supreme Court and the numerous decisions in injunction suits, the circuit courts of appeals during these 5 years have handed down 125 final decisions in Board cases, and upheld the Board's order, in full or with modification, in 102 cases. In addition, more than 300 consent decrees have been entered in circuit courts of appeal.

Mr. Fahy was born in Rome, Ga., August 27, 1892. He received his early education in the public schools and Dar-linton high school of Rome, and at the University of Notre Dame in 1910–1911. After receiving his law degree from Georgetown University School of Law in 1914, he was admitted to the District of Columbia Bar at the age of 21. He engaged in the private practice of law in Washington, D. C., for the next 10 years, excepting a period of 17 months during the World War. He saw service overseas as a United States naval air pilot with the British and American aviation forces operating in northern France, was wounded in action, and was awarded the Navy Cross.

In 1924 he took up residence in Santa Fe, N. Mex., his present legal residence, where he engaged in practice until he was called in 1933 to serve in the Department of Interior, where he reached the office of Assistant Solicitor, until appointment as General Counsel of the Board in September 1935.

Mr. Fahy deserves the greatest measure of credit and recognition for a record in the courts unexcelled in the history of any quasi-judicial agency established by Congress. His qualities will continue to be devoted to public service in the higher position to which he has now been appointed. As he leaves his place with the National Labor Relations Board, he carries with him the warm felicitations of all those who have been privileged to know him, and the work he has done to bring stability and peace to American industry, based upon free bargaining between free men.

I ask that a list of the cases which Mr. Fahy has handled be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUPREME COURT CASES ARGUED BY CHARLES FAHY

Mr. Fahy participated in the arguments of the 5 original test cases (N. L. R. B. v. Jones & Laughlin Steel Corporation; N. L. R. B. v. Fruehauf Trailer Co.; N. L. R. B. v. Friedman-Harry Marks Clothing Co.; Associated Press v. N. L. R. B.; Washington, V. & M. Coach Co. v. N. L. R. B.) and has argued 13 cases thereafter: (N. L. R. B. v. Pennsylvania Greyhound Lines, Inc., 303 U. S. 261; N. L. R. B. v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, 303 U. S. 272; Santa Cruz Fruit Packing Co. v. N. L. R. B., 303 U. S. 453; N. L. R. B. v. Mackay Radio & Telegraph Co., 304 U. S. 333; N. L. R. B. v. Fainblatt et al., 306 U. S. 601; N. L. R. B. v. Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co., 308 U. S. 241; N. L. R. B. v. the Falk Corporation, 308 U. S. 453; N. L. R. B. v. Bradford Dyeing Association, May 20, 1940; Consolidated Edison Co. of New York v. N. L. R. B., 305 U. S. 197; International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers v. N. L. R. B., 305 U. S. 197; N. L. R. B. v. Fansteel Metallurgical Corporation, 306 U. S. 240; Ford Motor Co. v. N. L. R. B., 305 U. S. 364; N. L. R. B. v. International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, et al., 308 U. S. 413; American Federation of Labor, et al. v. N. L. R. B., 308 U. S. 401).

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask that the President be immediately notified of the confirmation of Mr. Fahy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the President will be notified immediately.

UNITED STATES MARITIME COMMISSION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, earlier today the Committee on Commerce, through its chairman, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], reported favorably the nomination of Commander Howard L. Vickery, of the United States Navy, to be a member of the United States Maritime Commission. I ask unanimous consent that the nomination may be acted upon at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the nomination.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Commander Howard L. Vickery to be a member of the United States Maritime Commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be immediately notified.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Tobias E. Diamond to be United States attorney for the northern district of Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

MAURICE M. MILLIGAN

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Maurice M. Milligan, to be United States attorney for the western district of Missouri.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the nomination of Mr. Milligan for the position of United States district attorney for Missouri prompts me to make a very brief statement.

Mr. Milligan is a former United States district attorney in Missouri. As United States district attorney, he made a most enviable record, an outstanding record.

In compliance with a law with which I had something to do, which was passed at the last session of Congress, when Mr. Milligan desired to become a candidate for the Democratic nomination for the United States Senate he resigned his position as United States district attorney, he resigned it forthrightly and honorably, in strict compliance with the law. It was an action which I appreciated very much.

I have said publicly that when an officer resigns a position to engage in political activities, he should remain out. I have announced that as a general rule, and it is one to which I have subscribed and do now subscribe.

I think that the case of Mr. Milligan is an exceptional one. He conducted his campaign for the United States Senate against Senator TRUMAN for the Democratic nomination. He was unsuccessful in the campaign. I understand that now both Senators from Missouri, the senior Senator [Mr. CLARK] and the junior Senator [Mr. TRUMAN], have recommended the reappointment of Mr. Milligan. The Attorney General, in recognition of the outstanding services rendered by Mr. Milligan as district attorney, also recommended the appointment, I am advised, and the President of the United States has made it.

I think that the record Mr. Milligan made as district attorney, and the campaign he conducted for the nomination for United States Senator, together with the recognition given to him by both Senators, is a very fine thing in behalf of all who had to do with these matters, and I wanted to say that in this instance I make an exception to the rule which I myself have announced. I think Mr. Milligan's appointment was wise, and that his nomination should be confirmed.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, in this connection I should like to say that I thank the Senator from New Mexico very much for his remarks, and I wish to add that Mr. Milligan was not an applicant for reappointment as district attorney. The initiative in the matter came from the Attorney General of the United States because of Mr. Milligan's very outstanding record when he was district attorney previously. My colleague from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], and I were very happy to concur in this nomination. In fact my colleague [Mr. TRUMAN] sent an endorsement for Mr. Milligan before he even learned of the position of the Attorney General.

I should like to add further, in connection with the Hatch Act, that Mr. Milligan, during his service as district attorney, when he was contemplating candidacy for the United States Senate, felt himself so bound by the proprieties of the situation, and also by the provisions of the Hatch Act—and I know Mr. Milligan well enough to know that even if the Hatch Act had not been on the statute books he would have felt himself so bound by the proprieties of the situation—that he did not make one single move toward perfecting an organization until the campaign was well advanced, and at a time when the condition of his docket was such as to permit him to resign honorably to run for the United States Senate.

In my opinion, the Attorney General and the President have done themselves credit, in addition to doing Mr. Milligan great honor under the circumstances in reappointing him to this office. The people of Missouri will appreciate their action and that of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate consent to the nomination?

The nomination was confirmed.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified of the confirmation, in view of the fact that there is a vacancy in the office to which Mr. Milligan has been appointed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be immediately notified.

FREDERICK ELLIOTT BIERMANN

The Legislative Clerk read the nomination of Frederick Elliott Biermann to be United States marshal for the northern district of Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The Legislative Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed. That concludes the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, September 25, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou our everlasting portion, shine forth that we may see Thee with hearts and minds which are unafraid. Let us understand the solemn meanings of life that stir the soul to its sacred depths. Bless and strengthen us with patience serene, with self-respect undebased by the humblest service, with a gladness undimmed by the dullest duty, and with a faith that looks through the clouds and feels the rapture of the eternal verities. Heavenly Father, grant that we may abound in the genius of the soul—in faith, in purity, and in hope—thus working out an eternal weight of glory. O Thou hidden source of calm repose, may we leave to Thee the deep longings of our breasts, praying for Thy refreshing grace. As each day brings new light, new inspiration, and new opportunities of being good and doing good, may we know the brotherhood and yield to love its throne. In the blessed name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3929) entitled "An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Memphis, Tenn."

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 658) entitled "An act for the relief of the estate of Dr. B. L. PERMITTING ASSIGNMENT OF CLAIMS UNDER PUBLIC CONTRACTS

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 10464) to assist in the national-defense program by amending sections 3477 and 3737 of the Revised Statutes to permit the assignment of claims under public contracts, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to know whether the committee has agreed to offer an amendment to the bill as suggested before the Rules Committee?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I believe I am not certain as to what amendment the chairman of the Rules Committee has reference to at the moment.

Mr. SABATH. There were two amendments, one to strike out the provisions 1 and 2, on page 2, that no assignment would take place without the consent of the department or agency concerned.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; there is no committee amendment dealing with that particular phase of the matter to be offered.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SABATH. If this request is granted, will it be possible to offer amendments?

The SPEAKER. If the request be granted, the bill would be considered under the 5-minute rule in the House as in the Committee of the Whole, and any germane amendment could be offered.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand this matter, a rule has been granted on the bill. Ordinarily there would be 1 hour's debate on the rule on the question of whether or not the House would adopt the rule, then there would be 1 hour's consideration of the bill in the House. Then the bill would be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. I take it the gentleman's purpose in submitting this request is to do away with consideration of the rule and to bring the bill itself up for consideration under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The gentleman is correct, to avoid the necessity of using time on the rule.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, let me say to the gentleman from Texas that I would probably agree it would be a waste of time to consider the rule, for it would be granted anyway, but I always like to proceed in an orderly manner. I do not believe there is any demand for time on this side of the aisle, but I always believe in orderly procedure.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. This is a unanimous consent request, I suggest to my friend from New York. If there is objection I will withdraw the request and proceed in the customary manner.

Mr. FISH. Had the gentleman consulted me about the matter I would probably be perfectly willing to go along with the gentleman. We have no requests for time on this side.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Like all of you I am a busy man and it is quite out of the question to go around asking each of more than 400 Members if they would object.

Mr. FISH. I happen to be the ranking minority member on the Rules Committee.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I beg the gentleman's pardon and most respectfully request him now personally and individually not to have any objection to this procedure.

Mr. FISH. I have no objection whatever to anything the gentleman asks.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I thank my friend.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman state whether this bill has any bearing whatever on the Mexican claims bill we had under consideration a little while ago?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; it does not have anything to do with the Mexican claims.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 3477 and 3737 of the Revised Statutes be amended by adding at the end of each such section the following new paragraph:

"The provisions of the preceding paragraph shall not apply in any case in which the moneys due or to become due from the United States or from any agency or department thereof, under a contract providing for payments aggregating $3,000 or more, are assigned to a bank, trust company, or other financing institution, including any Federal lending agency: Provided,

"1. That in the case of any contract entered into prior to the date of approval of this act, no claim shall be assigned without the consent of the head of the department or agency concerned;

"2. That in the case of any contract entered into after the date of approval of this act, no claim shall be assigned if it arises under a contract which forbids such assignment;

"3. That unless otherwise expressly permitted by such contract any such assignment shall cover all amounts payable under such contract and not already paid, shall not be made to more than one party, and shall not be subject to further assignment, except that any such assignment may be made to one party as agent or trustee for two or more parties participating in such financing;

"4. That in the event of any such assignment the assignee thereof shall file written notice of the assignment together with a true copy of the instrument of assignment with—

"(a) the General Accounting Office,

"(b) the contracting officer or the head of his department or agency,

"(c) the surety or sureties upon the bond or bonds, if any, in connection with such contract, and

"(d) the disbursing officer, if any, designated in such contract to make payment.

Notwithstanding any law to the contrary governing the validity of assignments, any assignment pursuant to this act shall constitute a valid assignment for all purposes."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I shall attempt a brief explanation of this bill. Under existing law, claims against the Government may not be assigned. The agencies of the Government interested in the program of preparedness, after full consideration, have arrived at the conclusion that this legislation which would permit the assignment of claims arising out of contracts would enable a great many people to contract with the Government using the claims against the Government as a basis for credit, who cannot now do so.

This proposed legislation is unanimously agreed to by the members of the Committee on the Judiciary and, I believe, is unanimously agreed to by the agencies of the Government in primary responsibility for the work of preparedness.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Is it not a fact that the committee held two or three hearings on this matter and that at the chairman's suggestion representatives of the departments interested appeared?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is correct.

Mr. MICHENER. We also had representatives of security companies and insurance companies, who might be interested. The result is this bill. The gentleman does not contemplate offering any amendments to the bill as finally written by the committee, I understand.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The gentleman from Michigan is correct.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. FISH. This comes with a unanimous report from the committee.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It does.

Mr. FISH. There are no minority views whatever?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, in the committee discussion was had with respect to section 2 on page 2 which provides that in the case of any contract entered into after the date of approval of this act no claim shall be assigned if it arises under a contract which forbids such assignment.

Some of the members of the committee who are interested in this bill from the standpoint of the small manufacturer questioned the propriety of this provision for the reason that it was felt the bill was intended broadly to make assignment easy; whereas this particular provision rather restricted the right of assignment. I was one of those, if you will pardon a personal reference, who felt that way about this particular section, and there were some others on the committee who expressed sympathy to that viewpoint, including my distinguished colleague the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], who indicates that he also did. It was explained by the departments, however, that it is necessary in the national defense that some degree of secrecy be maintained with respect to these different contracts for the manufacture of material used in national defense: War material, for instance, the character of which it would not be in the national interest to disclose. In order to protect the Government it was necessary, therefore, to repose in the various departments the right to insist that the claim for the contract should not be assigned. It was pointed out that if the claim based upon the contract were assigned the financing institution to which the claim would be assigned would naturally insist that it be advised as to the nature of the contract because such institution would not be willing to advance money on a claim without knowing anything about the contract upon which the claim was based.

For this reason those of us who felt as I have indicated, have rather reluctantly gone along on this section and have withdrawn any objection to it. However, we feel that in doing so we can rely upon the assurances of the War and Navy Departments that they will not exercise improperly, arbitrarily, or capriciously this right of refusing assignments, but, on the contrary, will exercise it only in those instances where they feel that the exercise of it is in the national interest and for the benefit of national defense and because of the secrecy feature to which I have referred.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. May I say to the gentleman that he has stated in much clearer language than I possibly could, my feeling exactly so far as this provision is concerned. I feel that he has stated the feeling of the majority of the Judiciary Committee. Ordinarily, if conditions were not as they are, possibly we would insist on a little different legislation, but this is national defense, and we must accept some of the things which the departments tell us, so far as secrecy in the department is concerned.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I thank the gentleman. I may say that those of us who feel as I have indicated do not want to be placed in the position of doing anything that could possibly be construed as putting any obstacle in the way of full national defense.

Mr. YOUNGDAHL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. YOUNGDAHL. I am advised that the policy of the National Defense Commission is to spread out these contracts as much as possible with smaller contractors, thereby breaking down the larger contract into several units. The purpose of this bill, as I understand it, is to give these small contractors the benefit of this additional credit; is that correct?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I think that is a correct answer. The purpose of the bill is to enable these small contractors to use their claims against the Government as a basis to enable them to continue to perform other contracts.

Mr. YOUNGDAHL. Does the gentleman feel that the provision in this bill requiring the consent of the agency making the contract will in any way act as a deterrent to the purpose for which this bill is being passed?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I make this explanation to the gentleman who introduced the first bill covering these matters? If this bill is not enacted there can be no assignment of claims. That is the first proposition. The agencies of the Government which have responsibility are themselves responsible for proposing this legislation. They came down to the Committee on the Judiciary, as the gentleman from Michigan explained, and indicated their desire to increase as far as possible the number of persons who could bid on these contracts, and who could help the Government in this emergency. They said, however, with reference particularly to some of the equipment material, with regard to which secrecy had to be preserved, that they did not want to take the responsibility of advising that in every case these claims should be assignable, or that there would not be in the nature of things some claims that should not be assigned. As the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] has fully explained, the committee after full consideration agreed that it would not like to take the responsibility of trying to override the expressed judgment of those who are themselves in responsibility with regard to the whole program.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SABATH: On page 1, line 10, strike out "$3,000" and insert "$1,000."

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, this bill aims to aid the small-business man and the small manufacturer. The large manufacturers and the big-business men do not need this relief, but the little fellow does. Consequently, I feel that we should not preclude those with claims or contracts below $3,000. I think the restriction of $1,000 is low enough, therefore I am offering the amendment.

I had hoped that the Judiciary Committee would agree to strike out paragraphs 1 and 2, which would reduce the amount from $3,000 to $1,000 and which have been explained by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER]; but the committee has not agreed to strike out those provisions. As it is, these little fellows will be left at the mercy of the departments. They have no agents or representatives here, and they will find it mighty hard, if not impossible, when a Department clerk says, "No; you cannot assign your contract," to get an assignment approved. I am especially interested in the little fellow, as all of us should be. The big fellows do not need this proposed benefit. They have adequate money or can get it from the banks.

So I have introduced this amendment in the interest of the little fellow, because, as I say, the big fellows are taking care of themselves even against the best interests of our country and against our efforts to safeguard and provide proper defenses for our own Nation. Consequently, I feel that the amendment I have offered should be adopted.

Mr. Speaker, passing on, I observe in this morning's press reports that the Du Ponts and their affiliates are monthly exporting $10,000,000 worth of war munitions that finally reach aggressor nations. They well know how to effect such an evil design. These munitions makers have, according to the press, unfriendly foreign agents and representatives in their own offices in America. I think it is manifestly unfair for the Government to provide millions and millions of dollars to help manufacture much-needed articles of defense and then to allow these very same men who get the Government aid, the millions and millions of dollars to enlarge and maintain their plants, to use those plants for the manufacture and surreptitious exportation to powers distinctly unfriendly to American purposes $10,000,000 worth of their products monthly.

Mr. Speaker, I insert an article by Guy Richards, of the Chicago Tribune Press Service, mark it, Chicago Tribune Press Service, appearing in today's Washington Times-Herald; and it is indeed deplorable to read that the richest corporations and the richest men in this country obtaining the greatest protection that is afforded by any country in the world should be guilty of such offenses as are described in this article. Especially in view of the fact, as I have stressed, that most of these materials are most badly needed for our own national defense. Operations like these cause justifiable resentment by all our good, unselfish citizens. It appears to me that such corporations are not satisfied with legitimate business, with millions in profits, which make it easy for them to contribute directly and indirectly to the campaign funds of Republican committees and to the Willkie campaign fund, but by bootleg methods that are doing things detrimental to their own country. No doubt, this trade nets them double or triple profits and therefore, as I have stated, it is no wonder they so willingly contribute to the Willkie and Republican committee campaign funds.

The article says:

AGENTS IN DU PONT OFFICES GUIDE WAR GOODS TO AXIS—UNITED STATES TRADE WITH GERMANY, ITALY PUT AT $10,000,000 MONTHLY

(By Guy Richards)

NEW YORK, September 23.—Despite the British blockade, American industrialists have found corkscrew routes for pouring into Germany and Italy about $10,000,000 worth of vital war materials every month.

Vast stores of oil, copper, machinery, and cotton are finding their way to Axis territory through Arctic Ocean ports, Spain, Portugal, Cuba, Mexico, and Russia.

BACKED BY BIG BUSINESS

At least five nations are lending their services to American businessmen who have found gold-lined routes for shipping blockade-barred goods into Germany.

These scattered suppliers, dealing through their New York headquarters, have established contacts with agents all over the world. The agents are sponsored in this country by amazingly influential business interests.

It was learned, for example, that the American representative of Juan March, financial backer of General Franco, Spanish dictator, has his desk in the offices of Francis I. du Pont Co., at 1 Wall Street. He receives a regular salary from the firm, which is engaged in the commodity and brokerage business.

BRANCH IN WILMINGTON

Three members of the famous Wilmington (Del.) clan that controls E. I. du Pont de Nemours are partners in this Wall Street firm which also has a branch in Wilmington. The interest of its senior member, Francis I. du Pont, is secured with 2,000 shares of Hercules Powder common stock—an investment which was forced out of direct du Pont control by a Sherman antitrust suit of 1912.

Another desk in the Francis I. du Pont office is occupied by Avelino Montes, Jr., the man whom German firms here know as the expert on how to get shipments through Mexico.

The two men—Jose M. Mayorga, Spanish emissary of Franco's Juan March, and Mexico's Avelino Montes—sit side by side in a comfortable suite in the du Pont offices, on the ninth floor of the building. They are intimate friends and former classmates at the Harvard Business School. By manufacturers anxious to obtain deliveries in Germany they are known as exactly the right people to see.

AVOID EMBARGO LIST

In the newly found loopholes of the blockade thrown around the axis by the British Navy and American embargoes, the chief beneficiaries in the United States are cotton, oil, and machinery suppliers and the giant copper concerns which have somehow managed to keep their metal, in both scrap and ingot form, off the American embargo list.

How profitable the loopholes have proved for American businessmen can be gleaned from the figures of the Department of Commerce.

They show that shipments to Spain and Portugal skyrocketed more than $22,000,000 over last year's figures for the first 7 months of this year. Cotton, oil, machinery, and scrap iron are the items leading the big increase.

COPPER TO RUSSIA

To Russia, America shipped $11,374,940 worth of copper in the 7 months ending July 31 this year. None was shipped in the same period last year. Exports of all sorts to the Soviet Union jumped to $48,342,000 this year from $23,310,037 in the same 7 months of 1939—a rise of more than 100 percent.

Exports to Cuba soared $7,700,000; to Mexico, $8,100,000. These figures may indicate why Spain and Portugal have been spared so long from involvement with the Axis Powers in actual war.

But a tightening of the British blockade has shifted the flow of goods over the Pacific.

The rising flow of trade to Siberian ports has led to the opening of branches throughout Japan and Russia of the German forwarding agency of Harry W. Hamacher, a former official of Schenker & Co., Berlin, with 208 offices scattered all over the world.

In the Orient, Hamburg-American Line offices have been turned over to Hamacher. In New York, Schenker's agent is the Draeger Shipping Co. of 17 State Street.

The furious pace of trans-Pacific trade has brought numerous charterings by Russia of American tankers. The Amtorg Trading Co. has just leased three speedy Swedish motorships and last week six miscellaneous freighters were booked by the Soviet officials to carry cotton and wheat from West Coast American ports to Vladivostok.

CESSION OF BASES

Thus it is in the Pacific that informed circles here believe will come the next Anglo-American move to shut the back door, now wide open, through which invaluable aid is flowing to Germany. This necessity for a joint United States-British blockade in the Pacific is seen as the basis behind official discussions now in progress, reportedly involving the cession of naval bases to the United States in Australia, New Zealand, and Singapore.

Meanwhile, from Cuban harbors, loaded tankers owned by American subsidiaries daily leave port—only to return 3 days later, having unloaded their cargoes on daring neutral blockade runners. These, in turn, set off on long voyages that scrape the Arctic Circle to reach Petamo and Murmansk, and thence transship their loads to Germany.

Such shipments, usually from South America to Cuba, do not appear on United States export figures. Their value is estimated at about $3,000,000 weekly and raises to $10,000,000 the weekly figure for axis-bound merchandise arranged for in New York.

COMMERCE FIGURES

Official measurement of the traffic, showing the swell of exports over last year, is available in the figures of the Department of Commerce. They show that the five countries chiefly participating in it have bought goods valued at $61,127,281 more than in the same first 7 months of 1939, thus:

	1940	1939
Spain	$23,255,000	$8,431,000
Portugal	12,090,000	4,655,000
Russia	48,342,000	23,310,037
Mexico	51,702,401	45,602,992
Cuba	49,498,674	41,761,765
Total	184,888,075	123,760,794

It is alleged by a distinguished Senator that a large American corporation which supplies glass for instruments and weapons for the Army and the Navy is maintaining close relation with a German concern involving disclosure of secret processes; that one of the most important metals, invaluable in the manufacture of airplanes, is controlled by a corporation half of whose stock is reliably reported to be owned by the German Chemical Trust; and that information has come to hand that some large concerns important to national defense have deferred national interests to monetary consideration, by giving preference to foreign munitions orders.

I feel that such practice is shameful and reprehensible and should be stopped. Moreover, we should discontinue the exportation of many raw materials, scrap iron, oils, including all strategic materials, to other countries, especially Japan, which uses these materials in the wanton, cold-blooded massacre of defenseless old men, women, and children in righteous, worthy China.

I do not desire to do or say anything that might unfavorably involve us, but I think that drastic action by our Government will force these Japanese war lords to come down off their high horses, shed some of their conceit, and discontinue their continual bellicose attitude toward America.

Also, I have read in today's newspaper that Russia desires to become more friendly toward the United States and she desires to negotiate the purchase of certain articles for her own use. I believe that due favorable consideration should be given to that proposal, because she will, perhaps, unfortunately, be the only country in Europe, except chivalrous Great Britain, open to our future export surpluses.

Obviously, the Fascists and the capitalistic group of this country dislike the Russian form of Government, but that should not be our national concern. Russia always has been friendly toward the United States, notably during the Civil War; and she does not need our assistance. She is and will be able to care for herself; therefore, why should we not cultivate and promote friendly commercial relations with her?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to appear in the light of opposing any amendment which appears to benefit the small manufacturer, and especially those manufacturers in the central portion of this country who have not received contracts to date of any substantial amount in the aggregate in connection with the national defense. The issue involved in this amendment was discussed in the Judiciary Committee and before the Rules Committee when the rule was before that committee. The suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois that the amount be reduced from $3,000 to $1,000 was considered. Originally the amount suggested was $10,000, which would have meant that no contract of less than $10,000 could be assigned, but the committee has agreed upon $3,000. The reason for the agreement is that it has been represented to us by the departments that there are few contracts awarded by the department that amount to less than $3,000, and that an amendment to reduce that amount to $1,000 would serve no real purpose. Therefore, I am reluctantly in the position of opposing this amendment, although it may appear that the amendment is intended for the benefit of the small manufacturer. I do it from a practical standpoint and in order to go along with the War and Navy Departments in the national defense, a thing we are all interested in doing at this critical time.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. Is it not a fact that I have shown to the gentleman, who was inclined to side with me, that out of 53 of these contracts, a list of which I had before me, there were 17 that were below $3,000, around $2,000, or $1,800, the little fellows? They are the people who need financial assistance. They cannot get it from the banks.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. It is manifest that any isolated list which might be selected might produce the effect indicated by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois. We are taking a broad position on this matter and are following out the desires of the War and Navy Departments in the broad purpose of national defense. I believe we are justified in it, and I further believe that no prejudice to the small manufacturer will follow our action.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MASSINGALE. May I make the suggestion in connection with the gentleman's argument that, inasmuch as he has just stated that there are comparatively few contracts that involve less than $3,000, then that should be an argument in favor of this amendment. It will not take much more work or much more time to grant that request.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I recognize the gentleman's argument. His arguments are always interesting and his contributions are always worth while. However, in this emergency I believe the gentleman will agree that unless there is some compelling reason to the contrary we should go along with those agencies of government that are charged with the national defense. That is what the Congress is trying to do generally in a patriotic way.

In closing may I, as a representative of the Middle West, from the State of Nebraska, call the attention of the Congress to the fact that the strip of States including North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, and Oklahoma comprises the States which has lost population in the 1940 census. Severe and protracted drought conditions have existed there. We have the assurance of the War and the Navy Departments that in the national-defense program industry is to be decentralized. This decentralization will not only benefit the States to which these industries will be sent in the Middle West but will also be in the interest of sound national defense. In Germany the industrial plants are scattered throughout the length and breadth of the land so there will not be concentration and there will not be grave danger of attack from the air on a centralized industrial area. This is a wise policy, and it is well that it is to be put into effect in this country. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, I have asked for recognition at this time not primarily to supplement what the gentleman from Nebraska has just said, but to give you what I think is a picture that compliments these agencies of Government dealing with this problem.

In the first place, there would have been no such legislation as this pending before you, probably, except for the fact that the agencies of Government now in responsibility came to the Committee on the Judiciary and asked for this sort of legislation because they wanted to broaden, as the gentleman from Nebraska has indicated he wants to have done, the field from which they can draw bidders on these contracts. The way they proposed to have it done was to repeal or amend—it amounts to repeal—existing law which prohibits the assignment of claims against the Government. There is a good deal involved in this matter of dealing with assigned claims.

The reason the $3,000 limit was insisted upon, not by the committee in the first instance but by these agencies of Government, is that frequently some small man who can train a few pilots wants to buy a plane. He does not have the money to do it. In such a situation they can help him by permitting him to assign his claim for $3,000. They said, however, and it seems sensible, that there had to be some limit in administrative cost and expense, because it would cost just as much, probably, for the governmental agencies to handle a $1,000 claim as a much larger one.

As the gentleman from Nebraska said, our limit was $10,000 originally. It was at the suggestion of these agencies of Government that we reduced it to $3,000. They said, "We do not want just to take the bridle off. We cannot afford to be dealing with smaller amounts. Anybody who wants to contract with the Government, if he stands pretty well, does not really have to assign a claim for less than $3,000." So everybody, the agencies of Government, have agreed on it, as has the Committee on the Judiciary, and I hope the House will stand by the bill as we have all agreed on it and as we have all reported with reference to it. The ones who had the greatest difficulty about it, perhaps, were the accounting agencies of the Government,

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. GILCHRIST. What is the evil about allowing all claims to be assigned?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I have tried to state that. First, there is the expense of administration and investigation and all that kind of thing on the part of the Government, and then the committee did not feel from all the statements that were made that there was any real reason from the standpoint of dealing with these problems for having claims of less than $3,000 assignable. It was a cut down on the part of the committee from $10,000 to $3,000.

Mr. GILCHRIST. I may say that in my State every claim is assignable, but, of course, is subject to any defenses that the party may have against the contract, and I do not see any evil in allowing any claims against the Government to be assigned.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I will say to my friend that in 1846 a law was passed prohibiting assignment of claims against the Government. Such assignment was void, and in 1862 assignment of contracts was prohibited. For the very reason the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] has indicated, a general desire to broaden the field and get these contracts away from the great, big agencies, it was decided to permit these assignments, with safeguards first as to the amount and then the other safeguards contained in the bill.

Mr. GILCHRIST. This bill ought to be passed anyway.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I hope the gentleman will stand by the committee.

Mr. YOUNGDAHL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. YOUNGDAHL. As the gentleman knows, I introduced a similar bill several weeks ago and I am in favor of this legislation.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right. The gentleman from Minnesota introduced the first bill and has had a most helpful and cooperative attitude all the way through.

Mr. YOUNGDAHL. The point I would like to be assured on is this: In order to get the consent of the agency to this credit, does the gentleman feel there will be any unnecessary delay in getting such consent?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I believe that this will give assurance that the agencies of the Government are tremendously interested in speeding up this program and would have every reason not to delay.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I am a member of the Judiciary Committee, but it so happened I could not attend the hearings on this bill.

I think any arbitrary fixing by the Judiciary Committee or any other committee ought to be discussed just a little. I am not concerned with any of these war contracts or with any that will be let, and I do not believe there will be one let in my district, but they have fixed $3,000. Why did they do it? Just a guess, an arbitrary matter, and here is an amendment that—while it does not suit me—I do not think there ought to be any limit on the amount of the contract before an assignment can be had of it. If you can assign one for $50,000, why can you not assign one for $500?

The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. McLAUGHLIN], in arguing in support of the committee's bill, made the statement that there would be comparatively few contracts of less valuation than $3,000. If so, it is not going to hurt the Government of the United States, and I imagine they can dig up down there in the War Department or the Navy Department a clerk every now and then who can handle the assignment of claims involving less than $3,000 just as readily as they can those that involve $3,000 or more. I just believe we ought to be square about it and treat everybody alike. A $1,000 claim or a $500 claim under a contract may be just as important to some of these fellows that are going to bid on them as a $100,000 claim bid on by the Du Ponts or some large concern that is engaged in the manufacture of war materials, and therefore I am going to support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MASSINGALE) there were—ayes 12, noes 50.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Speaker, this matter had been overlooked for a good many years until recently, when our worthy colleague, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. YOUNGDAHL] brought it to the attention of certain members of the Banking and Currency Committee. We had lost sight of the fact that there was a prohibition in existing law against the pledging of Government contracts as security for loans by banks. The matter was presented to the legislative counsel and a bill was drafted and introduced by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. YOUNGDAHL] which I think is a better bill than the one before us. However, there will be no attempt on the part of anyone that I know of to embarrass this legislation by moving to substitute the Youngdahl bill for the pending measure, because this is a bill that is very definitely in the right direction.

At the present time there are something over $6,000,000,000 of excess reserves in the banks of the Nation which are frozen tight, due to the fact that the Government has come in competition with private lending to the point where there is no demand upon the banks for this money.

Inasmuch as whatever prosperity we are enjoying or which we shall enjoy in the immediate future is going to be largely dependent upon Government spending, and inasmuch as Government spending is going to be largely through defense contracts, it seems only logical that we take this way of thawing out some of these billions which are now frozen in the banks as excess reserves.

The only opportunity for investment left to private enterprise at the present time is in the Government bonds which raise the money to furnish the cash and credit to carry on this defense program. As I see it, this is a movement to allow private enterprise to get back some of the opportunity to invest private funds which has been constantly taken away from it during the past 7 years.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. As chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, I want to express appreciation for the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. YOUNGDAHL] having pioneered the field of the proposed legislation. He introduced the first bill, and it is a fine bill. This bill follows along the line of the Youngdahl bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I thank the gentleman.

I think the purpose of the two bills is identical. However, there are certain restrictions in this bill which do not appear in the original proposal which I think might be advantageously eliminated. I do not see any particular reason why an assignee should have to give notice to the contracting officer or head of his department or agency. There may be some justification for giving notice to the surety on the bonds which the contractor has to put up. Of course, as a matter of protection, there is no particular objection to the assignee giving notice to the General Accounting Office, but there is no provision in this bill which authorizes payment directly to the assignee in case of default by the assignor. So it seems to be somewhat redundant unless there is a further provision made in the bill for the further protection of the bank or trust company or individual making the loan.

I think in the main, however, it is good legislation and should be enacted.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, House Resolution 605 will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication which was read by the Clerk:

SEPTEMBER 18, 1940.

Hon. SAM RAYBURN,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, U. S., Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby respectfully tender my resignation as chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands.

It is my intention to remain on the committee as a member.

Respectfully,

RENÉ L. DEROUEN.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, which I send to the desk, and I move its immediate adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 610

Resolved, That J. W. ROBINSON, of Utah be, and he is hereby, elected chairman of the standing committee of the House of Representatives on Public Lands.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include therein a statement on the Institute of Public Relations maintained by Westminster College.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include an address made over the radio by Maj. Gen. William C. Rivers, United States Army, retired.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may insert in the remarks which I just made the article from which I quoted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PUNISHMENT FOR DESTRUCTION OF WAR MATERIAL OR WAR PREMISES OR UTILITIES

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 604 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 604

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 10465, a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to punish the willful injury or destruction of war material, or of war premises or utilities used in connection with war material, and for other purposes," approved April 20, 1918. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendments under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], as is usual. I, myself, will take only a minute.

Mr. Speaker, this is a rule that will permit H. R. 10465 to be taken up under the 5-minute rule and amendments to be offered and considered. It provides for 1 hour of general debate.

The purpose of the bill is to provide protection against injury to and interference with or destruction of the national defenses of the United States.

The bill was reported unanimously by the Judiciary Committee, and the rule comes from the Committee on Rules with a unanimous report.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to proceed out of order.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

DOES CANDIDATE PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT GIVE AID AND COMFORT TO HITLER—AID IN EXPLOITING THE AMERICAN WORKER?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, does Candidate Roosevelt, acting as a candidate for public office, using the powers of the Executive Office, sabotage our national-defense program; give aid and comfort to Hitler? Does he, by permitting labor politicians to collect excessive sums from union members or from those desiring to join unions as a prerequisite to doing work in connection with our national-defense program, aid in exploiting union and nonunion workingmen?

AID AND COMFORT TO HITLER?

In wartime, giving aid and comfort to a public enemy is treason. You may furnish your own characterization of what like conduct is during peacetime, or, more properly, during a period of preparation for national defense.

Let me state the facts. They are few and simple and, upon them, as you believe in our Government, as you hope for eternal salvation, place upon the record your own conclusions.

First. The candidate, seeking reelection for a third term as President, states that Hitler is the enemy of our country and that we are in imminent danger of invasion by him if Great Britain loses the present struggle. Let us assume that statement to be true.

Second. To meet this threatened danger, Candidate Roosevelt, speaking as President, warns us that, if we would not lose our rights as freemen, see the destruction of our Government, and become vassals of Hitler, we must use to the utmost our financial and industrial resources and conscript the youth of the land in a preparedness program. Again, let us assume that that statement is correct.

Third. Again, he tells us that, in addition to preparing all of the implements of war which we, by any stretch of the imagination, may need for our national defense here at home, it is vital, to make our defense impregnable, that we send—and he has sent—to the aid of Great Britain, planes, trucks, artillery, warships, munitions of all kinds. Once more let us assume, for the sake of the argument, that he is correct.

Having the foregoing in mind, it necessarily follows, as does night the day, that anything which interferes with, hinders, or delays or adds excessive cost to the production of those things which we need for defense or which are to be sent to Great Britain, gives aid and comfort to her enemy, Hitler; the man, who, we are told, will, before this war is over, invade our shores. There is no escape from the foregoing conclusion.

Now, what has the President done, what is he doing, which would justify the charge that he is giving aid and comfort to Hitler?

By his acts in the past and by his present conduct and by his inaction he has raised, and is raising, the cost of, and is delaying and hindering the construction and fabrication of, munitions of war. You want the particulars as to how this is being done and perhaps as to why. Both are here given you.

HOW WAS THIS DONE?

One instance from the past—and that instance can be multiplied—will suffice on the charge that he has hindered the national-defense program by his inaction.

The Labor Department and the N. L. R. B. are under the influence of the President. No one can truthfully gainsay that proposition. When at Detroit the Bohn Aluminum and Brass Corporation was working on orders of the Army and the Navy for the production of materials directly connected with our defense program a C. I. O. union, in one instance for 24 days, and in the other for 42 days, not only held up production but refused to deliver materials belonging to the Government to Government officials. The delivery of airplane motors was prevented. The national-defense program was delayed. The President took no action.

The matter was called to the attention of the War and the Navy Departments and to the attention of the Department of Labor, for whose activities, as Commander in Chief and as President, Candidate Roosevelt is directly responsible; for whose achievements he claims all credit; and neither remedied the situation.

For proof of the foregoing you are referred to a letter, under date of October 20, 1939, written by then Acting Secretary of the Navy Charles Edison, to the chairman of the House Committee on Naval Affairs, in reply to House Resolution 314, which had been introduced by me.

PRESENT PROGRAM BEING DELAYED

Come now to the present situation. Congress has appropriated billions of dollars, much of it without adequate consideration as to where or when or how it was to be spent. Blank checks were given the President for billions. All this because the President insisted that time was vital, that the appropriations must be made at once.

If the danger is as great and as imminent as we are told, then haste—the utmost haste—is vital, and delay may jeopardize our safety.

Throughout the country activities of every conceivable kind having to do with preparedness are being speeded up. Notwithstanding Candidate Roosevelt's insistence that there must be no delay, men are being denied the opportunity to work on the defense program. Again a multitude of instances will not be cited. Two will serve the purpose.

Into my office have come letters, as they have into the offices of other Congressmen, and to me have been made statements by responsible men, that carpenters seeking jobs at Fort Custer, in Calhoun County, Mich., are required to pay a union membership fee of $55. The membership fee in the adjoining county of Kalamazoo, according to this information, is $37.50. When a Kalamazoo county union man in good standing applies for a job in the adjoining county of Calhoun, at Battle Creek, the Calhoun County union officials insist that the difference between the $55 and the $37.50 be paid to it.

Here is an instance of a union man in good standing, with his membership card in order, if this information be true—and it comes from a reliable source—required to pay an additional $17.50 before he can go to work on a Government project. Is this union man being exploited? And if so, by whom?

By a Member of this House I was informed yesterday that where men applied for work on a Massachusetts defense project, calling for the expenditure of millions, which needed men, they were told by the contractor that they could not be employed unless they joined the union. From the same source came the information that the union fee there was $75 per man.

Oh, yes; the candidate and the majority party insisted a few days ago that we must conscript the youth of the Nation for national defense, and the youth of the Nation are to be conscripted.

If son John is to be conscripted for training in an Army camp, for fighting in the trenches, is there any reason why his brother, Henry, who volunteers to work in building the cantonment necessary for shelter of John, the conscripted man, or in the factory producing the gun or the clothing which John must wear should be denied the right to work until he has paid fifty, seventy-five, or a hundred dollars?

The candidate insisted, and the majority party backed him in his demand, that the National Guard must be called from their homes for national defense.

But when an honest, patriotic American, who must depend upon his labor for his livelihood and for the livelihood of his family, seeks to enlist for work at going wages on a Government preparedness job, the union, with the candidate's connivance, steps in and demands that the workingman, the American citizen, pay tribute to that union before he can serve his country.

By limiting employment on the preparedness program to only those who belong to a particular organization, production is hindered, delayed, and the cost rendered excessive; thus aid and comfort is given to those who would invade us.

Talk about "fifth columnists," bottle-necks in industry. How could any man or any group of men more effectively hinder and delay our preparedness program than to insist that men who lack the money must first pay a membership fee before they can go to work on the program? That only members of their own organization shall be permitted to work for the national defense?

EXPLOITING THE UNION MAN

Not only are nonunion men denied an opportunity to contribute their services toward the national defense until they have paid a fee fixed in some instances by union officials with an eye on political preferment but members in good standing in their unions are required, if they would hold their jobs, to pay what to many appear to be excessive, unconscionable sums to join and to retain membership in their unions.

Why should a union man in one county, for example, in Kalamazoo County, in good standing, having paid every obligation imposed upon him by his union or the officials of his union, if he wants to cross the county line and work in Calhoun County, at Fort Custer, be required to contribute another $17.50?

Who is it that determines the membership fee in the union? Who is it that decides what the monthly dues, the special assessments, shall be? And what becomes of the money?

Does the rank and file in the local union organization fix the amount of the membership fee, the amount of the dues and special assessments? How much does the member, the working member, of the local union know or have to say about the disposition of the millions of dollars that are collected?

Preparing for war as the Nation is, is there any reason why the resources of the country, of the individual worker, should have imposed upon these resources an added burden of millions of dollars without an accounting as to when and where and for what purposes and by whom it is spent?

Why should a man who wants to join a union, a man who is a patriotic American citizen, willing—yes; anxious—to do his part toward national defense, be required to pay fifty, seventy-five, a hundred or more dollars for that privilege?

Are union officials to hold the gate through which labor, including their own members, must go to aid in the national defense and open it only when and so far as they may choose? How can this Nation prepare to meet the threatened danger, if, of the millions of American workers called and needed, only those may enter through the factory's door who have submitted to a private organization's demand?

Of what use to "conscript industry," if the leaders of organized labor are to retain control over the labor which operates and renders industrial plants effective?

I do not believe that the rank and file of organized labor—honest, patriotic men and women as they are—nor will I believe until they so state themselves that either William Green, president of the A. F. of L., or John L. Lewis, head of the C. I. O., will go before the American people with the announced policy that only members of a labor organization shall be permitted to work at the lucrative jobs supplied by the national-defense program.

I am asking the presidents of those two great organizations whether they are back of the program which declares that, before an American citizen can work in an industry geared to national defense, on a project, for example, the building of cantonments for shelter for conscripted soldiers, that man must pay a fee fixed by some union official?

I ask these two great leaders, would not such a policy substitute for our Government of, by, and for the people, a government of, by, and for union officials?

I ask the president of the American Federation of Labor and the president of the Congress of Industrial Organizations: Are you or your organizations permitting men who are acting, or assuming to act, as representatives of your organizations to require the payment of fifty, one hundred, or more dollars, by a patriotic American who wants to assist, through his labor, in the national-defense program before he will be permitted to pick up his tools and go to work?

WHY?

Why is this, do you ask? Why does the President permit such a practice to prevail? The answer is simple. The candidate, speaking as President, made his bid for this kind of a procedure when he told organized labor that none of his social program was to be sacrificed to make effective the defense program.

I do not believe that the members of either the American Federation of Labor or of the Congress of Industrial Organizations—the men who do the work—have ever in a Nation-wide poll determined that only members of their organization can work on the national-defense program.

So-called union leaders, by virtue of legislation which Congress has passed, under the protection of the National Labor Relations Act, the National Labor Relations Board, and the Senate Civil Liberties Committee are now, in some instances at least, denying to patriotic Americans the right to serve their country through their labor until they—certain union politicians—have collected their tribute.

Of what benefit, do you ask, is this to Candidate Roosevelt?

In payment for this special privilege, the unions in the past, during 1 year, according to the sworn statement filed with the Clerk of this House, contributed $770,000 to his campaign fund. A few days ago another union announced that it would contribute $20,000 to purchase radio time for Candidate Roosevelt's campaign speech.

THE PAY-OFF

Each day's press carries the information that this or that union organization has endorsed him for a third term. In payment for the special privileges given them to levy tribute upon American citizens, whose only thought is self-support and patriotic service in the country's industries in this time of emergency, the President, seeking reelection, connives at this levying of tribute. By his inaction, by the inactivity of the Justice Department, and through the activities of the Labor Department and the N. L. R. B., he aids in such tribute collecting.

The foregoing facts show that Roosevelt is more concerned in the perpetuation of himself in office than he is in the future of our Republic or the welfare of the worker.

Was there ever a more vicious circle? The candidate, through his authority as Chief Executive of the Nation, permits the levying of tribute upon union and nonunion men, by a privileged few, who, in turn, contribute a part of their collections to his reelection fund. Are not the plan, and its method of operation, as corrupt, as wicked, as immoral, as any of the activities of organized racketeers?

To end this sabotaging of our national-defense program, to end this giving of aid and comfort to Hitler, this unholy levying of tribute upon union men as well as upon the independent worker, a part of it used as campaign contributions to further a third term for Candidate Roosevelt, I have offered a resolution for an investigation and privileged resolutions of inquiry directed to the War and the Navy Departments.

If there is any Member of the majority party in this House who can dispute these facts I have just stated, I shall be pleased to have him do it in the RECORD, so I can be corrected; otherwise it stands here admitted that the candidate of your party, the majority party, is hampering our defense, is aiding in wasting the money we have appropriated for national defense, and is aiding in exploiting the American worker. [Applause.]

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the previous speaker has referred to something that happened in my district I think he ought to offer further information. I was away last week. Some people may think it was a vacation, but a Congressman does not have a vacation at home. My real vacation is here. The work here is easier.

This has to do with a contract received by a western organization for work located in my district to build facilities at our National Guard camp. We here had a great deal of trouble. The contractor said it was his policy necessarily to recognize the union. The union in a city nearby assumed control immediately and no man can get a carpenter's job there unless he pays $75 to join this union. No laborer could get a job unless he paid initially $5 down and I do not recall what the entire fee was finally to be, but probably five times that amount. The contractor assured me that every applicant would get a job if he would wait until all the union men were taken care of as he would need all the rest. Of course, he was afraid that the union men would walk out if a non-union man started to work beside them.

I did not enjoy myself with some 500 men milling around me demanding that I as a Congressman take some part in this matter. I reminded this contractor he did not have very much to worry about because I remember a case where our friend Hillman called up the parties and said, "This is a defense matter and you will call the strike off immediately and arbitrate."

In that Tacoma case they went right back to work. I assured the contractor in any such case I would get the telegraph wires to Washington busy, if necessary, but you and I know how the matter would have been arbitrated. So all I could tell those boys was, "Join the union." However, it is arranged so that the dues will be taken gradually from their wages, and perhaps later an adjustment can be made to reduce the amount.

The situation has ironed itself out to a certain extent. But what a spectacle! Here is a contractor with 75 days in which to build some 1,160 buildings and he dare not proceed without letting the union dictate as to who will have a job. I recognize this is a national undertaking and that anyone from any State may be employed, but the people in that locality feel that they should have some preference.

Mr. Speaker, that is the story. My telephone was very busy when I was home, and as I stated, it was an unhappy forenoon I spent with those men. I trust I was of some service. However, it is one of the social gains we have accomplished.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. HORTON].

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. HORTON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, a day or two ago I dropped into the hopper a resolution asking that a subcommittee of the Indian Affairs Committee of the House investigate the entire land-purchase program of the Shoshone and Arapaho Indian Tribes of Wyoming.

This action of mine was the result of a resolution signed by 298 adult members, mostly of the Shoshone Tribe. The resolution reads as follows:

> We, the undersigned, enrolled members of the Shoshone Tribe of Indians, residing upon the Wind River Reservation in Fremont County, Wyo., do respectfully and earnestly protest the manner in which the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Department of the Interior are administering and spending our moneys which were allocated for the land-purchase program, and we represent that said money is being used contrary to the law in the purchase of lands, without approval having been asked or given by the Shoshone Tribe. We therefore request that the matter of the maladministration of this fund by the Indian Department and the Department of the Interior be laid before the Congress of the United States, and that congressional investigation be had by either the United States Senate or the House of Representatives of the United States of America.

I hope very much that the Rules Committee will take favorable action on this resolution, for if this land-purchase program is not being carried out as the Congress intended that it should be and the Indians understood that it would be, then certainly the facts should be known.

The whole controversy seems to have started over the purchase of the Padlock Ranch holdings, a purchase the wisdom of which is questioned even in the Indian Bureau itself.

I happen to know personally most of the Indians of both tribes and most of the whites living on or near the reservation, and I am sure that all want to see justice done in every instance.

It is with this knowledge and understanding that I ask for an investigation.

Certainly no one can possibly object to having all facts thoroughly discussed and inquired into.

I request that this resolution containing all signatures be filed with the Rules Committee for their further information.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to take any more time on the rule, because I feel every Member is in favor of legislation to protect our industries, but in view of the statement of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] I cannot resist answering some of the statements he has made on the floor.

Of course, we know he is at all times opposed to organized labor. He will criticize organized labor in spite of the fact the laboring people earn barely enough to exist on. Very few of them earn enough to justify the luxury of ever getting sick and laying off. I have yet to hear of one who was able to save enough to become a millionaire and thus endanger the perpetuity of the Nation by reason of too great concentration of wealth.

The gentleman from Michigan does not say anything about the officials and presidents of the various large organizations and industries who draw $100,000, $125,000, and $150,000 a year, then perhaps from $200,000 to $300,000 annually as bonuses. He is not interested in that. He talks about laboring men who might get 75 cents an hour and belong to a union. That is against his convictions.

Personally, I am of the opinion that if he would devote a little more time to studying the conditions of these big boys that seem to influence the action of his party he would do himself and the country more good.

The gentleman has, for instance, no flaw to pick with such Willkie supporters as Ernest T. Weir, head of Weirton Steel, one of the worst enemies of organized labor in all the United States. Perhaps it is because Mr. Weir is treasurer of the Republican National Committee and is now working overtime collecting contributions from big business in the hope of getting their friend Mr. Willkie into the White House.

Nor does he have any criticism to make against such anti-labor tycoons as Tom Girdler, president of the Republic Steel Co., who is one of the most vicious of all the critics of the New Deal.

The very corporations whose officials are the most critical of the Roosevelt administration have made the most staggering profits in recent years. For instance, the net profits of Girdler's Republic Steel for the first 6 months of 1933 were $2,929,019, but for the first 6 months of 1940, under the New Deal, $6,449,453, an increase of 120 percent. Yet he refuses his workers a decent union living wage, and berates the President as if the latter had put his business into bankruptcy.

Have Weir and Girdler been willing to share their increased profits with their employees? Answer "No." The National Labor Relations Board is required constantly to keep them under surveillance.

The Board has issued an order directing Weir's firm to halt "flagrant" violations of the Wagner Act, drop "dummy" unions at his mills in Steubenville, Ohio, and Weirton and Clarksburg, W. Va., and reinstate discharged union leaders with back pay. Findings of the Board were made following tumultuous hearings which lasted for more than 18 months in the Weir-controlled steel towns. The Weir strong-arm squad did everything they could to suppress facts and intimidate Government investigators.

After hearing 700 witnesses, the Board reported that the company had hired spies to spot union men, special "watchmen," and to beat them up. Earl F. Reed, American Liberty League attorney, was the go-between in dealings between the steel company and its paid spy agency.

The Edward Keating-edited newspaper, Labor, foremost labor publication in the United States, has the following to say regarding this man Reed:

Reed for years was in the forefront of the fight by Tory employers against the Wagner Act and at one time he headed a committee of 58 Liberty League lawyers who proclaimed the act "unconstitutional" and encouraged employers to defy it.

Besides espionage and strong-arm tactics, Weir put out an "endless stream of propaganda" against unions and got George E. Sokolsky, newspaper columnist, subsidized by the National Association of Manufacturers, to address big antiunion rallies, the Board disclosed.

Tom Girdler is equally in bad odor with the National Labor Relations Board. Girdler and Weir are two of a kind as labor seducers. Back-pay claims against Girdler's Republic Steel Co. have been filed by over 6,000 worker victims of the company's attempts to crush the "little steel" strike of 1937. The Labor Board is soon to start a check-up of the claims to determine what Girdler's back-wage bill will be. Estimates have placed it as high as $5,000,000.

Although the gentleman from Michigan has not a single word of complaint against the high-salaried Republican labor-hating officials of the great corporations, he complains because organized labor is supporting Franklin Roosevelt for reelection, and because the salary of President Tobin of the Teamsters Union has been increased to $20,000 a year. Well, he is worth every dollar of it to organized labor.

There may be some labor leaders that will sell out to Willkie, but I predict they will be very, very few. Ninety-eight percent of both organized and unorganized labor, in my opinion, will support Franklin Delano Roosevelt. Every honest, intelligent working man and woman fully recognizes the fact that he has been the most consistent friend that labor ever had in the White House, and they will not fail him on election day.

Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied, notwithstanding the statements made on the floor by the gentleman from Michigan and the gentleman from Wisconsin, that the President has done everything humanly possible in calling attention to the dangers, not only from Hitler, but from other countries far removed from Germany. I believe if it had not been for that side, who opposed the Neutrality Act and everything the President recommended 2 years ago, and criticized him because he called attention to the even-then existing dangers, the chances are it would not have been necessary to spend the large sums of money we are obliged to spend now to prepare for national defense.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN].

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, to get back to the rule that is before the House, may I say that as a member of the Committee on the Judiciary I have asked for this 5 minutes of the discussion on the rule because I believe the bill will need little discussion after the rule is adopted, since it is manifestly such a worthy measure.

This bill amends the present law, passed in 1918, and designed at that time to fix a penalty upon sabotage or interference with the national defense in the conduct of the World War. This bill merely redrafts that bill by appropriate changes to make it fit the national-defense program in which the country is now engaged.

There need be no fear that this bill is an indication that we are belligerent or warlike. It is a realistic bill. Congress has enacted appropriation bills appropriating tremendous sums of money for national defense. In order that the Government may be protected and the people of the country may be protected in the proper use of that money against sabotage or designed interference with the national-defense program by violence, the 1918 act is brought down to date by means of the enactment of this measure so as to make the 1918 sabotage law fit the present situation.

I believe this brief explanation will suffice to acquaint the House with the bill. I am sure there will be no objection to it. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the Michigan agricultural situation and to include a brief table of statistics.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a telegram sent by me to the Republican candidate for President, Wendell L. Willkie.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial appearing in the Washington Times-Herald.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial from the Courier-Journal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

PUNISHMENT FOR DESTRUCTION OF WAR MATERIAL OR WAR PREMISES OR UTILITIES

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10465) to amend an act entitled "An act to punish the willful injury or destruction of war material, or of war premises or utilities used in connection with war material, and for other purposes," approved April 20, 1918.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 10465, with Mr. TAYLOR in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, there is an hour of general debate. Does the gentleman from Texas desire recognition?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I do not at the moment desire recognition. I intend to offer an amendment at the conclusion of the first section.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas desire recognition?

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. I have no requests for time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FISH. I hope someone is going to explain the bill, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I ask for recognition, then, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take up any of the time of the Committee unnecessarily. I believe the bill is so simple that very little explanation, if any, is required. It will be observed from the language of the bill that it proposes to protect national-defense materials, national-defense premises, and national-defense utilities being used in connection with the program of preparedness. If there is any gentleman who desires to have any detailed information and I am able to provide such information, I shall be very glad to yield for interrogation.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I am wondering whether or not you could protect such materials under the present law. Will the gentleman tell us why we should pass this special bill for that purpose?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. There is no Federal law under which prosecutions can be had of these things while in private ownership.

Mr. REES of Kansas. For destroying Government material?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. For destroying Government materials there is, yes, but a good deal of the properties that are proposed to be protected under this bill are not Government materials, they are private properties that are being used to produce Government materials which are considered to be as necessary in any preparation and as essential to be protected as though they were now in the ownership of the Government.

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McDOWELL. As the law is now, would not this situation apply, that if some person were making a shell up in my State and deliberately made a bad shell, the most we could do to him would be to arrest him for malicious mischief, even though he were a serious enemy of the country?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. He could even destroy the plant while it was in the process of completing a Government contract and there would be no Federal law under which he could be prosecuted.

I may say to the gentleman, speaking generally, that this bill has been very carefully examined by the Committee on the Judiciary, which has gotten all the information it could from the agencies of the Government who are interested in taking care of preparedness.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. SPRINGER. Is it not true that under the present law, which is the act of April 20, 1918, the law applies only when we are actually engaged in war?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is true.

Mr. SPRINGER. And this bill extends that provision so that it protects when we are preparing for our national defense as now.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is true. That is the entire explanation in a sentence.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. And, similarly, the 1918 law applies only to war matériel, war premises, war utilities, whereas now, not being at war, we could not make use of that provision or the act to punish those who interfere with national defense, and so we substitute the words "national-defense matériel, national-defense premises, and national-defense utilities" so as to make the 1918 act fit the present situation.

Mr. MICHENER rose.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. The only observation I was going to make is this: There is no reason in the world why the language of this bill should not be permanent law. It just so happens that it is enacted now because the country is engaged in national defense; but why should there not be a Federal law on the statute books at all times providing that anyone committing sabotage in connection with national defense shall be guilty of a Federal crime? Why confine the law to time of war or emergency?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The gentleman from Michigan will recall that we had considerable discussion in our committee on that point. Personally, I am disposed to agree with the position of the Department of Justice. The Department of Justice, I thought, offered a very good reason why the provisions of this bill should apply only in the case of an emergency, but the committee did not agree with me and the amendment that I wanted put in was not incorporated and the bill comes out without any proposed amendments with reference to that matter.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Of course, the gentleman knows my view so far as the emergency is concerned. The emergency provision was in the bill when it came from the Department. If we put in this bill the emergency provision that was in the original bill and what I contemplate the gentleman will offer as an amendment, we will give the President——

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I am not going to offer any amendment except those amendments which the committee has agreed to.

Mr. MICHENER. I objected to the emergency provision, because in the original bill we would have declared an emergency and we would have declared nunc pro tunc—now for then—the limited emergency which the President declared on the 11th day of September a year ago, when he had no authority to make an emergency proclamation. The country is operating under that limited emergency. If the Department had got the word "emergency" in this law, as proposed, then we, as the Congress, would have approved of the limited emergency which the President has declared, exactly the same as the Congress by its reiteration, its amplification, and its exemption of the Monroe Doctrine implemented the President's Canadian speech on the Monroe Doctrine. The President made a speech and the Congress later on vitalized that speech under the guise that we were reaffirming the Monroe Doctrine. We reaffirmed what the President said in the Canada speech, whatever it was, right or wrong, and if you put the word "emergency" in here, you are going to confirm exactly what the President did in the matter of a limited emergency, and the Congress might as well go home so far as the emergency is concerned, because we will not have to enact any more emergency legislation. The intention was to do the job in this bill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Anyhow, I may say to my distinguished friend that I do not propose to offer any amendment that is going to stir up the Monroe Doctrine. We will just let the bill slide through, if the gentleman will agree, with only the amendments the committee has agreed to.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I do not think I am going to object to the bill sliding through, or let us say passing this legislation, but yet I do not see why, in view of the gentleman's explanation of the purpose of this legislation, it would not be good permanent legislation.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It may be.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. If you should eliminate the language complained of, would you not incur the risk of the act losing jurisdiction over properties which did not belong to the Government, or which the Government did not completely and absolutely control? In other words, as I get it, the word "emergency" is written in in order to make possible the reaching of the subject matter by the Federal Government; in other words, it spreads out and extends Federal power to the point of dealing with a violation of the rights of property.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Belonging to individuals and not to the Government.

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I am glad to have that explanation.

Mr. COX. That is my thought about it.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. While I have the floor may I make this brief explanation with regard to amendments which will be offered? I believe there are only two amendments that are to be proposed on behalf of the committee.

One amends existing law. The existing law deals with sabotage, and it was enacted during the World War, and it had the word "the" before the word "war," which in some opinions limit the application of the law to the then existing war. The committee recommends striking the word "the."

The language of the proposed amendment may be confusing, but I may state to the committee that the only effect of the amendment which will be offered by the committee is to strike out the word "the."

Then, as I recall, the only other amendment of substance which will be offered, and that will be offered in behalf of the committee, is to make this law applicable to the Philippine Islands. Upon reexamination of the matter that was determined to be necessary. In order to make it applicable to the Philippine Islands, it was necessary to specifically mention them in the bill.

If there are no questions with regard to these two amendments, I promise the Committee that when they are offered I will not ask for any time. Neither myself nor any member of the committee will ask for any time to discuss the amendments when they are offered.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The purpose of this act is to provide penalty by authority of law for interfering with property owned by the Federal Government?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No. It goes beyond that.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I am wondering if the present law on the statute books does not protect that situation?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Without going into detail, I may say to the gentleman—and I think it probably should be persuasive on that point and all others—that all the agencies of the Government which have first responsibility did believe that this legislation, together with the committee amendment, is necessary. That is the unanimous opinion of the committee.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. If this law is enacted, is it not possible to persecute people or do something unfair to a citizen?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I have never seen a law that was enacted that did not create such a possibility.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Distinguished Chairman, I do not propose in any way to delay consideration of this bill or to prevent it "sliding through" as gracefully and as rapidly as possible. It is logical and proper, and in accordance with the best interests of national defense that this kind of legislation aimed at sabotage should be adopted by the Congress.

I have taken these few minutes, because I have a bill somewhat along these lines, aimed against potential sabotage, that has been pending in the Committee on Military Affairs for the last 6 months or more. I am told on good authority that it will be considered tomorrow and probably will be reported out.

The purpose of my bill is to prohibit arming, drilling, parading, and uniforming of all un-American groups—Communists, Nazis, and Fascists. If we permit these un-American groups to goose-step and parade in uniform and arm, we are encouraging sabotage.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Could that be extended to secret orders and secret organizations?

Mr. FISH. Oh, no. We will take care of all that in the bill. There is a provision that will protect the Masonic Order and all other legal organizations. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. If they oppose something in the Government, that would be un-American?

Mr. FISH. No; not under this bill or any other bill.

So I am urging the committee to report out my bill and the House to pass it, because I do not believe the American people back home want to compromise with these un-American groups. They do not want little private armies parading around in foreign uniforms and armed with rifles. If those groups can arm and train with rifles, there is nothing to prohibit them arming with machine guns or one-pounders or airplanes or tanks or even bigger armaments. Before the harm is done and before we have little private armies, maybe Communists on one side, Nazis on the other, or even Jews and anti-Semitics, labor and antilabor meeting each other in private raids and battles in America, I am pleading in this crisis and emergency that this legislation be given the right-of-way before we adjourn.

Mr. WALTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. The gentleman introduced a similar measure several sessions ago.

Mr. FISH. That is correct.

Mr. WALTER. Against which there was considerable criticism because it was felt that it applied to many patriotic organizations?

Mr. FISH. That is correct.

Mr. WALTER. I am wondering whether or not the gentleman, in drafting the new bill, took into consideration the objections that were leveled against the other bill?

Mr. FISH. I am glad the gentleman asked that question. I certainly did, and it was no easy matter. I had a number of other people working on a proper amendment that would be comprehensive and protect all legitimate organizations, and I think we have worked out an amendment that will safeguard all of them.

The bill is aimed solely against un-American groups. We want to prohibit them from arming, drilling, wearing foreign uniforms, and from parading in public places. I have taken this opportunity to discuss it and I hope there will be favorable action by the committee tomorrow so that the Congress can pass it within the next week.

I also want to put in the RECORD this article which appeared on the front page of the Evening Star this afternoon. It reads as follows:

ARMY RECRUITERS REPORT BEST MONTH SINCE WAR

NEW YORK, September 24.—A rush to join the Army—greatest since the World War—has hit the Second Corps Area recruiting headquarters.

Recruiting clerks handled 400 applications and turned 200 away at closing time yesterday. The line of applicants extended all around the Whitehall Street block in which the office is situated.

I believe this item confirms what I have already stated to the House, that if volunteers had been called for by the President we would have had 400,000 of them within 60 days. I believe this item verifies what I have been trying to explain to the House for several weeks past. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved April 20, 1918, entitled "An act to punish the willful injury or destruction of war material or of war premises or utilities used in connection with war material, and for other purposes" (40 Stat. 533; U. S. C., title 50, secs. 101–103), be amended by adding at the end thereof the following sections:

"SEC. 4. That the words 'national-defense materials', as used herein, shall include arms, armament, ammunition, livestock, stores of clothing, food, foodstuffs, fuel, supplies, munitions, and all other articles of whatever description and any part or ingredient thereof, intended for the use of the United States in connection with the national defense.

"The words 'national-defense premises', as used herein, shall include all buildings, grounds, mines, or other places wherein such national-defense material is being produced, manufactured, repaired, stored, mined, extracted, distributed, loaded, unloaded, or transported, together with all machinery and appliances therein contained; and all forts, arsenals, navy yards, camps, prisons, or other military or naval stations of the United States.

"The words 'national-defense utilities', as used herein, shall include all railroads, railways, electric lines, roads of whatever description, railroad or railway fixture, canal, lock, dam, wharf, pier, dock, bridge, building, structure, engine, machine, mechanical contrivance, car, vehicle, boat, or aircraft, or any other means of transportation whatsoever, whereon or whereby such national-defense material, or any troops of the United States, are being or may be transported either within the limits of the United States or upon the high seas; and all dams, reservoirs, aqueducts, water and gas mains and pipes, structures, and buildings, whereby or in connection with which water or gas may be furnished to any national-defense premises or to the military or naval forces of the United States, and all electric light and power, steam or pneumatic power, telephone and telegraph plants, poles, wires, and fixtures and wireless stations, and the buildings connected with the maintenance and operation thereof used to supply water, light, heat, power, or facilities of communication to any national-defense premises or to the military or naval forces of the United States.

"SEC. 5. That whoever, with intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the national defense of the United States, shall willfully injure or destroy, or shall attempt to so injure or destroy, any national-defense material, national-defense premises, or national-defense utilities, as herein defined, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both.

"SEC. 6. That whoever, with intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the national defense of the United States, shall willfully make or cause to be made in a defective manner, or attempt to make or cause to be made in a defective manner, any national-defense material as herein defined, or any tool, implement, machine, utensil, or receptacle used or employed in making, producing, manufacturing, or repairing any such national-defense material, as herein defined, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. McLAUGHLIN: Page 1, after the enacting clause, strike out all of lines 3 to 8 inclusive and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the first paragraph of section 1 of the act approved April 20, 1918, entitled, 'An act to punish the willful injury or destruction of war material, or of war premises or utilities used in connection with war material, and for other purposes' (40 Stat. 533; U. S. C., title 50, secs. 101–103), is amended by striking out the word 'the' immediately preceding the word 'war.'"

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, as has been previously explained the striking out of the word "the" causes the bill to refer to war generally rather than to the World War to which the bill of 1918 referred.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer another committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. McLAUGHLIN: Insert, after the amendment just adopted, the following: The fourth paragraph of section 1 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"The words 'United States' used in this act in a geographical sense shall include the Philippine Islands, the Panama Canal Zone, and all other territory and waters, continental and insular, subject to the jurisdiction of the United States as thus defined."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment causes the Philippine Islands to be included within the purview of the act.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer another committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. McLAUGHLIN: Page 1, strike out line 9 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Such act of April 20, 1918, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following sections: 'SEC. 4. That the words "national-defense material."'"

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, this is merely a clarifying amendment to make the act conform to the other amendments adopted and to the bill generally when passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McDOWELL: Page 3, after line 15, insert a new section as follows:

"SEC. 5 (b). That in the manufacture of national-defense materials, as used herein, or in employment in national-defense premises, or in national-defense utilities as used herein, no person shall be employed therein who is a member of the Communist, Nazi, Bund, or Fascist Parties as commonly understood, and whose principles are opposed to the principles of the Government of the United States or in subversion of said principles."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment on the ground that it is not germane to the bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman withhold his point of order?

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Yes. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to permit the gentleman to make a statement.

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Chairman, on the point of order I may say to the chairman and particularly to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] that I have no desire at all to wreck or weaken this bill. It is a good bill and by my amendment I hope to strengthen it. I think the bill is all right other than that it is a locking of the door after the horse has been stolen.

The offering of this amendment rises from an outstanding situation back in Pennsylvania. In my district to date some $47,000,000 worth of war orders have been placed. We make everything up there from torpedo war heads to generators for battleships. Of this $47,000,000 one plant alone is making $17,000,000 worth of equipment that is badly needed now by the United States Army, Navy, and Marine Corps. In one plant alone up there—the Westinghouse Co.—there are 11,000 members of C. I. O. Local 601. This local is one of the finest bodies of men in the United States. Practically all of them are skilled laborers and 99 percent of them are patriotic Americans who hate nazi-ism, communism, and every other form of "ism" as much as any Member of Congress does.

But being like ordinary Americans they do not go to their meetings. They pay their dues and let somebody else run the union. Over a period of years the union has come under the control of about 32 Communists. The president of the union who is empowered to operate the thing is sick, therefore it is operated by the vice president of the union who is a registered Communist. This man will be placed on trial in the courts of Allegheny County, Pa., next Monday for perjury because of the circulation of false and "phony" Communist petitions.

Mr. Chairman, in that plant are enemies of the United States. In my own town are many Nazis. I know these men. They belong to a bund. They have come over here from Germany in the last 7 years, and I know that many of them favor Germany even over the United States. These men work in those plants in my district. When they make a war-head for a torpedo, it is natural to assume that if the time comes when this country is going to need that torpedo it will not go off.

Mr. WALTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDOWELL. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. Unless the gentleman's amendment is adopted, the employers, despite the fact they are well acquainted with this situation, would be unable to discharge these employees because they might run afoul of the national labor relations law?

Mr. McDOWELL. That is the situation. The National Labor Relations Act does not permit the Westinghouse Co. or a steel company to say, "Here, you are an enemy to my country. You are making a torpedo, but I am afraid you will not make the right kind, so you are fired." They cannot do that because the National Labor Relations Board would drag them down here to Washington, make them pay a lot of back wages, and they would get nowhere.

I am speaking for the greatest industrial pool of men in the world. We have got to do something up there in Pennsylvania to take these dirty lice out of our war-defense plans, and let good American workmen do the job. George Powers, who was named as one of the five most dangerous men in the United States, is in complete control of a steel workers' union in my city of McKeesport. Ninety-nine percent of the men in his union are like I am. They hate communism, and every other kind of "ism," but they cannot throw him out. I am trying to throw him out by this amendment.

Mr. GEYER of California. Why can they not throw him out?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDOWELL. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Last evening I received a telegram informing me that a delegation of Communists were on their way from McKeesport to Washington in an effort to keep open some plant in McKeesport that Jones & Laughlin recently purchased.

Mr. McDOWELL. I do not know anything about that. I am not making any attack on organized labor.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I am sure the membership of the House is sympathetic to your situation.

Mr. McDOWELL. It is not my situation. It is the situation of the whole country.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I do not mean it is your situation. It is a national situation, and we are all opposed to sabotage, of course, and all subversive activities that are subject to condemnation. However, this particular measure has been worked out with meticulous care. The gentleman's amendment comes before the House without an opportunity for consideration. This bill has to do with the destruction of material. If the gentleman's situation needs remedying, then, of course, it is obvious that a remedy should be afforded, but the proper method of accomplishing that remedy is by the introduction of proper legislation which may be considered by a committee and reported advisedly to the House. I make that explanation as the reason for raising the point of order, not because I am not in sympathy with the problem and the proper solution of the problem which the gentleman has mentioned.

Mr. McDOWELL. Accepting the gentleman at his word, and not desiring to wreck or interfere with this bill in any way, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment, and promise the House I will come here with a bill that will take care of the situation. I cannot see how any Member of the Congress of the United States can possibly oppose such an effort. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDOWELL]?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TAYLOR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 10465, to amend an act entitled "An act to punish the willful injury or destruction of war material, or of war premises or utilities used in connection with war material, and for other purposes," approved April 20, 1918, pursuant to House Resolution 604, he reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments agreed to in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered on the bill and amendments to final passage.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HOWARD MONDT

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 8705) for the relief of Howard Mondt.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this is a private bill. Will the gentleman explain it?

Mr. COSTELLO. The purpose of this bill is to allow Sergeant Howard Mondt to reenlist in the Army. Without the passage of this measure he would not be able to do so under existing law. Sergeant Mondt has served for 18 years and has a very fine record in the service. Prior to that time he had served for 3 years as a private during the World War period and, coming out of the Army and finding no employment, he committed a burglary and was convicted, serving a sentence of 1 year. This was not discovered until last year by the Department of Justice. The War Department was then notified and the commanding officer of the corps area in which Sergeant Mondt is serving had the option of discharging him or permitting him to continue his service. Because of the splendid record Sergeant Mondt has made during the years of his service, the corps area commander did not discharge him but is allowing him to complete his service. Unless legislation of this kind is passed, he will not be able to reenlist this November when his present enlistment will expire.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I say to the Members of the House that several instances have come to my attention where young men who have violated the law have tried to enlist within the last month. They find that the War and Navy Departments apparently have resolutely determined not to accept any man who has at any time violated the law.

It seems a strange thing to me that under the Conscription Act we, figuratively speaking, grab all the fine young men in the country whose records are perfectly clean and throw them into the service, yet deny to a young man who has committed a crime in years gone by and who has paid his debt to society through serving his sentence, and who presumably has reformed and desires to prove his good citizenship by serving in the Army or the Navy in a time of national emergency, an opportunity to thus serve his country. It is a shame, and I believe the law ought to be amended so that any loyal American citizen of the right age and in proper physical condition can serve his country in an emergency such as exists at the present time.

Mr. COSTELLO. Under the existing law, wherever a person has been convicted of a felony the War Department or the Navy Department is not authorized to enlist him in the service.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. I believe the gentleman from California will agree with me that the law should be amended.

Mr. COSTELLO. I believe the military service offers a person a very fine opportunity to rehabilitate himself in the manner this individual has done. For 18 years he has served as a sergeant. Apparently there has been absolutely no blemish on his record at any time during that service.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. I believe any loyal citizen of this country who desires to serve his country in the armed forces during times of great national emergency should be permitted to do so.

Mr. COSTELLO. I can say to the gentleman that I quite agree with him.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that I agree exactly with what has been said by the gentleman. I have had several such cases called to my attention. I should like to see the law amended in that respect.

Mr. MICHENER. Does not this law simply amend the general law for this particular individual?

Mr. COSTELLO. This bill simply authorizes the Department to reenlist this particular individual.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, do I correctly understand that this applies to a single individual?

Mr. COSTELLO. That is correct. It is the only way in which the matter can be handled.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Then I object, Mr. Speaker.

WATER CONSERVATION AND UTILIZATION

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 10122) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing construction of water conservation and utilization propjects in the Great Plains and arid and semiarid areas of the United States," approved August 11, 1939 (53 Stat. 1418), and an act entitled "An act to promote conservation in the arid and semiarid areas of the United States by aiding in the development of facilities for water storage and utilization, and for other purposes," approved August 28, 1937 (50 Stat. 869).

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I may say briefly, and then I shall yield to the gentleman from South Dakota, the author of the bill, that this bill was reported unanimously by the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of the House, and it simply seeks to amend what is now known as the Wheeler-Case law. I now yield to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] for a further explanation of the bill.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, this bill is primarily to write into basic law some clarification of the problems between the Department of Agriculture and the Bureau of Reclamation of the Department of the Interior with respect to two acts that are already on the books. This is a clarifying bill. It came up with favorable reports from both the Department of Agriculture and the Department of the Interior, and it has Budget approval.

Mr. O'CONNOR. As I understand, it has approval all the way down the line of the Government bureaus?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. Further reserving the right to object, the only question I would raise here would be that where a bill is on a calendar, even though it has a favorable committee report, it is the general rule that the Speaker will not recognize a Member to call up such a bill and pass it without the usual House consideration unless it is an emergency matter. If any bill has any emergency feature about it, then the Speaker always recognizes the Member to call it up. I shall withdraw my reservation of the right to object, but in the future, if bills are called up and asked to be passed when they are on the calendar together with other bills, and have the same standing as other bills, I shall follow the old rule and object, unless there is some feature of emergency connected with them.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this is a very important bill and in general we from the West are very much for it, but I had no notice that this was coming up and neither did many of the rest of us. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his request and bring the matter up at another time.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I will be glad to withdraw the request so the gentleman can look further into the matter.

THE MILITARY ORDER OF THE PURPLE HEART

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 2524) to incorporate the Military Order of the Purple Heart, for immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this bill was passed in the House the last session, as I recall.

Mr. WALTER. That is correct.

Mr. MICHENER. And the President vetoed it. He gave his reasons. I take it the gentleman has had a conference with the President and the President admits that he was wrong and will sign the bill if the House passes it again?

Mr. WALTER. The gentleman has the very happy faculty of asking me the sort of question I cannot answer. [Laughter.] However, I may state that the proponents of this bill feel that they have met the objections that were heretofore raised and that there cannot be any objection now to the incorporation of this very splendid organization.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. If this bill is approved and enacted as a part of our statutes, we will grant to a very distinguished group of overseas men, all of whom have been wounded, a congressional charter.

Mr. WALTER. That is correct, and, as a matter of fact, this group is now operating as an unincorporated association and we merely add just a little bit, if an act of Congress can do so, to the prestige that this splendid organization now enjoys.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-named persons, to wit: Charles O. Carlston, California; Wendell A. Lochbiler, Michigan; Marcus E. Diffenderfer, Massachusetts; Frederick K. Myles, Indiana; Harry C. Huston, Minnesota; Konstant Piniarowicz, California; Herbert E. Browning, California; George F. Bradfield, Illinois; Rev. James J. Guinea, South Carolina; Ludwig J. Nachtmann, Pennsylvania; Bernard J. Cummings, Illinois; D. Brandon Bernstein, California; Robert Patton, California; Herbert A. Church, Washington, D. C.; Earl B. Douglas, Iowa; Fred H. Surry, Washington; B. A. Schwebke, California; Lloyd Northrup, Illinois; Frank J. Monahan, Indiana; H. Hayes Landon, Massachusetts; Elmer G. Brackett, Michigan; Walter C. Stamm, Minnesota; T. M. Thomson, Minnesota; Frank Cushner, Connecticut; Edgar N. Bloomer, New Jersey; George L. Edmonds, Pennsylvania; and such other persons as may be chosen who are holders of the Purple Heart Medal, awarded by the War Department under General Orders, No. 3, dated February 22, 1932, duly chosen, are hereby incorporated and declared to be a body corporate. The name of this corporation shall be The Military Order of the Purple Heart.

SEC. 2. The said persons named in section 1, and such other persons as may be selected from among those who have been awarded the Purple Heart Medal by the War Department, may complete the organization of said corporation by the selection of officers, the adoption of a constitution and bylaws, and do all other things necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act, and at any meeting for that purpose any person duly accredited as a delegate from any chapter or State department, known as The Military Order of the Purple Heart, shall be permitted to participate in the proceedings thereof.

SEC. 3. That the purpose or object of this corporation shall be patriotic, fraternal, historical, and educational:

To preserve and strengthen comradeship among its members;

To assist worthy comrades;

To perpetuate the memory and history of our dead;

To maintain true allegiance to the Government of the United States of America and fidelity to its Constitution and laws.

SEC. 4. That the corporation created by this act shall have the following powers:

Perpetual succession with power to sue and be sued in courts of law and equity;

To receive, hold, own, use, and dispose of real estate and personal property as shall be necessary for its corporate purposes, including the right to mortgage, encumber, or exchange said real estate or personal property;

To adopt a corporate seal, and change the same at pleasure;

To adopt a constitution, bylaws, and regulations, to carry out its purposes, not inconsistent with the laws of the United States, or any State, or of the District of Columbia;

To adopt for the purposes of the corporation emblems and badges;

To establish State, District, and Territorial organizations and units or chapters; and

To publish a magazine, or other publications, and generally to do any and all such acts and things as may be necessary in carrying into effect the purposes of the corporation.

SEC. 5. That the organization shall be nonpolitical and, as an organization, shall not promote the candidacy of any person seeking public office.

SEC. 6. That the said corporation and its State, District, Territorial, or local units, or chapters, shall have the sole and exclusive right to have and to use in carrying out its purposes the name of The Military Order of the Purple Heart.

SEC. 7. That the said corporation shall, on or before the 1st day of January in each year, make and transmit to the Congress a report of its proceedings for the preceding calendar year, including a full and complete report of its receipts and expenditures.

SEC. 8. That, as a condition precedent to the exercise in any State of any power or privilege herein granted or conferred, The Military Order of the Purple Heart shall file in the office of the secretary of state of such State the name and post-office address of an authorized agent in such State upon whom legal process against The Military Order of the Purple Heart may be served.

SEC. 9. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act at any time is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the subject of water rights of Colorado and also to include a brief portion of the hearings before my subcommittee on that subject.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to insert a letter from Emil E. Holmes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] is entitled to recognition for 30 minutes, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] for 30 minutes. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] has agreed to go third and allow the gentleman from Georgia to be recognized at this time. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, on September 5, the President transmitted to the Congress for its information the notes exchanged between the British Ambassador at Washington and the Secretary of State of the United States on September 2, under which our Government secured the right to lease certain British naval and air bases in the Western Hemisphere. The President stated, in his message, that these bases had been acquired in exchange for 50 of our over-age destroyers, and that he had taken advantage of a present opportunity to acquire them because they are essential to the protection of the Panama Canal, Central America, the northern portion of South America, the Antilles, Canada, Mexico, and our own eastern and Gulf seaboards.

Close upon the transmission of this message opposition to the action taken by the President was expressed by a portion of the press, by personal opponents of the President, and by political opponents of the Administration. Among other things it was asserted that it had been necessary to dig back into moldy legislation to find a forgotten statute to enable the deal to be put over; that the Congress had been flouted; that the President had violated constitutional and statutory provisions and ignored long-established customs and practices.

It was asserted that treaties with foreign powers are not legal without the advice and consent of the Senate; that the so-called treaty by which the negotiations of the President had been consummated was one of the most momentous in our history; and that it had been effectuated without the advice and consent of the Senate.

It was asserted further that the President had violated certain statutory provisions, the Hague Convention of 1907, which we had ratified in 1908; that the action of the President constituted an act of war, and that the President had assumed the role of a dictator.

In presenting a resolution to ratify the action of the President in acquiring for our people an insular cordon of defense in the Atlantic Ocean, I submit that the provisions of the Constitution, with respect to the treaty-making power, are extremely meager. They are, indeed, restricted to the language of section 2, article II, which reads, as we all know:

He—

That is the President—

shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur.

The framers of the Constitution gave to the vesting of the treaty-making power that same careful consideration that we know they gave to all other provisions of the Constitution. They were unwilling to grant to the President absolute power in the making of treaties; but they recognized the importance of conferring upon him large power in the conduct of our relations with foreign states. But, they recognized the fact, also, that no other department of the Government could proceed so effectively in negotiations with foreign states, and Mr. John Jay expressed the sentiment of the framers of the Constitution in that respect when he wrote that in the negotiations of treaties "perfect secrecy and immediate dispatch are sometimes requisite."

Our constitutional provisions relating to the treaty-making power being so meager, we are compelled to have recourse to the precedents that have been established in the conduct of our foreign relations. As we know, Mr. Washington was extremely desirous to follow the provisions of the Constitution meticulously in this as in all other matters. It will be recalled that early in his administration he appeared, with General Knox, Secretary of War, before the Senate to secure its advice concerning the treaties to be negotiated with certain Indian tribes. The results proved so unsatisfactory, the details so tedious, and the delay so great that Washington was compelled to abandon the practice; and in this he was followed by his successors. An effort was made to revive the practice in 1813 when the Senate requested the attendance of President Madison to consult with it upon foreign affairs, but President Madison declined.

Whatever meaning may attach to the terms "advice" and "consent," precedent has established the principle that in the negotiation of treaties the President is not required to consult with the Senate. And although it has not been contended that the President shares the treaty-making power with the House of Representatives, Mr. Washington's refusal to send to this body a copy of his instructions to the ministers of the United States who negotiated the treaty with Great Britain in 1794 is indicative of the freedom which attaches to the Executive in the function of treaty making, certainly in its initiatory stages. The extent to which the Senate may advise and consent never has been defined, and it probably never will be, except as long-established custom may ultimately furnish a guide. There is no express constitutional limitations upon the President in the treaty-making power, even though approval by the Senate is necessary for ratification of treaties.

But the President has large powers even after approval by the Senate, for he may refuse to proclaim a ratified treaty; and he may refuse to exchange notes of ratification. The power of the President in this matter has been expressed so ably by former Senator Lodge that I cannot resist the desire to quote him briefly:

The Senate * * * cannot * * * initiate a negotiation with another nation—

He said—

for they have no authority to appoint or receive ambassadors or ministers. * * * The President negotiates the treaty * * * to begin with. * * * The Senate has not the right to demand that he shall unfold to the world or to it, even in executive session, his instructions, or the prospect or progress of the negotiations. * * * under the Constitution the absolute power of negotiation is in the President and the means of negotiation subject wholly to his will and his judgment. * * * The President is so supreme under the Constitution in the matter of treaties—

Said Senator LODGE—

excluding only the Senate's ratification, that he may negotiate a treaty; he may send it to the Senate; it may receive by way of "advice and consent" the unanimous judgment of the Senate that it is in the highest degree for the public interest, and yet the President is as free, when it is sent back to the White House with a resolution of ratification attached to it to put it in his desk never again to see the light of day as he is free to determine in the first instance whether he would or would not negotiate it.

That power is not expressly given to the President by the Constitution, but it inheres in the executive power conferred upon him to conduct our foreign relations, and it is a power which inheres in him as the sole organ under the Constitution through whom our foreign relations and diplomatic intercourse are conducted. Out of public necessity the President should be permitted to pocket a treaty, no matter if every Member of the Senate thought he ought to exchange the ratification.

Why? Because the President, through the ambassadors, ministers, and consuls and all of the agencies of the Government explore sources of information everywhere. * * * The conduct of our foreign relations is a function which requires quick initiative. * * * It is a power that requires celerity. One course of action may be demanded tonight, another in the morning. That it requires also secrecy * * * is too obvious to make elaboration pardonable * * *.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Is not the President of the United States the sole representative in external affairs of the sovereignty of the Nation, and is not that why there is so little said in the Constitution, or in the statutes, or in the decisions of the courts with reference to his powers?

Mr. COX. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Is that true?

Mr. COX. It is in a sense. He is the representative of the Government in all foreign affairs, and no treaty or agreement, or any note, can be negotiated except through him.

If I have indicated at all the large power that attaches to the President in the conduct of our foreign relations under the Constitution and through the negotiation of the formal treaty, there still remains a power even greater than has been sanctioned by precedent over a long period of our history. I refer to the "Executive agreement."

Not all negotiations entered into by the President with foreign states assume the status of the formal treaty with its constitutional requirement of senatorial advice and consent. The President may proceed, and Presidents have proceeded by Executive agreements when circumstances appear to have indicated that such a course of procedure to be the more desirable. Or they may proceed through an exchange of "identical notes."

It is not easy to draw an arbitrary line between a formal treaty and an Executive agreement. The distinction may indeed, rest exclusively with the President. Such was the nature of the arrangement with Great Britain in 1817 providing for the limitation of naval forces on the Great Lakes, certainly no less a momentous occasion than that with which we now are confronted. So, too, was the Boxer Indemnity Agreement of 1900; President Theodore Roosevelt's agreement with Santo Domingo in 1905; President Taft's agreement with Nicaragua in 1911; and President Wilson's Preliminary Agreement of Peace and Armistice in 1918. It would be difficult, indeed, to distinguish between the Lansing-Ishii Notes of 1917 and the Lothian-Hull Notes of 1940. The former recognized the special sphere of influence of Japan in the Far East; the latter secured for America a cordon of insular bases essential to the protection of North, Central, and South America, and, by means of the protection afforded the Panama Canal, the mobility of our present fleet in both the Atlantic and the Pacific Oceans. We accepted the former. By no logic, or precedent can we denounce the latter.

Our Constitution does not commit our President to a course of open diplomacy. We should not seek to impose that which the Constitution does not require. We should not sanction the challenge to the security that flows to us from the acquisition of that insular protection that is essential to our future safety. We should not deny ourselves or our posterity the benefits which flow from constitutional provisions or historical precepts and precedents.

But it has been asserted also that in acquiring this protection so essential to our safety the President has violated our statutes, especially the act of June 15, 1917 (ch. 30, 40 Stat. 217, 222), and section 14 (a) of the Naval Appropriation Act (Public, 671, Jan. 28, 1940). Without any desire to be accused of the tortuous procedure ascribed to an executive officer of the Government, I am constrained to admit that the contended statutory violation may well be more confined to the letter than to the spirit of the law.

I think it will be accepted by the membership of this House that an interpretation of the President's action under the terms of the legislation in question would be beyond the power of the courts. The President's action here falls so obviously outside the ministerial and so clearly within the political that our courts would be without jurisdiction and unable to inquire into the validity of the President's action. Nor, the matter being fait accompli, would it be of practical value to attempt to submit the issue to judicial interpretation.

The membership of this House certainly would not ascribe to me any intent to absolve the Executive of intentional wrongdoing were he guilty. But I would proceed, if I were to proceed at all by way of well-known and well-established constitutional provisions. Certainly approval has been accorded the action of the President in the great forum of public opinion.

Whatever may have been the intent of the statutory provisions in issue at the time of their enactment, I am constrained to believe that the results that have been accomplished by the action of the President have tended to shift their implied purpose and therefore to cause the action of the President to fall outside their express terms or to focus their intent and expose their present limitations.

Obviously the original intent of these statutory provisions was to prevent intervention by the United States in a war between belligerents or the prevention of any conduct that might be construed under international law as intervention, or, indeed, conduct of an unneutral character that might be construed as an act of war; in short, the purpose obviously was to prevent conduct that would transform our status as a neutral into the status of a cobelligerent.

Certainly these statutory provisions were not intended to deprive us of an opportunity to fortify our neutral status, to strengthen our armed defenses, or to secure strategic bases for defense. The purpose obviously was to prevent our participation in the status of belligerency. At best it was the municipal expression of a concept of international law that only we appear to honor, for in the world in which we live today the canons of international law are honored more in the breach than in the observance. The motive of the statutory provisions was to inhibit intervention, not to prohibit consideration. And adequate evidence thereof, I think, is to be found in the condition of the vessels transferred.

I cannot ignore the pragmatic results, and, though I do not accept the doctrine of justification, I would not withhold ratification. I think that we but exchanged a weaker for a stronger means of defense for our own security and safety. We could have retained the destroyers for our own defense. Then our shores would have been more open to attack. We transferred the destroyers for an insular ring that affords us a first line of defense. Self-preservation is no less the first law for nations as it is for individuals.

Mr. Speaker, in the light of constitutional precepts and historical precedent, and in view of the results, it would appear that they who seek to find fault in the action of the President occupy a most untenable position. There is no constitutional constraint that required him to consult with the Senate during the initiatory stages of the agreement into which he entered, his procedural conduct is sanctioned, by precept and, since the agreement never rose to the status of the formal treaty, he was not obligated by any constitutional mandate to request the consent of the Senate. He has filed an information with the Congress.

But even though there be no jurisdictional fault in the action of the President, it is not possible to disregard the criticism that has attached to his conduct. It is even less permissible to disregard the uncertainty that has come to attach to the legislation enacted by the Congress which has been made a part of this issue. Certainly the Congress may not invade the prerogatives of the Executive, and treaty making is a part of those prerogatives. But the Executive similarly may not lightly ignore or violate the acts of the Congress, to which his signature attaches, even though his conduct fall outside the realm of juridical review, and the violation culminate in salutary benefits.

Within their respective spheres these two coordinate branches of the Government are absolute and independent. Neither may encroach upon the other. Neither may ignore the other nor proceed without due and proper regard for the constitutional prerogatives of the other. Neither may restrict nor limit the other in that larger sphere of operation created by the Constitution.

But if restraint be permissible under the Constitution it must proceed from the representatives of the people, even though it be restricted to the control of the ministerial. Opportunity is not afforded for the determination of the nature of the President's conduct in view of the statutory principles at issue. The matter is fait accompli. It is apparently not within the power of the Congress to reverse the action of the President.

But while the Congress may find itself restricted in the present transaction it is not deprived of the power under the Constitution to indicate to the Executive a course of action that might be pursued more punctiliously in the future even in a sphere which the Executive is supreme, for as Representatives of the people, chosen at shorter intervals than the Executive, and unable to prolong their tenure except at the hands of the people directly, the Congress comes more frequently afresh from the people and is able to reflect perhaps more precisely the wishes of the people. Science may have placed in the power of the Executive the means of direct appeal to all the people simultaneously; it has not made possible universal simultaneous response; and legislative enactment has not yet sanctioned popular referendum.

To permit the conduct of the President to remain suspended in the arenaceous atmosphere of political controversy is not conducive to the success of the program of national security upon which we now are embarked. Either the Congress should denounce the conduct of the President as violative of constitutional and statutory principles, or, if there was no constitutional violation nor procedural departure from custom, precedent, and practice it should ratify the conduct of the President, acting thus in its constitutional capacity to review the conduct of the Executive until the people themselves may have opportunity to grant or withhold their approval of the President's conduct.

I therefore present this resolution of ratification of the action and the conduct of the President in acquiring certain naval and air bases essential to the protection of the Nation, to wit, the Panama Canal, Central America, the northern portion of South America, the Antilles, Canada, Mexico, and our own eastern and Gulf seaboards.

Whereas the President of the United States has negotiated certain lease agreements with His Britannic Majesty's Government relating to the establishment and use of naval and air bases and facilities (a) at a point of the Avalon Peninsula and at another point on the south coast of New Foundland, limited to entrance thereto and the operation and protection thereof, and there has been likewise negotiated the same arrangements, (b) at a point on the east coast of the island of Bermuda and at another point on the Great Bay of said island; and the grantor, the British Government secures the United States freely and without consideration for a period of 99 years the said naval and air bases and facilities; and

Furthermore the United States acquired by purchase additional naval and air bases and facilities in (c) the Caribbean and in (d) British Guiana, and the British Government has made available to the United States such establishments and the use thereof for entrance thereto and the operation and protection thereof for a period of 99 years, at points located (1) on the eastern side of the Bahamas, (2) the southern coast of Jamaica, (3) the western coast of St. Lucia, (4) the west coast of Trinidad, (5) in the island of Antigua, and (6) in British Guiana within 50 miles of Georgetown, in consideration of the sale by the United States and delivery to the British Government of 50 naval vessels: to wit, destroyers; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States has undertaken a domestic national defense program and has defined the foreign policy of the United States under certain conditions conforming to the congressional concept of the applicable provisions of international law to which the United States adheres, as follows:

(1) The Treaty of Washington of 1871 includes an obligation not only to use due diligence to prevent the fitting out for belligerent use, but also "to use like diligence to prevent the departure from its jurisdiction of any vessel intended to cruise or carry on war as above, such vessel having been specially adapted, in whole or in part, within the jurisdiction, to warlike use."

(2) The Hague Convention XIII of 1907 (36 U. S. Stat. L. 2415) which provides that "the supply, in any manner, directly or indirectly, by a neutral power to a belligerent, of warships, ammunition, or war material of any kind whatever, is forbidden."

(3) The act of June 15, 1917 (18 U. S. C. 33) which provides: "During a war in which the United States is a neutral nation, it shall be unlawful to send out of the jurisdiction of the United States any vessel of war, with any intent or under any agreement or contract, written or oral, that such vessel shall be delivered to a belligerent nation."

(4) The act of June 28, 1940 (Public, No. 671, 76th Cong., 3d sess.) provides: "Nothing herein shall be construed to repeal or modify sections 3 and 6, title V, of the act approved June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. 222; 18 U. S. C. 33–36)."

(5) The act of July 19, 1940 (Public, No. 757, 76th Cong., 3d sess.) provides: "No vessel, ship, boat (except ships' boats) now in the United States Navy or being built or hereafter built therefor shall be disposed of by sale or otherwise, or be chartered or scrapped, except as now provided by law." Therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the acquisition of the foreign leaseholds as herein recited is hereby ratified, confirmed, and approved and deemed to be appropriate to the furtherance of the national-defense program.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I am very much interested in what the gentleman is saying. It is something we have all thought about a great deal. I think most of us are in favor of the idea of acquiring the bases. I know I introduced a resolution to that effect along in February and urged acquiring them, but there are two definite questions that arise in the consideration of the resolution which the gentleman proposes. The first is the question of international law. The gentleman said that international law today was being honored more in the breach than in the observance. The opinion of the Attorney General recited the precedents of the sale of torpedo boats by Germany to Russia in 1904, but, of course, that antedated the conventions of 1907 at The Hague in which all conventions on naval warfare carried sections that seemed to be clearly prohibitive of the sale or transfer of vessels to a belligerent in time of war when the nation is a neutral; and a second question arises in connection with ratification when the information that has been filed is incomplete. The gentleman referred to the notes by Lothian and Hull. In the note by Lothian the gentleman has probably observed it was suggested that in addition to the vessels there was to be a transfer of certain military equipment and matériel.

To the best of my knowledge there has been no information filed with the Congress as to what that additional equipment or matériel may be. The resolution offered by the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] was tabled without that information being filed.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. In just a moment. It occurs to me unless we do have a complete bill of information as to the commitments that were made in connection with this particular trade, while we all approve the idea of acquiring the bases, we might be, in effect, making ratification or giving approval to a trade, the particulars of which we know nothing about.

Mr. COX. I do not know that we can assume that any agreement was entered into that extends beyond the information that was communicated to the Congress by the President.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. In that note of Lord Lothian he mentioned equipment and material in addition to ships. There has been nothing that I know of made public concerning that.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. If the gentleman would read the letter written by Secretary of State Hull to the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM]—and which was published in yesterday's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—he will see that Mr. Hull answered the question asked in my resolution. He said in part:

The resolution proposes that the President be requested to inform the House of Representatives whether the recent agreement for the acquisition by the United States of naval bases in the Western Hemisphere contemplated further delivery to Great Britain of additional naval and military equipment other than the 50 naval destroyers mentioned in my note of September 2. The answer to the inquiry in the resolution is, "No."

His answer to my inquiry was, "No." I did not care whether the resolution was tabled or not, because the Secretary of State gave the information. But I am under a rather strong impression that they are negotiating for further bases and planning a further transfer of military and naval equipment.

Mr. COX. Of course, I have no information on that.

Now, the gentleman from South Dakota in his question referred to the opinion of the Attorney General. I have heretofore expressed my views on that subject. Naturally, I do not wish to criticize the opinion he rendered.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I am inclined to think the gentleman made a better explanation than the Attorney General did.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HARRINGTON). The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution which I have just introduced be extended in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to postpone the time allotted to me today until Thursday next, after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk and any other special orders of the day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include an excerpt from an article entitled "The Truth About England."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include therein a short newspaper article.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include a David Lawrence editorial.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein excerpts from a newspaper article.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a speech by John B. Haggerty, president of the International Brotherhood of Bookbinders at the Golden Anniversary Convention of the International Printing Pressmen and Assistants, at Pressmen's Home, Tenn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] is recognized for 20 minutes.

IS THE FEAR EXPRESSED BY MANY CITIZENS THAT A DICTATORSHIP ALREADY EXISTS HERE JUSTIFIED?

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, perhaps someone may remember that I said yesterday I would follow up the discussion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], under the title "Is the Fear Expressed by Many Good Citizens That a Dictatorship Already Exists Here Justified?"

Hardly a newspaper of any importance comes out in any issue these days without some comment or some letter from individuals expressing this particular fear. My remarks must not be regarded as comments on the President of the United States—only on the present Democratic candidate for President. They are entirely two different individuals in this hour.

The shafts of a political campaign will be much sharper toward any candidate whose record is known. This Democratic candidate is a man of action. His will must be accepted or his opponents will be purged and their political death openly decreed. He does not need to be a dictator in this country of the sort where he may punish by physical death. It is far more satisfactory to use his present method and about as effective. A multitude of experiments have been concocted and forced upon a subservient Congress. The White House has been given absolute control because of the fear of reprisal. Grandiose schemes at terrific cost and appalling failures have been constant. It would take a long time to recite those many failures.

Most colossal failures. We will simply refer to a few like the gold fiasco. Some try even to defend that. The silver policy. Some try even to defend that. And a host of others.

To save you from the annoyance of my own opinion I will quote to you what Mr. John T. Flynn has written. Certainly he is a thoughtful man. Many of you disagree with him, of course, when he is not on your side, but you must pay tribute to his knowledge of affairs.

> A complete revolution of our moneyed system. Roosevelt had only impressions. His lack of knowledge did not terrify him. A few conversations sold him the whole package. The humble masses listened in wonder and the wonder still grew that one small head could carry all he knew. The price of gold changed from $21 to $35 an ounce, and within 3 months the whole scheme was acknowledged as a ghastly failure. He finally laughingly exclaimed "I experimented with gold. That was a flop. Why shouldn't I experiment a little with silver?"

Send your remonstrances to John T. Flynn.

Bureaus of Government too numerous to mention have assumed complete control of business and finance. Bureaucrats in charge are entirely submissive to the whim and dictates of the man who appointed them. Tremblingly the businessman implores for instruction as to his every course of action. He cannot know for certain whether he is blacklisted as an economic royalist. Vast sums of borrowed money representing not only the people's savings but an ironclad mortgage on the Nation's children have been squandered and experimented with. A great fear lies upon thinking persons as to the limit of the credit of their Government. Their assurance? Did he not say:

> What of our national debt? Do we not owe it to ourselves?

We have but one man really to hold responsible. That he had a mandate from the people has been his weapon forcing our subservience. Having obtained a complete subservience of the legislative body, he demanded additional members on the judiciary that he might select a majority to do his will. This even the Democratic Party resisted, but his control came in another way just as effectively.

His legal advisers furnish strained opinions that he might avoid seeking proper authority for actions that have appalling consequences. I would like to say to the gentleman from Georgia who preceded me, speaking about the recent Jackson decision. The client went to his lawyer. Said the lawyer, "Do you want my honest opinion?" "Oh, no; I want your professional advice."

Here I am as a real-estate expert, if you please. Clients generally expect a strained opinion as to the value to suit their case. And I have seen a $6,000 piece of real estate valued as high as $15,000 on the one side and as low as $2,000 on the other. Such are real-estate experts and lawyers. When the President of the United States cannot get a strained opinion, it would be very strange indeed.

Oh, his largesses have been unparalleled. They have caused some in high position within his own party to exclaim "that in 1936 it was simply a bought election."

His attempt to reorganize the functions of the Government granting him vast additional powers was resisted, but much of it was granted.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I thought I understood the gentleman to say something about a purchased election. I wonder if he had in mind the statement made by a distinguished Senator from Virginia, who has been long years in the Senate, on the 24th day of June 1937, when in substance he said the last election was purchased?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I think you will find that in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, yes; I am quoting him. May I say to the gentleman from Georgia, "Why dig the matter up?"

It does smell pretty bad. But it is an accomplished fact. It is too late. A question was asked, "You do not keep pigs in the basement any more at your house?" "No," he says, "the neighbors got wind of it." There was time to remedy it. His foreign policy and rash statements and promises have brought a great fear upon the people lest we be led directly into the European holocaust.

A seemingly restrained attitude for the moment preceding November cannot suffice to allay the fear of probable developments after the election. Many prominent members of his own so-called Democratic Party are held dumb from party loyalty.

I cannot understand the great Senator from Virginia who on yesterday again declared himself as he did at the convention. He was against giving this man a third term but still he says, "I will vote for him." I cannot understand some Democrats.

I want to refer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SMITH]. I asked him to be present here. There is a man of great intellectual capacity, one whom I have watched carefully from the moment he came into this House. He acted most modestly at first. With such intellectual capacity I know he has full knowledge of conditions as they exist and his own judgment must be good. However, loyalty to his party predominates and he has been called upon frequently to argue and defend measures that seemingly would violate his private opinion.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman is right. With all due respect to many of these prominent so-called Democrats, I cannot see how they can say that they are against a third-term program and how they can say they are Jeffersonian Democrats when they know Thomas Jefferson said that any man running for a third term for President ought to be defeated. Now they want to vote for him.

Mr. GIFFORD. Take the Philadelphia speech last Friday. Twice I think he brought in Thomas Jefferson to justify a third term, referring to a man more against it than any other individual in our history. Oh, he says these men lived in a different time. If they lived today they would think I was the only man who was indispensable.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. Is it not also true that Thomas Jefferson was opposed to Members of Congress succeeding themselves?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes; and I probably think I should not argue that at home lest they throw it at me. But let me suggest the great difference. What enormous powers are given to this man. A Congressman has but little power. This man has assumed complete power over business and finance; he is Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, and he has had $22,000,000,000 of borrowed money and further increased tax receipts at his command to spend for largess of all kinds. He has heretofore unheard-of control over the affairs of our citizens. There is really no comparison whatever.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. In addition to the powers the gentleman has enumerated, he now has control over the Supreme Court and a rubber-stamp Congress.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I saw some figures the other day to indicate that during the past 7 years there has been practically a reappointment of 60 percent of the judiciary of the country. I think the argument suggested by the gentleman from Texas overlooks the fact that Members of Congress are not the appointive branch of the Government. There is quite a difference between serving in the legislative branch and in an executive position as either the Governor of a State or a Chief Executive of a Nation with the appointive power, and where you put all of the administrative machinery of the Government under his control.

Mr. HAWKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HAWKS. Does not the gentleman realize that is just another alibi for a third term?

Mr. GIFFORD. Under the machinery of this Government, the Republican Party, assisted by all patriotic citizens and by the so-called independents, can save this Nation from further descent. Let us ask ourselves seriously, has the record of the Democratic candidate disclosed an ambition for power? Are the arts of a dictator displayed in his actions and in his words? Are there pockmarks there of that disease? If there are, we should avoid him. What are those words? "I want it said of my first administration that they met their match. I want it said of my second administration that they met their master."

Go before your constituents and tell them that. He said that when he accepted for the second time. How you Democrats have glorified him. Not only does he want to make himself his own successor but, not satisfied with that, he wants to pick his successor. He officiated at the political demise of our beloved Speaker. It is a sad commentary. Our Speaker was a faithful servant; an illustrious, fully competent man; but there was offered the flimsy excuse that perhaps he was not physically able to conduct a campaign. Think of allowing this man to dictate to a great convention, not only to his own nomination but as to who should follow him.

On yesterday, on apparently reliable authority, it was asserted that he might resign at any particular time and place his mantle on one who would continue to do his bidding. This man who is a candidate for President today may not wish to be a real dictator. But if ever a road was fully and carefully prepared, even polished to smoothness for a dictator to come hastily, it is prepared now.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Speaker will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HAWKS. The gentleman does not have any idea, does he, that the present incumbent of the White House would ever resign his office if he were reelected?

Mr. GIFFORD. He may become ill.

Mr. HAWKS. That is wishful thinking.

Mr. GIFFORD. This book I have here states that the family will have made some $2,500,000. It is an agreeable position for them. I would be willing to give most of it away if I could make such a sum. The publicity surrounding them is a joyous experience. Why should a man want to give it up under those conditions? He is surrounded by people who only dare praise him. He cannot hear the truth. He seems to love to have such as Harry Hopkins about him. She said, "I love to have Jack around, he is delightful company. I love to hear him talk." "What does he talk about?" "Me." [Laughter.]

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Not only have the fine things the gentleman has mentioned fallen to the lot of the President, but think of the members of his family, who are also in soft berths.

Mr. GIFFORD. They are much in the public eye. I quoted from this book here—I am not asking you to take my word on these matters.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes. My terminal facilities are rather poor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. JENNINGS. What significance or verity or hope or promise does the gentleman attach to the testimony of Judge

Mack given the other day to the effect that Mr. Roosevelt would not seek a fourth term?

Mr. GIFFORD. It will be more necessary then than now.

Mr. JENNINGS. He will be more experienced.

Mr. GIFFORD. It will be far more necessary then, because there are certain things that will happen after this war has ended that probably no other man could be found so well equipped to meet those problems. Such, of course, would be claimed. So, Democrats of this House, you have but one man able to lead you. You have so glorified him.

I am watching with much interest as to whom you will elect for your leader. The gentleman from Virginia is a contender. I have heard him on this floor liken this President of yours, this candidate, to the Great Master. He pleaded for blank checks as no other man spoke. Never was a man so faithful. He even threatened you one day lest you would not vote exactly as the President desired. He told you that the President would look in the RECORD the next morning, and said, "You know what will happen." Now, lately he sees some error in his former position, and the frown from the White House is on him, I am told.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The gentleman judges by the Republican practice of the past, I think.

Mr. GIFFORD. If that is a happy suggestion, I will accept it.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I wonder if the gentleman was not judging by the progress the President has made in emergencies. We have found that after 7 or 8 years the emergencies increase, and possibly after 12 years they will be just that much greater.

Mr. GIFFORD. I can only close by saying, as I said once before—I think it is a happy ending—that if this man, your candidate, is again reelected there is but one explanation—man is the only animal that can be skinned more than once. [Laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous special order, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I was rather interested in the remarks of my good friend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD]. He said he could not understand certain Democrats because they were for a third term. I cannot understand certain Republicans because it was the Republican Party that first stood for a third term. The second Republican President in the history of the United States, Ulysses S. Grant, tried for a third term.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. But he did not get it.

Mr. HILL. Just a moment; I am not yielding. He did not get it, of course, but he ran.

The second man to run for a third term—and I am speaking of the third term in the real sense of the word—was Theodore Roosevelt.

Mr. HAWKS. But what did he do?

Mr. HILL. He ran for a third term. I do not want to be interrupted. The third man to try—he did not even try for a third time, but he was urged——

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I make the point of order that the so-called disturbance on this side, if it was that, was not an interruption, it was just because the gentleman walked over here and made those motions.

Mr. HILL. The third man that was urged for a third term was President Coolidge. Of course, he said "I do not choose to run," but he was urged by Hoover and other prominent Republicans to run for a third term. I am rather surprised and cannot understand certain Republicans here in the House and elsewhere.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. No; I cannot yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, I yield to everybody.

Mr. HILL. No; I cannot yield; I have only 5 minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. We will get you more time.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Washington be permitted to continue for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL. I yield now to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. I want to say in connection with the gentleman's come-back that he forgets there is such a word as "consecutive," which means that during the intervening period the President lost all the power he had formerly held. He gave it up.

Mr. HILL. That is a mere technical objection. Moreover, in the case of ex-President Coolidge, he was urged by the then Secretary of Commerce, Hoover, and the then Secretary of the Treasury, Mellon, to run for a third consecutive term.

Mr. Speaker, I noticed in yesterday's papers that the great challenger, Wendell Willkie, estwhile New Dealer, now the Republican candidate for President, O. K.'s Federal power development and cheap rates for domestic and rural users. I quote from his speech:

> Whatever the distribution method, this great reservoir of cheap power should be used for the industrial development of the great Northwest and to provide domestic and rural users of electricity their requirements at the lowest possible rates.

He no doubt had a mental reservation to add "after high profits have been paid to the big utilities." This from the late president of the Commonwealth & Southern, which for years fought the T. V. A. and cheap rates for rural people in the South. Ye gods, what a transformation on the part of the "barefoot boy" from Wall Street. He reminds me of Messrs. Post and Robinson, former and present heads of the Washington Water Power Co. of Spokane, Wash. Every time there was a threat to their nefarious operations by the State Grange or Senator BONE they would lower rates, promise to build rural lines, and so forth. An old saying applies here: "When the devil was sick, the devil a saint would be; when the devil got well, the devil a saint was he!" Politically, Wendell Willkie is quite sick these days. But beware if he should become President and get well again. The voters of the State of Washington are too intelligent and well read, and they have fought the power companies of the State too long—for the past 20 years—to be fooled by the promises of a charlatan.

Here I want to quote from Mr. Raymond Clapper, who has not recently been in favor of Mr. Roosevelt. In the News of today he says:

> WILLKIE ON POWER
> We have come a long way since Roosevelt, before his first inauguration, announced his T. V. A. dream.
>
> The T. V. A. experiment led to the longest and most bitter fight of the Roosevelt administration. Through that contest, Wendell Willkie, as the leader of the opposition, achieved the national fame that led to his nomination as the Republican candidate for President.
> Although Willkie won his spurs fighting T. V. A. and the extension of public-power projects, it does not appear that he is trying to win the election on the same issue. On the contrary, the policy that Willkie outlined at Portland, Oreg., dovetails with current public-power developments.

Last night he pledged at Seattle, the Queen City of the West, "Jobs for all," according to newspaper headlines. Again this minion of big business, big business which has fought all labor legislation proposed and enacted by the New Deal, said that he stood "for every one of the social gains that labor has made," including the National Labor Relations Act, the wage-hour law, unemployment insurance, and old-age pensions.

I will quote a little bit further from the News on page 6, where he said:

> There is not a statute on the books protecting your interests that I won't keep on the books.

How fervently he woos Dame Labor. But, I fear, without avail. Labor, as well as consumers of electricity, knows too well his record on these two vital issues. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

The great challenger is all things to all men. In his Elwood, Ind., acceptance speech, he endorsed the New Deal. He promised to do it better and cheaper. Then at Des Moines, Iowa, he endorsed the Wallace farm program, another New Deal policy. In California he must have endorsed the endless sunshine and its bent for advertising. Again this Wendell Willkie, this changeable good fellow, who could be a Socialist at college, a Democrat for years, and now a stanch Republican, who left the farm to become a Wall Street mogul and now has returned to the verdant prairies of his boyhood home, Elwood, Ind., which, by the way, now is a realistic example of how big business and exploitation can make a prosperous American city look like Goldsmith's Deserted Village; this man Wendell Willkie, the cheery challenger, reminds me of the little boy's chameleon given him for a pet by his doting father. A few days later the father noticed that this changeable little fellow was missing so he said, "Son, what has become of your little pet?" "Well, it's this way, Dad," replied the boy, "I put him on a piece of green and he turned green; I put him on a piece of red and he turned red; I put him on a piece of blue and he turned blue; I put him on a piece of pink and he turned pink; I put him on a piece of yellow and he turned yellow; I put him on a piece of orange and he turned orange; I put him on a piece of black and he turned black; and then I put him on a piece of Scotch plaid and the darn thing busted trying to make good."

The challenger is going to "bust" trying to make good politically and is even now—again politically—in the throes of decomposition. Peace to his political ashes, and may the Republican Party inter them with the political ashes of Hoover, Landon, and others.

I have in my hand here a good photo of this challenger as he might have appeared in 1936—proud of being a new dealer and wearing a Roosevelt button—yea, even now he lauds the New Deal, whose chief exponent is our splendid President, Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Wendell L. Willkie wearing a Roosevelt button in 1936, proud of endorsing the New Deal from top to bottom, and now saying, "I will do it better—I will do it cheaper."

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. GORE. Does not the gentleman think the challenger belongs in the preliminaries rather than in the main bout?

Mr. GROSS. Do you think he is dislodged and disrupted the same as Elliott Roosevelt is in placing himself into a captaincy in the Procurement Division where he will be helping to buy airships for the Government, instead of insuring Government buildings?

Mr. HILL. I think the action of Elliott Roosevelt in signing up in the defense program is very laudable.

Mr. GROSS. Is it not a fact that there are about 40,000 or 50,000 American boys who are looking for the same thing but he walked in and secured it because he was the President's son?

Mr. HILL. Of course, the gentleman from Pennsylvania would denounce any Roosevelt for doing anything. [Applause.]

Mr. GROSS. That is not correct.

[Here the gavel fell.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DAVIS, for 1 week, on account of important business.

To Mr. DEROUEN, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To. Mr. JACOBSEN (at the request of Mr. HARRINGTON), indefinitely, on account of important official business.

To Mrs. O'DAY, for an indefinite period, on account of illness.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include two letters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow at the conclusion of the legislative business of the day I may address the House for 7 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RABAUT, by unanimous consent, was granted permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 10361. An act to provide for increasing the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, September 25, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1960. A letter from the Chairman, Reconstruction Finance Corporation, transmitting a report of the activities and expenditures of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the month of July 1940 (H. Doc. No. 959); to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed.

1961. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, pursuant to provisions of act of March 5, 1940, reports of the awarding of certain contracts; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. LEA: Committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. S. 162. An act to protect consumers and others as to purchase of wool products, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 2978). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. WALTER: Committee on the Judiciary. S. 2524. An act to incorporate the Military Order of the Purple Heart; without amendment (Rept. No. 2979). Referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. KEOGH: Committee on Claims. S. 3437. An act for the relief of the Franco-American Construction Co.; with amendment (Rept. No. 2975). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee on Claims. H. R. 10194. A bill for the relief of the late John L. Summers, former disbursing clerk, Treasury Department; without amendment (Rept. No. 2976). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee on Claims. H. R. 10354. A bill for the relief of Guy F. Allen, chief disbursing officer, Treasury Department, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 2977). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred, as follows:

By Mr. BOYKIN:

H. R. 10558. A bill to amend the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, as amended; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. DIMOND:

H. R. 10559. A bill to authorize the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska to create a public corporate authority to undertake slum clearance and projects to provide dwelling accommodations for families of low income and for persons engaged in national-defense activities and to issue bonds and other obligations of the authority for such purposes, and to authorize the Legislature of Puerto Rico to exercise certain powers with regard to dwelling accommodations for persons engaged in national-defense activities, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. VOORHIS of California:

H. R. 10560. A bill to provide for the issuance, by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, of regulations providing for more liberal policies in determining the service connection of disabilities, and for other purposes; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

By Mr. CLASON:

H. R. 10561. A bill establishing overtime rates of compensation for employees of the War Department, its field services, and the Panama Canal, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

By Mr. COX:

H. Con. Res. 89. Concurrent resolution to ratify the acquisition of certain foreign leaseholds in connection with the national-defense program; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. STEAGALL:

H. Res. 611. Resolution for the relief of Ellie B. Crawford; to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. HOFFMAN:

H. Res. 612. Resolution for investigation to ascertain if the national-defense program is being delayed by the methods used by certain persons and officials; to the Committee on Rules.

H. Res. 613. Resolution requesting certain information from the Secretary of War; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H. Res. 614. Resolution requesting certain information from the Secretary of the Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DELANEY:

H. R. 10562. A bill for the relief of Henry H. Smythe; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

By Mr. ANDREWS:

H. R. 10563. A bill for the relief of Mary Dorothy Sickler; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PETERSON of Georgia:

H. R. 10564. A bill authorizing the President of the United States to appoint Lee Watson Webb, Jr., a second lieutenant in the United States Army and then place him on the retired list; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. REECE of Tennessee:

H. R. 10565. A bill granting a pension to Zola O. Honeycutt; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

9320. By Mr. HORTON: Petition of the enrolled members of the Shoshone Tribe of Indians, requesting an investigation of the administration of the fund which was allocated for a land-purchase program; to the Committee on Rules.

9321. By the SPEAKER: Petition of Jenaro Rodriguez, Ponce, P. R., petitioning consideration of resolution with reference to compensating certain native Puerto Ricans for services rendered in the World War; to the Committee on War Claims.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1940

(Legislative day of Wednesday, September 18, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, whom thus we name, and yet Thou are unnamable, Thou art the unsearchable, whom we can never find, and yet by searching we find within ourselves that which is of Thee—the light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world: Grant unto us at this the beginning of another day that, our steps being ordered by Thee, we may find Thy peace which is even more blessed than vision. And, since all that we are is of Thee, build up in us, we pray Thee, Thine own nature, and plant our feet on the Rock of Ages, that we may never be content with mere transient happiness bought at the cost of faithless compromise. Make us to feel the glory of the loneliness and pain that comes from fearless following of the highest that we know. Give to us all the spirit of the Master whose unflinching loyalty to purity and truth, to honor and to duty, revealed Thine own appraisal of the eternal verities. In our Saviour's name we ask it. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Tuesday, September 24, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States, submitting nominations, were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 2524) to incorporate the Military Order of the Purple Heart.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 10464. An act to assist in the national-defense program by amending sections 3477 and 3737 of the Revised Statutes to permit the assignment of claims under public contracts; and

H. R. 10465. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to punish the willful injury or destruction of war material, or of war premises or utilities used in connection with war material, and for other purposes," approved April 20, 1918.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. MINTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] are necessarily absent.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] is absent on official business.

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], which was read, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

To the VICE PRESIDENT:

I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Special Committee to Investigate Campaign Expenditures.

JNO. E. MILLER.

SEPTEMBER 25, 1940.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair appoints the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] from the Special Committee to Investigate Campaign Expenditures.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE, TREASURY DEPARTMENT (S. DOC. NO. 290)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Treasury Department (general expenses, Coast Guard), fiscal year 1941, amounting to $300,000, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE, FEDERAL WORKS AGENCY (S. DOC. NO. 291)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Federal Works Agency (national-defense housing), fiscal year 1941, amounting to $150,000,000, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON AWARD OF CERTAIN NAVAL CONTRACTS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, reporting relative to the award of certain naval quantity contracts made under the act of March 5, 1940 (Public, No. 426, 76th Cong., 3d sess.), which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

JULY 1940 REPORT OF RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, submitting, pursuant to law, a report of the activities and expenditures of the Corporation for the month of July 1940, including statement of loan and other authorizations made during the month, and so forth, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

REPORT OF PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, transmitting, pursuant to law, the twenty-seventh annual report of that Commission for the year ended December 31, 1939, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate letters from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, lists of papers and documents on the files of the Departments of State, the Treasury, War (2), Agriculture, Commerce, and Labor; the Federal Trade Commission and the Work Projects Administration of the Federal Works Agency (4), which are not needed in the conduct of business and have no permanent value or historical interest, and requesting action looking to their disposition, which, with the accompanying papers, were referred to the Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Papers in the Executive Departments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. TOBEY members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BARKLEY, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 301) to authorize the acquisition of a suitable frame for the painting of the Signing of the Constitution to be used in mounting said painting in the Capitol Building, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH, from the Committee on Immigration, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6888) for the relief of Esther Jacobs, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 2176) thereon.

Mr. ANDREWS, from the Committee on Immigration, reported an amendment in the nature of a substitute to the bill (S. 4085) for the relief of Max von der Porten and his wife, Charlotte von der Porten, which was ordered to be printed; and he also submitted a supplemental report (pt. 2 of Rept. No. 2157) thereon.

Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (S. 4353) to restrict or regulate the delivery of checks drawn against funds of the United States, or any agency or instrumentality thereof, to addresses outside the United States, its Territories, and possessions, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 2177) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9989) authorizing the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to grant an easement in certain land to the city of Memphis, Tenn., for street-widening purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 2178) thereon.

Mr. SCHWARTZ, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5937) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of Lamborn & Co., reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 2179) thereon.

PRINTING OF PRAYERS OFFERED BY CHAPLAIN OF THE SENATE

Mr. HAYDEN, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred Senate Resolution 315 (submitted by Mr. NEELY on the 19th instant), reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That 2,500 copies of the prayers offered by the Reverend ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., Chaplain of the Senate, at the opening of the daily sessions of the Senate during the Seventieth to the Seventy-sixth Congress, inclusive, be printed and bound for the use of the Senate.

PRINTING OF HEARINGS BEFORE MILITARY AFFAIRS COMMITTEE ON SELECTIVE COMPULSORY MILITARY SERVICE

Mr. HAYDEN, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred Senate Resolution 318 (submitted by Mr. SHEPPARD on the 23d instant), reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 2 of the Printing Act approved March 1, 1907, the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate be, and is hereby, empowered to have printed for its use 2,500 additional copies of the hearings held before said committee during the current session on the bill (S. 4164) to protect the integrity and institutions of the United States through a system of selective compulsory military training and service.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on September 24, 1940, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 1379. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of Michigan to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, across the Straits of Mackinac at or near a point between St. Ignace, Mich., and the Lower Peninsula of Michigan; and

S. 1450. An act to provide funds for cooperation with school district No. 15, Froid, Mont., for extension of public-school buildings to be available to Indian children.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ANDREWS:

S. 4379. A bill to authorize the town of Jupiter, Fla., to lease certain land patented to such town pursuant to the provisions of section 3 of the act of July 3, 1926; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. McNARY:

S. 4380. A bill for the relief of Dave W. Stearns; to the Committee on Finance.

HOUSE BILLS PLACED ON CALENDAR

The following bills were each read twice by their titles and ordered to be placed on the calendar:

H. R. 10464. An act to assist in the national-defense program by amending sections 3477 and 3737 of the Revised Statutes to permit the assignment of claims under public contracts; and

H. R. 10465. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to punish the willful injury or destruction of war material, or of war premises or utilities used in connection with war material, and for other purposes," approved April 20, 1918.

EXTENSION OF CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE—AMENDMENTS

Mr. CHAVEZ, Mr. ELLENDER, and Mr. NORRIS each submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the bill (H. R. 960) extending the classified executive civil service of the United States, which were severally ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

RIVER AND HARBOR DEFENSE IMPROVEMENTS—AMENDMENT PERTAINING TO NORFOLK HARBOR, VA.

Mr. WALSH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 9972) authorizing the improvement of certain rivers and harbors in the interest of the national defense, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table, to be printed, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On page 2, between lines 20 and 21, insert the following:
"Norfolk Harbor, Va., House Document No. 683, Seventy-sixth Congress."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in support of the amendment intended to be proposed by me I present an extract from a letter received from the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, Navy Department, setting forth the urgent need for the project. I ask that the extract be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the extract above referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

We have been cooperating very closely with the War Department (Office of the Chief of Engineers) in connection with this bill, inasmuch as all of the projects therein are of vital interest to the Navy in connection with the national-defense program.

The Navy Department has just received an urgent letter from the commandant of the fifth naval district recommending that the project for providing additional anchorage area south of Craney Island in Norfolk Harbor be inserted in the subject bill.

This project, which will provide two anchorage spaces, at an estimated cost of $182,000, south of Craney Island, which is the naval fuel depot in Norfolk Harbor, is covered in detail in House Document No. 683, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session. (See Chief of Engineer's letter of March 19, 1940, p. 2, and pars. 8, 11 (b), 14, and 50.)

The increasing importance of the Hampton Roads area due to its central strategic location and enlarged defense plans now under way makes it necessary that additional anchorage areas be provided for naval craft. This area will be used for ships awaiting their turn to fuel at the Craney Island Depot; as a sheltered harbor for the increasing small naval craft used for loading stores, making minor ship's force repairs, liberty parties, and for the relief of the already crowded condition of other anchorage areas and dock spaces at the navy yard and the naval operating base.

The anchorage situation in the Elizabeth River at Norfolk has been made more acute owing to the necessity of providing buoy moorings for the large number of destroyers which are now basing at the operating base. Ships of the fleet are using the Craney Island Depot for fueling purposes on a continually increasing scale. It is contemplated that this anchorage will now be used entirely for naval craft rather than for barges, freighters, and other commercial ships, as contemplated in the original project and report. The estimated cost of $182,000 would appear very reasonable in proportion to the benefits to be obtained from this project.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS, 1941—AMENDMENT

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 10539) making supplemental appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

At the proper place in the bill, to insert the following:
"To the Secretary of Agriculture to reimburse holders of participation trust certificates of the cotton producers' pool, Form C–5–1, at the rate of $2.40 per bale to holders of record as of May 1, 1937, the sum of $4,320,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That payment shall be made under rules and regulations to be promulgated in harmony with the provisions of S. 2930, passed by the Senate on June 22, 1940."

NOTICE OF MOTION TO SUSPEND THE RULE—AMENDMENT

Mr. HAYDEN submitted the following notice in writing:

In accordance with rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that it is my intention to move to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI for the purpose of proposing to the bill (H. R. 10539) making supplemental appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, the following amendment, namely:
At the proper place in the bill, to insert the following:
"The Superintendent of Documents is hereby authorized to deliver to the Librarian of Congress, from the sales stock in the Government Printing Office, 250 sets of The Writings of George Washington, as published by the Bicentennial Commission, for distribution through international exchange and for such other distribution for the use of foreign governments as may be deemed appropriate."

Mr. HAYDEN also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 10539, supra, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

(For text of amendment referred to, see the foregoing notice.)

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR SUBMISSION OF REPORT ON THE DOMESTIC POTASH INDUSTRY

Mr. PITTMAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 319), which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

Resolved, That the report required to be made by the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys pursuant to Senate Resolution 274, Seventy-fourth Congress, second session, agreed to June 18, 1936, may be made at any time prior to the expiration of the Seventy-seventh Congress.

PAYMENT FOR CERTAIN ADVERTISEMENTS

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may offer a resolution to lie on the table, and also to have it read for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution will be received, lie on the table, and read for the information of the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 320) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State is requested to transmit to the Senate, if it is not incompatible with the public interest to do so, (1) a list of the names and addresses of the persons who have been reported to the Department of State as having paid for the advertisement which was published on page L 11 of the New York Times of July 15, 1940, under the caption "Defense now needs union now"; and (2) a list of the names and addresses of the persons who have been reported to the Department as having paid for any of the advertisements of the Committee To Defend America by Aiding the Allies.

GREETINGS TO THE AMERICAN LEGION FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the President to Raymond J. Kelly, national commander of the American Legion, on the occasion of the twenty-second annual national convention of the Legion in Boston, Mass.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, September 16, 1940.

MY DEAR COMMANDER KELLY: I appreciate greatly your kind invitation to be with you in Boston for the twenty-second annual national convention. I wish it had been possible for me to accept. I do, however, take pleasure in sending most cordial greetings to the officials and members of the American Legion in convention assembled.

This year the American Legion has come of age, having been founded in 1919. Much has occurred during the 21 years of its life. On the world scene came peace, then new forms of government, and now another tragic war.

During all these years since the Legion emerged from the World War it has earnestly devoted itself to promoting our national interests. It has consistently fostered good government, good citizenship, and national unity. Surely these spiritual resources, whose continuance and growth the Legion has so ably advocated, are imperative factors in the strength and peace of our Nation. That strength and peace must continue. We now find abroad serious conflict between those who wish for peace and free government and those who wish to destroy it. That test of strength has gathered force and, whether we like it or not, today it constitutes a threat against the peace of the entire world. We all hold dear our American way of life with our individual and national freedom. We must protect it against any form of aggression which may endanger it. So it is with great satisfaction that I view the Legion's interest in the advocacy of strengthening our national defenses.

With much of the world at war, I am confident that the million members of the Legion will play their full part in keeping the war away from our shores and in preventing it from imperiling our freedom, our institutions, our America. I hope you may have a most successful convention.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

Hon. RAYMOND J. KELLY,
National Commander, the American Legion, Hotel Statler, Boston, Mass.

DEMOCRACY IN MISSOURI—ADDRESS BY SENATOR LUCAS

[Mr. BARKLEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address by Senator LUCAS at Moberly, Mo., on Saturday, September 21, 1940, which appears in the Appendix.]

WORLD MOTHER OF MOTHER'S DAY

[Mr. DOWNEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD extension of remarks of Hon. Michael J. Stack, of Pennsylvania, in the House of Representatives, in 1938, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE NATIONAL DEBT—ARTICLE BY JUDGE FRANK SMATHERS

[Mr. SMATHERS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article by Judge Frank Smathers, published in the Waynesville (N. C.) Mountaineer of September 19, 1940, on the subject of the national debt, which appears in the Appendix.]

A WAR ON TWO FRONTS—EDITORIAL FROM NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

[Mr. WHEELER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the New York Daily News under the heading "A war on two fronts," which appears in the Appendix.]

HOW TO MURDER A DEMOCRACY—EDITORIAL FROM THE DAILY MIRROR

[Mr. NYE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the New York Daily Mirror of September 23 entitled "How To Murder a Democracy," which appears in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 960) extending the classified executive civil service of the United States.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, when the Senate recessed yesterday afternoon we were considering an amendment which was offered by me as a substitute for an amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD]. As I stated to the Senate yesterday, and as I repeat today, it is not my purpose to insist upon this amendment; and if it should be adopted, I expect to ask for its reconsideration provided another amendment which I propose to present to the Senate is adopted. I refer to an amendment to force competitive examinations for all of the positions to be filled under this measure.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I venture to suggest to the Senator, in view of the statement he has just made, that he simply ask unanimous consent to pass over this amendment until we reach the point where his other amendment can be considered; and, if that is agreed to, it will settle the matter.

Mr. ELLENDER. I suggested that course to the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD], but he has refused to have that done. He desires to take the amendments in order.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

Mr. ELLENDER. It is not my purpose to go into details again as to the reasons why this amendment of mine should be adopted, except to say that I am frank to admit to the Senate that my object in having these various employees exempted from the bill is to lessen the number of persons who would be permitted to become permanent civil-service employees of the Government without taking competitive examinations—which I maintain is a violation of the existing law.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], who is now in the Chamber, yesterday afternoon raised a very pertinent question in this debate, and one which I had proposed to discuss in connection with the amendment asking for competitive examinations; and that is with respect to the age qualifications and the physical qualifications of those now in the Government service who would be placed under the umbrella, as it were, if this bill should be enacted as now written.

Under the civil-service law, the rules provide that if a man is over a certain age—I think the limit is 55—he cannot secure civil-service employment; but if he is occupying a non-civil-service position, and is blanketed in by such a measure as that now before us, he may be 70 years of age and still may be taken in as a permanent civil-service employee. The only thing that would exclude him would be physical disability that would render him incapable of rendering the services he is called upon to perform.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator's statement leads me to ask this question: Does the Senator mean to say that the bill provides that when employees of the Government are legislated into the civil service, if a man is now over 55 years of age he is taken in just the same?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes, sir.

Mr. NORRIS. He is taken in regardless of his age?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes, sir; he is. In other words, if he applies in the ordinary manner for a position which is under civil service, the age restriction which, according to my recollection, is 55 years would apply against him; but if he is now employed in a department which is not under civil service, and his position is covered into the civil service, the age limit is waived. He may be 70 years of age and still may be legislated into permanent civil service. I ask the Senator, What effect would that have on those who are now in the civil service, and who have obtained their present status by virtue of having complied with all the civil-service laws and rules and regulations?

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me it would not have a very good effect. I confess I do not like it.

Mr. ELLENDER. That is one of the things that would happen under this law; and, in addition to that, such a person could not be forced to retire unless he had served 15 years, or unless he was physically disabled.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to say to the Senator that I am asking these questions of him with a view of getting light.

Mr. ELLENDER. I appreciate that.

Mr. NORRIS. I am asking them partially in view of the fact that I know the Senator from Louisiana, as chairman of the subcommittee, made quite an extended investigation of matters pertaining to the civil service. I was not on the committee, but I followed the result of the investigation as well as I could, mostly from newspaper accounts, and partly, as the Senator knows, from private interviews I had with him while the investigation was going on; and I was impressed with the investigation. In view of the Senator's knowledge of the subject, I am impressed with any amendment he may offer here because I believe he is doing it in the best of faith, and that his object is to improve the civil service; and that is what I want to do.

Mr. ELLENDER. I thank the Senator. That is my sole and only object.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no other object.

It seems to me that in times past, when we have voted to apply civil-service rules to employees by a blanket order, as we say, there always have been some injustices; but that appears to be the most practicable way of putting offices in the Federal Government under civil service. That is what we have done in the past; and I have usually supported measures of that kind, even though I thought they might do some injustice.

Mr. ELLENDER. I realize that that has been the custom. It has been done quite often, and I admit that they have not required any kind of examination, except in recent years. But that does not cure the evil.

The argument has been made that putting these men and women under the civil service will improve the efficiency of the Federal Government. I maintain that by the same token the civil service itself will be weakened. Over 650,000 persons are now employed under civil service. They have actually appeared before properly designated representatives of the Commission and have taken the examinations, and followed the rules and regulations that applied to them. And now, if this pending bill is adopted as written, they will say to themselves, "What is the use?" That is what I have heard throughout the investigations that I have conducted, "What is the use of my studying, or applying myself, or working hard, when no matter what I do, I get nowhere insofar as salaries, promotions in grade, and so forth are concerned. Those who have influence get ahead, and those who do not are left behind."

My sole and only object in proposing the pending amendment is to lessen the number of employees who would be blanketed in through a noncompetitive examination if the bill is enacted as written.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I have other matters which I propose to discuss with the Senate which may be pertinent to the question under discussion at this time, but I am going to postpone discussion of them now in order to avoid repetition when I offer another amendment following disposition of the one I have just offered; that is, if I can get the Chair to recognize me.

I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. The difference between the Senator's substitute and the amendment offered by the Senator from New York, as I understand, is that the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana adds assistant United States attorneys, deputy marshals, and deputy collectors.

Mr. ELLENDER. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Whereas the amendment offered by the Senator from New York provides for the exemption of all officers whose confirmation is required by the Senate.

Mr. ELLENDER. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. As to the matter of age, we all know that deputy collectors in the Internal Revenue Service are not appointed; the fact is no one in the Internal Revenue Service is appointed, although not under the civil service, when over 55 years of age. There is an age limit of 55 years. Of course, the civil-service rules provide that no one over 55 can take a civil-service examination for a position under the civil service, as I understand.

The practical difference under the bill between deputy collectors and other civil-service employees is that they are given credit for the service they have rendered under appointments which were made before they were 55. They are given that credit in the form of noncompetitive examination on the theory that their experience has in a measure qualified them for the work, otherwise they would not be retained in the service.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption at that point?

Mr. BARKLEY. Certainly.

Mr. ELLENDER. The amendment which I propose to offer would give to the persons to whom the Senator refers a 10-point advantage because of their experience; in other words, it would give them the full advantage to which their experience entitles them.

Mr. BARKLEY. We have been doing the same thing for other employees. The postmasters were all given a noncompetitive examination, and it has worked out very well. There were some cases in which it was not thought that the record of the postmaster entitled him to have a noncompetitive examination; therefore he was required to go in with others and take a competitive examination. I have in mind one case where the postmaster who had been in office for 4 years was No. 5 on the list established by the examination, and therefore could not be reappointed, because he was not one of the three highest. I have not heard any great complaint against the policy of giving the postmasters, where they were entitled to it, the benefit of a noncompetitive examination, on the theory that their experience of 4 years entitled them to it. In the case of deputy collectors and deputy marshals it probably would have been even longer. But that is beside the question.

The point is that really no difference is being made between deputy collectors and deputy marshals and present civil-service employees, because they have not been appointed after they were 55 years old, they have had the benefit of their experience, and because of that they would be given, under the bill, as has been done in most all other cases, the benefit of a noncompetitive examination.

Mr. ELLENDER. I do not wish to disagree with the majority leader with reference to the age provision, but I know of many deputy marshals who were appointed when they were much over 55 years old. I know of some United States district attorneys who were much over 55 when they were appointed, and I know of a few collectors who were over 55, who have been slipped in by some way or other.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know of any superannuated collectors or deputy collectors or deputy marshals. It may be that in some cases a man over 55 years old has been made an assistant United States attorney. I am not so much concerned about whether assistant United States attorneys are covered under the civil service or not.

Mr. ELLENDER. How about the United States marshals?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not in favor of covering United States marshals, or collectors of internal revenue, and the amendment offered by the Senator from New York eliminates them. But storekeeper gagers have been under the civil service for a long time, revenue agents, representing the Income Tax Division of the Treasury, have been under the civil service for a long time, and I do believe there is just as much reason for putting deputy collectors under the civil service as there is for putting these others under the civil service. But I do not think the same reasoning attaches to an assistant United States attorney.

Mr. ELLENDER. Since the majority leader has expressed himself with reference to assistant district attorneys, how does he feel about deputy marshals?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think that a civil-service examination probably is more calculated to bring out the qualifications of a deputy United States marshal than of an assistant United States attorney, because there are many things which enter into the qualifications of a lawyer to prosecute crime which may not enter into the qualifications of a man to be deputy United States marshal. But I think that of these three lists, the deputy collectors come first in merit, so far as the wisdom of the policy is concerned. Deputy marshals I put in category No. 2, and United States attorneys I would put in category No. 3.

Mr. ELLENDER. We are in agreement, because they are listed in that order in my amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; the Senator's amendment would exclude specifically all deputy marshals, deputy collectors, and assistant United States attorneys. Perhaps they should be excluded, and my mind is not closed on that question at all, so far as my vote is concerned, but I think that without exception deputy internal-revenue collectors all over the country feel that they have just as much right to be under civil service as do the men working right along with them, in the same office, in the same building, who, we will say, are storekeeper gagers, who go out to test the quality of whisky, and revenue agents, who go out to investigate whether a man has made a false return on his income tax.

Mr. ELLENDER. I have no doubt about what the Senator has just said, that those who are now employed are very anxious to get under civil service in order that their jobs may be made permanent. There is no doubt about that. What concerns me is the plight of the thousands upon thousands who have taken examinations, and who are qualified today to hold the 200,000 positions that are affected by this bill, but are denied the right to be considered for them.

Mr. BARKLEY. They have not taken any examination, because none were held, since they were not under civil service.

Mr. ELLENDER. Many examinations have been held, whereby people have qualified to hold civil-service positions. There are about 800,000 on the current registers right now, as I pointed out on several occasions.

Mr. BARKLEY. They have taken examinations for other positions, but there has been no examination for deputy marshals, or assistant United States attorneys, or deputy collectors.

Mr. ELLENDER. Not specifically for those offices, it is true; but I say that a good many in the other departments of Government, who are under civil service, would welcome an opportunity to be considered for promotions to some of these newly created civil-service positions. And as I just stated, there are 800,000 on the civil-service registers who are denied the privilege of competing for these appointments.

Mr. President, I repeat that it is not my purpose to go again into the details of the argument and I now leave the matter to the disposition of the Senate.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, of course I regret that it is necessary for me to oppose the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Louisiana as a substitute for my amendment. My amendment eliminates from the purview of the bill all of the positions requiring Presidential appointment and Senate confirmation. The Senator would go further than that; he would eliminate from the purview of the bill the deputies and the assistants, the rank-and-file employees, with whom the President and the Senate have nothing to do.

One of the most vital and important agencies, in my judgment, which should be covered by the merit system is the agency known as the office of the collector of internal revenue. That agency was once covered by the civil service, but Congress took it out. When it was covered by civil service, the efficiency of the personnel was higher than was the efficiency of the personnel when it became a patronage agency.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I am glad to yield.

Mr. HATCH. I am not sure, but I am thinking, as the Senator is speaking, about the collectors, and I think that in 1924 our party adopted a specific plank about the very matter the Senator is discussing, pledging that collectors of internal revenue, as I recall, would be placed under the civil service. Is that correct?

Mr. MEAD. That is correct, and every Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Republican and Democrat, has recommended to the Congress in every annual report that the men involved in the collection of taxes be covered into the civil service.

There are no existing registers and there are no qualified applicants for these positions. There may be qualified applicants for stenographic, clerical, scientific, or technical positions, but if the entire personnel of this office were immediately required to take a wide open competitive examination its continuity would be disrupted. The only way I can see to accomplish the best result, the orderly way, the way recommended by every authority and expert, is to allow the agency to operate as it is, to establish a proper standard of examination and fitness, and then to have the employees in that service take an examination, compete with each other for these positions, and if they are successful they are then to be considered permanent employees of the office.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; I am glad to yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator from New York, of course, is now discussing, in a measure, the second amendment I propose to offer, which provides for competitive examinations. I wish to call the attention of the Senator, however, to the fact that, under the provisions of the bill, the President would not have to designate a department and call for the examinations at once. Furthermore, even if the President should call for such examinations, the persons now employed could remain so employed until others qualify, and that would cover a period of 6 months under the bill as it is written, as the Senator knows.

Mr. MEAD. Yes; but if the President should designate one department, the Bureau of Internal Revenue, for example, and require a wide open examination in it, its service would be disrupted.

This is what an unbiased organization, the League of Women Voters, has to say on that point. Certainly they are not concerned with the building up of a patronage organization. As patriotic and devoted women, they are deeply concerned in the improvement of the efficiency of our Government, and they say:

> Noncompetitive or qualifying examinations have the advantage of not interrupting the continuity of Government service as seriously as open competitive examinations, at the same time testing whether or not the person holding the position is qualified to continue to hold it, and eliminating the obviously incompetent. It is estimated that the percentage of failures in noncompetitive examinations in the Federal service system varies from 12 to 25 percent. The fact, however, that the majority of persons taking qualified examinations usually pass assures a continuity of service which is an important factor in Government administration.

So, Mr. President, in view of the fact that we are liberalizing the bill, protecting the prerogatives of Senators, insofar as confirmation is concerned, and at the same time covering the agency under civil service, so far as the rank and file is concerned, I believe the amendment which I offered goes far enough, while the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana as a substitute for my amendment, would injure or impair the progress we are attempting to make.

The Senator from Louisiana made a statement a while ago concerning the investigation he conducted, which was a very laudable one, with respect to the employees and the conditions which he found among employees in the Federal service. I wish to say to my distinguished colleague that, as the chairman of the committee in charge of the reorganization legislation, I had to do with the civil-service features of that bill.

I held hearings, and I heard the representatives of all the employee groups and of all groups interested in the civil service, and of a great many individuals in the civil service, and I recommended and had written into the reorganization bill a code of practice which would enable every employee, man or woman, to have his or her day in court. We provided for setting up boards of review on which were representatives of the employee and the employer, and I find that there is provision in the pending bill for boards of review similar to those provided for in the reorganization bill.

I have an amendment which I shall offer a little later which will require that the employee have representation on the board of review, and that he have 5 days in which to study his case before he is called upon to present it to the board of review. So in the pending bill we set up a merit system, and we add further protection to the employees covered under the merit system.

Mr. President, I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana will not be adopted.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to ask the Senator from New York a question. I wish he would again, for my information, state briefly what is intended to be accomplished by his amendment. Two amendments have been offered. I refer to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

Mr. MEAD. The amendment which I offered would prevent the President from covering within the civil service United States marshals, collectors of customs and of internal revenue, United States attorneys in charge of the districts, and such other officers as require confirmation by the Senate, while the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana would eliminate from the bill not only those officers who require Senate confirmation, not only the head of the agency or of the activity in the region, but it would eliminate also the rank and file employee whom we are anxious to cover within the civil service.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator does not mean to intimate that all the clerical forces in the Bureau of Internal Revenue would be affected by my amendment, does he? It would only affect deputies, field men, as I understand. Those are what I call deputies.

Mr. MEAD. Yes. Those are what I would call the rank and file, the deputy collectors, the deputy marshals, the deputy United States attorneys.

Mr. ELLENDER. What about the thousands of men and women employed in clerical positions in the Bureau of Internal Revenue? The Senator does not mean that my amendment would exclude them, does he?

Mr. MEAD. No; not at all. They are already in the civil service. Neither the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana nor my amendment would touch them.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Assuming a Senator believes that some of the employees referred to should be taken out from under the bill by the Senator's amendment and some of them should not be, he is then presented with a dilemma as to how to vote on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York. Take the Bureau of Internal Revenue, for instance. It seems to me there is very good and logical reason why the employees in that Bureau should be under civil service. They would be taken out of civil service by the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. MEAD. Both amendments would take them out.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; both amendments would. On the other hand, if the bill is not amended in any way, United States district attorneys, as well as United States marshals, will be under civil service.

Mr. MEAD. That is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. I think I can see good reason why United States attorneys should not be under civil service. I do not know that it is easy to explain why, but it seems to me there is a great difference between employing an attorney to try a lawsuit and to employ someone to perform the duties which are performed by internal-revenue officials, whose line of work is so entirely different. United States marshals, for instance, have a peculiar relationship to the Federal courts. It seems to me there are some reasons why it would be even better if the courts appointed the marshals. I should like, if I could, to take them, and their deputies also, out of the political arena, but if the courts had no voice in the appointment of the marshals and if they were under civil service, it seems to me there might arise some difficulties of a very serious nature.

I can speak only as a result of my own experience. I presume all Senators have had a similar experience. My experience was a good many years ago. It has been some time since I have had access to political patronage in any party. However, there was a time when I made recommendations which resulted in the appointment of United States marshals. As a rule there were several candidates, and I finally selected one and recommended him and he was appointed. As to the appointment of deputies, it seems to me perfectly natural for the man who owes his appointment to a certain Senator to consult the Senator when he comes to select his deputies. If the Senator wants to use his influence, he can come pretty near naming the deputies. As a matter of practice, perhaps more often than not he did name the deputies.

A new United States marshal might write to a Senator and say, "I have been appointed, and I thank you very sincerely. I have four deputies to appoint. Would you like to suggest whom I should appoint?" The political power exercising that privilege, which arises rather naturally, builds up a political machine, and, as a rule, deputy marshals become politicians.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Hatch Act will correct that situation.

Mr. NORRIS. As the Senator from Kentucky suggests, probably the Hatch Act will correct that situation. I hope it will.

Such a condition does not conduce to good government. The marshal and his deputies travel around over the district or the State and become part of a political machine.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I may be able to add a little enlightenment which may not have been brought to his attention as yet.

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. By the passage of the bill we would not cover anybody into the civil service.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that.

Mr. MEAD. We would simply eliminate some prohibitions which the Congress has previously written into the law. After we pass the enabling act, the President may, at his discretion, cover one or the other or all agencies within the civil service.

With respect to attorneys, who are the subject of the able Senator's discussion, we do not change the law at all. The law now permits the President to cover all assistant United States attorneys into the civil service, and we are merely including that permission in the bill. There is now no law against the President taking the very same action which we recommend in the bill, or which is recommended in my amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand the Senator's amendment, it takes them out entirely. If the Senator's amendment were agreed to, the President would not have any authority to put United States attorneys under civil service.

Mr. MEAD. That is true as to chief United States attorneys. As to assistant United States attorneys, he would still have the same power he now has. In addition, I will say to the Senator that the Reed commission is now studying the entire subject of employment of attorneys by the Federal Government; and we understand that the Reed commission will make a recommendation to the President with reference to the employment of attorneys in the United States Government service. The President in turn will submit the recommendation to the Congress. So our committee, in reporting the bill, felt, as did the House committee, that we should take only general action with reference to the employment of attorneys and allow the President to cover them in if he so desires, and if he does not, leave them as they are today.

The first point I make is that the Reed commission is now studying the entire subject. The second point is that the President now has the power to cover assistant United States attorneys into the civil service. My amendment would not change that situation.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator were a district attorney, would he want to serve with a group of assistants whom he did not want and whom he did not select?

Mr. MEAD. We are not making any change——

Mr. CONNALLY. I am asking the Senator a question.

Mr. MEAD. Of course, I am not an attorney, and I know very little about the ethics and practices of the profession.

Mr. CONNALLY. It is not a question of ethics. The district attorney is charged with the enforcement of the law in his district and with a multitude of other duties. It seems to me he ought to have the right to select his assistants, with the approval of the Attorney General. He may not appoint anyone unless the Attorney General approves the appointment. A United States attorney ought to select his own subordinates. I should not want to serve in a job if all my subordinates were selected by somebody else, and I could not control their actions.

Mr. MEAD. We have a great many departments in the Government.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Attorney General represents the President. Every assistant district attorney who is appointed is recommended by the district attorney. His name goes to the Attorney General, and he is thoroughly investigated by the F. B. I. He may be appointed only after the Attorney General approves the appointment. The Attorney General represents the President of the United States. Why is not that system, in which the district attorney initiates the appointment but does not control it, satisfactory? He selects a man whom he knows, in whom he has confidence, and with whom he can work in harmony. Why is not that system superior to having them all covered into the civil service under an Executive order, like a bunch of sheep?

Mr. MEAD. That is just what we are doing. My amendment would take the United States attorney in charge of the district out of the purview of the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. We ought also to take out his assistants. If the proposal is good for the district attorney himself, why is it not good for his right arm, who is his first assistant; his left arm, who is his second assistant; his right leg, who is his third assistant; and so on?

Mr. MEAD. We are not changing the existing law one iota with reference to assistant United States attorneys. We are leaving the existing law as it is.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I do not understand that. Under the existing law there is no question about whether or not United States attorneys are under civil service. They are not under civil service.

Mr. MEAD. But they may be covered into the civil service by the President under existing law if he so desires. That is the law. But he has not exercised the authority, nor has the Civil Service Commission exercised the authority.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. If that is the law, it seem to me it ought to be changed, especially as it affects a small office. The office of the district attorney is a law office. There is a very close personal relationship between him and his assistants. A district attorney may not get along with his deputies. If he has only two or three deputies, it is much more important than if he has a large staff. Suppose he tells one of his deputies "I want a prosecution brought against certain individuals." The deputy may not agree with him. He may go before the grand jury and present the case in such a way that the grand jury will not return an indictment. Yet the district attorney is charged with responsibility for the operation of the office. The relationship is entirely different from the relationship between other heads of offices and departments and the employees in their offices.

Mr. MEAD. We are doing nothing about it in this bill.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I think we ought to do something about it.

Mr. MEAD. We are leaving the situation as it is. We are merely limiting the existing law by saying to the President, "You may not cover the United States attorney in charge of the district into the civil service." The existing law permits the President to cover into the civil service all the attorneys in the service of the United States if he so desires.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Why not make the same provision with respect to the assistants?

Mr. MEAD. The Reed commission is now making a study of the employment of attorneys, and the conditions under which they are to be employed. That applies to all the United States attorneys in the Government service. We thought we ought not to act until the Reed commission makes its report.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I do not think we need an investigation of such a simple question by any committee or commission. Any lawyer who has ever run a law office knows that it is not desirable for a man running a law office to have working under him two or three assistants who are not responsible to him.

Mr. MEAD. In view of the fact that the system is working now, we are not proposing to change the system.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. It is proposed to change it so far as the district attorneys are concerned.

Mr. MEAD. Only to meet the objection made on the floor. To meet that objection, we prepared an amendment and sent it to the desk. The committee does not recommend it. The amendment would prevent the President from covering the chief United States attorneys into the civil service. I am perfectly willing to withdraw the amendment. It is not my amendment. I am presenting it because of the objection which arose on the floor. I should prefer to leave the provision just as the committee reported it, which would leave the status just as it is today.

The President may cover attorneys into the civil service if he so desires. He does not wish to do so. Perhaps the Department of Justice feels as does the Senator. Perhaps it will always continue to feel that way. We are not doing anything about it. We are not taking issue with existing conditions, and we do not wish to race ahead of the findings of the Reed Commission. We feel that the system is now working satisfactorily.

I should be perfectly willing to withdraw the amendment now at the desk, so that the status quo would remain; but in view of the attitude of a considerable number of Senators I thought I ought to protect them in their right of confirmation, and that the bill should contain no provision which would change the present situation with reference to the appointment of United States attorneys.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I think we certainly ought to do one thing or the other, because it seems to me absolutely illogical to have a district attorney put in one position and his assistants put in a different position.

Mr. MEAD. We are not doing anything about either. We are simply requiring that the practice in vogue for years, which requires Senate confirmation of Presidential appointments, be continued; but we are not doing a thing with reference to the appointment of United States attorneys. We are leaving that matter where it is, out of the bill, unless the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana should be adopted.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it seems to me this discussion rather discloses the fact that both these amendments ought to be rejected. Even then the situation would not be entirely satisfactory. I do not believe we can come out of this dilemma in a way which will be satisfactory, no matter which course we take.

There is much force in the argument that if a district attorney—and it applies to a marshal in the same way—who is held responsible for his deputies, is under the law, deprived of the right to appoint his deputies, he is put in a position that is unfair to him and as a result often there may not be a proper enforcement of the law.

A deputy marshal may have to do, under the instruction of his superior, the marshal himself, with a murder case, a kidnaping case, or some other case of extreme importance. If he is not responsible to his chief, he may refuse to obey the chief's orders, for his office is secure. He may at least cause difficulty. It seems to me that such situations would be quite common between the marshal and his deputy. I know, as I said awhile ago, that when the marshal is subject to political appointment, politics extends to his deputies. The marshal and his deputies are, as a matter of practice, often named by the same man, perhaps a United States Senator, or a Member of the House of Representatives. They are named because they can do the most good to the man who made their appointment. That raises a condition, on the other hand, that is just as bad as the one which it is sought to remedy.

The United States marshal is subject to the action of the court. It seems to me it would be well and, perhaps, would be an improvement to have him appointed by the court; and then let the marshal appoint his deputies. He is responsible for what the deputy does. The most efficient method, it seems to me, if it could be shorn of its political aspects and politics could be entirely eliminated, would be for the marshal to appoint his own deputies, since he is responsible for everything they do. I remember a great many years ago when a marshal was appointed there would immediately spring up a number of candidates for deputies. They would resort to all kinds of things. Sometimes the deputy would be a candidate for marshal. If he thought his competitor had the inside track, he would make a deal with him, would come to his support, and then get an appointment under the marshal. It would be found in the end that probably he was appointed the first deputy. As everyone knows, these conditions were not conducive to good administration. I should like to see them remedied; but, on the other hand, we run into the other difficulty.

It seems to me, under the circumstances, that not only the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Louisiana but the amendment offered by the Senator from New York also ought to be rejected.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I am not interested particularly one way or the other in the immediately pending amendment because it is relatively minor, but I am very deeply interested in the key amendment which the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] intends subsequently to offer; and since I may unavoidably be called from the floor for a few hours, I desire to take this opportunity to register my feeling about it. I am referring to the amendment which the able Senator from Louisiana intends to submit requiring competitive instead of noncompetitive examinations by way of approach to life tenure under the civil service for 200,000 political patronage appointees, who will be brought into the classified service by the terms of this bill.

Mr. President, I do not care whether the original appointees are Republicans or Democrats; I care nothing about the political complexion of any of them; in fact, I have been asserting this same principle under all administrations. I think that the principle of free competition, open to all citizens, with the decision on a merit basis, is the heart and soul of correct civil service in a democracy. I think that when it is proposed to allow 200,000 political appointees to acquire virtually life tenure on the public pay roll we ought, at least, require competitive examinations which will permit the remainder of the citizenship of the country an equal opportunity of approach to those positions. It seems to me that the noncompetitive protection which this bill throws around 200,000 political appointees is a parody on the words "civil service," and certainly it is a parody on the phrase "the merit system."

Mr. President, the able Senator from New York, whom I again compliment for the fine work he has done upon this bill, many sections of which I heartily applaud, says that the adoption of an amendment to this bill requiring competitive instead of noncompetitive examinations in determining relative qualifications for civil service would be a "killing" amendment. That is his phrase. I said last night it would be a key amendment, because, in my view, it is fundamental to a merit system that competitive qualifications shall be measured. The able Senator from New York said that it would be a "killing" amendment. I assume that what he means is that there would be ultimate difficulty in the passage of the bill in the other House. I cannot believe that he means it would be a "killing" amendment, so far as true civil service is concerned, for the Senate of the United States to assert that 200,000 political appointees should demonstrate their qualifications in a competitive examination before they acquire virtually life tenure on the public pay roll. Certainly there is nothing "killing" about the amendment which the Senator from Louisiana proposes to submit, so far as the spirit of the civil service is concerned, if by civil service is meant the true merit system.

If by the term "civil service" is meant simply a camouflage for perpetuated patronage—and unfortunately there is entirely too much of that at the present time through the choice under our civil-service practice which is given to the appointing officer to make a selection among the three highest eligibles—then there may be a high degree of welcome mortality involved in this amendment. But if it is meant that this amendment would be "killing" to the theory and spirit of the true merit system, I am totally unable to comprehend the application of the phrase. If, on the other hand, the Senator is correct, and this would be a "killing" amendment because the other House would not agree to it, then we can cross that bridge when we come to it in conference.

I certainly would not criticize the able Senator from New York if in conference he was unable to sustain a Senate amendment requiring competitive examinations if the defeat of the legislation were to depend upon that decision. But I am totally unable to understand why the Senate should not assert its belief in competitive examinations, if that is the Senate's belief, and let the conferees take the responsibility for determining whether or not the House shall be permitted to turn that sort of a virtuous requirement into a "killing" amendment. It need not be a "killing" amendment even so far as the House is concerned, because it could be eliminated in conference if necessary. That is no reason why the Senate should not assert its own judgment.

Mr. President, I think the committee itself would agree with what I am saying if it felt free to express fully its own mind. The report of the committee on the question of competitive versus noncompetitive examinations says, on page 8:

> Consideration was given by the committees of both Houses to the advisability of competitive and noncompetitive examinations for these positions, and your committee agree with the House that the method provided in this bill—
>
> Namely, the noncompetitive method—
> is as satisfactory and fair as can be obtained with any hope of enactment.

Mind you, Mr. President, the committee itself does not say that noncompetitive examinations are satisfactory and are fair. The committee knows better. It simply says that such noncompetitive examinations are as satisfactory and as fair as can be obtained with any subsequent hope of the enactment of the legislation; all of which comes back to the proposition that they are afraid of the action in the other House. I repeat, Mr. President, that that is a bridge that can be crossed when we come to it.

The problem which the able Senator from Louisiana will present to the Senate is whether the Senate believes, in the first instance, that 200,000 political appointees shall have an easy, automatic, noncompetitive approach to permanent tenure on the public pay roll. It seems to me this is an utterly indefensible proposition from any standpoint whatever, and, if the noncompetitive feature is to remain in the bill, it seems to me that the bill ought to be labeled "An act to provide life tenure for 200,000 political patronage appointees and to postpone the application of the merit system until 1960, when the incumbents will have died or be ready to quit."

Mr. President, every correct civil-service principle in theory and in practice is based on an original, free, open competition to all citizens on an equal basis. The best man wins. Is not that what the merit system means—that the best man wins? How does the best man have a chance to win if a noncompetitive examination protects a political incumbent, and shuts off every other citizen from any approach to the job?

When civil service is extended to these 200,000 incumbents not heretofore under merit classification, it is perfectly obvious that this fundamental rule of equal approach to these positions cannot wholly apply anyway, because the incumbents have a great advantage through their familiarity with their jobs. But that is all the more reason why an extra effort should be made to preserve as much as possible of the fundamental competitive merit principle rather than, as in this bill, not only to abandon the principle but also affirmatively and conclusively to reject it by outlawing all competition. That is not my idea of the merit system.

Why noncompetitive examinations? If an incumbent, enjoying the natural advantage of familiarity with the job, cannot win a competitive examination, he certainly does not merit permanent civil-service status; and under those circumstances the protection of permanent tenure should not be thrown around his shoulders. Why call it an extension of the merit system when it is proposed to confirm this incumbent's life tenure in his job without any recourse whatever to measuring competitive qualifications to determine where the merit lies? Why create this job monopoly regardless of competitive merit?

Mr. President, I think it is pretty generally known, and I think the RECORD sustains me when I say, that I am a thoroughgoing believer in civil service and the merit system in public administration. I have always favored its maximum expansion. Indeed, for example, I have persistently sought for years legislation under which a pavement-pounding letter-carrier could hope to aspire to become First Assistant Postmaster General of the United States without any consultation with his precinct captain or any other political boss, including his Representative and his Senator. I want a maximum expansion of true civil service. I will gladly vote for this bill if it is an approach in the direction of true civil service. It is in many aspects, and again I congratulate the able Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] and his committee upon many sections of this measure, to which I heartily give my approval; but it seems to me it contains a fundamental, all-controlling vice when, in the name of the merit system, it proposes that 200,000 political appointees shall attain jobs for life without ever opening any of these places to a free, open competition to determine where the best-qualified employee can be obtained. It seems to me that this noncompetitive formula is neither civil service nor democracy.

The able Senator from New York has said that both the Republican and the Democratic Party platforms have pledged themselves to this expansion of the civil service. I think he is taking in too much territory. Unquestionably they have pledged themselves to the expansion of the civil service; but, so far as I am concerned, I would read a pledge in favor of expanding the civil service to be a pledge against covering 200,000 political employees into the classified service of the country without any competitive examinations whatever. I am unable to consent to the notion that the pending bill, with its noncompetitive opportunity for the incumbent to "cinch" his job without any competitive challenge whatever is a response to any party platform which pledges an expansion of the civil service.

It seems to me that the whole thing comes down to a few fundamental questions, and these are the questions:

Shall these permanent lifetime positions in the civil establishment of the Government be available in the first instance to all citizens, and shall they go to the best qualified citizens, or shall those who were political patronage employees in the first instance monopolize the approach to these permanent positions to the exclusion of all other citizens? I answer that question, "No," and I can accept no compromise in respect to the answer.

Or the question might be put in this way: Shall this so-called extension of the civil service stem from merit or from politics? Obviously, as a physical fact, it stems from politics so long as political appointees are the sole and exclusive beneficiaries of the extended civil service. It does not stem from merit until there are free, open, competitive examinations to determine who gets the job.

Or the question might be asked in this way: Shall we expand the merit principle by making relative merit the price of a permanent Federal job, or shall we subordinate relative merit to original political pull?

Mr. President, that is all I have to say on this subject. I feel very deeply about it. The same subject, in a slightly different form, has been before the Senate in previous years upon one and perhaps two occasions. In each of those instances I have said the thing I am now saying, and I have taken the same position; and in each of those instances the Senate, by a majority vote, has agreed with my position. I think the Senate again should agree with the amendment of the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], when it shall be presented, to substitute competitive for noncompetitive examinations. The Senate should agree because the committee itself, among other things, by the very nature of the language in its own report, prefers competitive to noncompetitive examinations, and submits only the excuse to defend this provision of the bill that the adoption and requirement of competitive examinations might handicap the final passage of the measure. I repeat, that bridge can be crossed when it is reached in conference. In the first instance, the duty of the Senate is to settle this thing on its merits if we are to have any element of merit considered in connection with this so-called merit-system legislation.

The bill itself, in many aspects, is splendid. The able Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD], who is in charge of it, is perfectly obviously a devoted and sincere friend of the civil service, as I hope I am also. I regret that there is this difference of opinion between us respecting this particular factor; but I have felt the same way about it for 20 years, and I always shall continue to feel the same way about it. I think that when civil service is expanded through the blanketing in of vast groups of employees not theretofore covered, the very least concession that can be made to the reality of relative merit is to open the positions to competitive examinations so that merit may prevail. Otherwise we keep the word of promise to the ear and break it to the hope.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD].

Mr. ELLENDER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	Lodge	Shipstead
Andrews	Ellender	McKellar	Smathers
Ashurst	Frazier	McNary	Smith
Austin	George	Maloney	Stewart
Bailey	Gerry	Mead	Taft
Barbour	Gibson	Miller	Thomas, Idaho
Barkley	Gillette	Minton	Thomas, Okla.
Bilbo	Green	Murray	Thomas, Utah
Bulow	Guffey	Neely	Townsend
Burke	Gurney	Norris	Tydings
Byrd	Harrison	Nye	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Hatch	O'Mahoney	Van Nuys
Capper	Hayden	Overton	Wagner
Caraway	Herring	Pepper	Walsh
Chavez	Hill	Pittman	Wheeler
Clark, Idaho	Holt	Radcliffe	White
Clark, Mo.	Hughes	Reed	Wiley
Connally	Johnson, Calif.	Schwartz
Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Schwellenbach
Davis	King	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD]. [Putting the question.] The "ayes" seem to have it.

Mr. MEAD. I ask for a division.

The Senate proceeded to divide.

Mr. MEAD. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On a division, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. One moment. The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] as amended by the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER].

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I think this is a very important matter, and I suggest the absence of a quorum. I desire to have a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana was just adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator make the motion, or does he enter the motion?

Mr. MEAD. I believe it is more important to have a quorum present, and therefore I suggest the absence of a quorum, with the purpose in mind of asking for a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana was agreed to. I enter the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	Lodge	Shipstead
Andrews	Ellender	McKellar	Smathers
Ashurst	Frazier	McNary	Smith
Austin	George	Maloney	Stewart
Bailey	Gerry	Mead	Taft
Barbour	Gibson	Miller	Thomas, Idaho
Barkley	Gillette	Minton	Thomas, Okla.
Bilbo	Green	Murray	Thomas, Utah
Bulow	Guffey	Neely	Townsend
Burke	Gurney	Norris	Tydings
Byrd	Harrison	Nye	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Hatch	O'Mahoney	Van Nuys
Capper	Hayden	Overton	Wagner
Caraway	Herring	Pepper	Walsh
Chavez	Hill	Pittman	Wheeler
Clark, Idaho	Holt	Radcliffe	White
Clark, Mo.	Hughes	Reed	Wiley
Connally	Johnson, Calif.	Schwartz
Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Schwellenbach
Davis	King	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, in order that the Senate may know the parliamentary situation, let me say that I believe the pending question is the motion to reconsider the vote by which the so-called Ellender substitute for my amendment was agreed to. Following the action taken by the Senate on the motion to reconsider that vote will come my original amendment, either as amended by the Ellender amendment or standing by itself as I originally introduced it. Will that be the situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the Chair understands, the Senator from New York entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from New York. If the motion to reconsider is agreed to, the question will recur on the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana. If the motion is not agreed to, the question will recur on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York as amended.

The question recurs on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the substitute amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana was agreed to.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is not debatable.

Mr. ELLENDER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HATCH. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from New York, I thought, still had the floor, and had not surrendered the floor, and without securing recognition from the Chair, the Senator from Louisiana moved that the motion made by the Senator from New York be tabled. My inquiry is, How can that be done? How can a Senator be taken off his feet in that manner?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would have to hold that when the Senator from New York made the motion to reconsider, the Chair had a perfect right to recognize some other Senator to discuss and debate the motion if he so desired.

Mr. HATCH. I have no doubt of the correctness of the Chair's ruling that the Chair has a right to recognize another Senator. My point is that the Senator from Louisiana had not been recognized when he made his motion.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I was standing asking recognition by the Chair when the Senator from New York made his motion. I believe that is done every day on the floor of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To simplify the matter, the Chair will recognize the Senator from New York to speak upon his motion to reconsider.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. ELLENDER. Is a motion to lay on the table debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not.

Mr. ELLENDER. I thought I had made the motion, and that the Chair had so ruled.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from New York.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, as I understand, the motion made by the Senator from Louisiana has not been officially received at the desk, and I am speaking as though I had not been interrupted by the Senator from Louisiana. I think it is very important that the parliamentary situation be thoroughly understood by the Senate. I am not anxious to forestall any motions which may be made by the Senator from Louisiana or any other Senator.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The reason why I raised the point was that I wanted very much to have the Senator from New York make the explanation he is making. I did not want the debate limited. I think the question is an important one. I certainly hope the Senator from Louisiana will not press, now or hereafter, a motion which would prevent some of us from speaking. Other Senators might like to have the privilege of saying a few words on the question.

Mr. MEAD. I thank the able Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. President, the Senate, on a division, adopted the substitute for my amendment which was offered by the able Senator from Louisiana. By that action the bill before us is considerably weakened. That action eliminates the possibility of the rank-and-file employees known as deputies in the collectors' offices, in United States marshals' offices, and in other offices, being covered by the merit system in the future, when confirmation on the part of the Senate of the appointment of the head of the agency is required.

The substitute amendment does injury to the civil service proposal which is before us. It is a weakening amendment. It limits and restricts the operation and application of the bill. I do not believe the Senate is anxious to destroy this proposed legislation. I believe Senators want to have a real, understandable opportunity to vote on the bill as it was reported by the committee, and to take any action which may strengthen the bill.

The action taken by the very small number of Senators who happened to be present at the time strikes at the very heart of the bill. In reality, it destroys the bill. I do not believe the Senate is desirous of doing anything like that.

So I believe we ought to have an understanding of the purport of the amendment and its weakening effect. Of course, it will not destroy the bill, because we have further action to take on the bill before we shall have completed Senate action thereon. Then we shall have a conference. I still maintain, however, that the amendment weakens the bill, and limits and restricts its application. I do not believe the Senate intended to take such action.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. Under the terms of the amendment offered by the able Senator from New York, collectors of internal revenue would be exempt from the provisions of the act. They would be excluded.

Mr. MEAD. That is correct.

Mr. OVERTON. Under the terms of the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] deputy collectors of internal revenue would be excluded.

Mr. MEAD. That is correct.

Mr. OVERTON. A collector of internal revenue is engaged in the collection of revenue for the Government in tremendously large sums. A collector of internal revenue is responsible to the Federal Government for every breach on the part of deputy collectors. If deputy collectors fail to account for funds, the collector is responsible. The Federal Government does not look to the deputy collectors at all. It holds the collector of internal revenue responsible. Why should not the collector of internal revenue, who under the philosophy of the able Senator from New York is to be excluded from the provisions of the act, have control over his deputy collectors, for whose just accounting to the Government he is responsible? Otherwise he is powerless. He must take what deputy collectors are given to him under the civil service.

Mr. MEAD. So far as the bill reported by the committee is concerned, we covered or permitted the covering of the collectors and the deputies. So far as the argument which the Senator makes is concerned, the collectors of customs are appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and their deputies are taken from the civil-service list. That practice has been followed for years, and they seem to get along very well. Under the terms of my amendment, I am trying to do for the collectors of internal revenue what is being done for the collectors of customs. As I understand, the deputies are bonded, and there has been no great difficulty in administering the affairs of the office in the past.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I apologize to the Senator for interrupting him; but I am compelled to leave the Chamber, and I should like to make a statement at this time.

It seems to me that the personnel in the office of the collector of internal revenue certainly should be under civil service if the President should see fit to place them under civil service. I dare say that everyone who is familiar with the duties which must be performed by the various deputies in the office of the collector of internal revenue knows that a great loss results to the Government whenever there is a change of administration and a change of personnel because of a new appointment of a collector of internal revenue, with authority to select his deputies. Whenever there is a change in administration, there is a loss of many million dollars.

The personnel in the office of the collector of internal revenue must necessarily have wide knowledge of the tax laws of the country. An approach to the office of collector of internal revenue in any State where there is an entire change of personnel in the office would demonstrate to anyone with any experience in that line that there is a tremendous loss. There is a failure to serve the taxpayers. There is a failure to conserve the interests of the Government itself. In my judgment, if any field service should be placed under civil service, it is the personnel in the offices of collectors of internal revenue in the various districts throughout the country.

If the Senator from New York will bear with me for a moment longer, let us consider the States in which there are large mineral interests or in which oil is produced on a large scale. The average deputy collector of internal revenue knows nothing about depletion or depreciation charges. He is unable to advise the citizen who wants to pay his taxes on the proper basis, and he is unable to protect the interests of the Government. For 6, 8, or 10 months after his appointment he is unable so to familiarize himself with the tax laws of the country as properly to aid, guide, and direct the citizen himself and to conserve the interests of the Government. If there should be a change of administration in 1941, and the collectors of internal revenue should be changed throughout the country, during the succeeding 12 months the loss to the Government and to the taxpayers would be enormous. The same situation arises every time such a change occurs, because the men must learn their duties. They must learn the law. They must learn how to guide the citizen who wants to pay his full tax and close the transaction. Likewise there is a tremendous loss to the Government itself, because the deputy collectors in the field are not skilled and trained. I mean no reflection on them. Even if the Members of the Senate were to be converted into deputy collectors and sent out into the field to administer the tax laws of the country, the average Senator would have to devote 6 or 8 or 10 months to a study of the laws before he could guide the citizen, properly advise him, and properly protect the interests of the Government.

So it seems to me that, barring all other questions involved in the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana, when he includes the personnel in the offices of collectors of internal revenue and prohibits the President from putting them under civil service he is doing a very great injustice to the taxpayers of the country and to the Government itself. Those offices at least ought to be lifted entirely out of politics, so far as the active men in the field who have to do the work for the Government are concerned.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, the able Senator from Georgia has thoroughly explained the situation. I ask for the yeas and nays on my motion to reconsider.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. ELLENDER. I inquire if the motion to reconsider has been entered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the pending motion.

Mr. MEAD. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

CONDITIONS AFFECTING THE ARMY

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not desire to detain the Senate very long on a matter which is extraneous to the pending bill, but I have some facts regarding the Army and certain aspects of our national defense which I should like to impart to the Senate.

When the debate occurred in the spring on the condition of the Army there was a good deal of doubt expressed on the floor of the Senate at that time as to the importance of horses and animal transport generally in the Army; in fact, certain Senators expressed doubt as to whether there was any reason to have any animals at all. At that time I pointed to the German campaign in Norway in which horses were employed and to the campaign in Flanders, which had been only hastily reported, and I agreed to study the matter further and bring back more concrete information.

I am now advised by Major General Herr, the Chief of Cavalry, that in the German Army today there are 6,000 horses in cavalry divisions; 14 corps cavalry regiments have been identified, and there are probably more than this which have not been identified, which contain about 950 horses per regiment, making a total of 13,300 horses. Then, there are mounted platoons in the infantry regiments, 30 such platoons in each of 600 regiments, and a total of 18,000 horses in that category. Then there are 200 divisions of horse-drawn artillery, which employ 406,000 horses; and there are 3,859 horses per division, which for 200 divisions makes a grand total of horses in the Army of 791,100. This number, Mr. President, does not include horses used by the supply corps. The horses enumerated are used in cavalry units, in infantry units, and in artillery units. I think that is quite a surprising figure to a great many people, and it simply goes to show that, whereas new inventions come along and are essential, they do not automatically displace old methods; in other words, they become a twelfth or a thirteenth player on the team.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I am anxious to get as close an estimate as possible of the total number of horses in the German Army. As I understand, the Senator's grand total does not include all of them. Can the Senator give any idea as to how many are not included, and would it be a fair assumption to say that the total number of horses in the German Army would be about 1,000,000?

Mr. LODGE. I think that would be a very conservative estimate. The figures I have are for the horses in combat units and do not include supply. I have given the number of 791,100 horses in combat units, and I think it would certainly be a very safe assumption to say that there were at least 300,000 more in supply and draft horses.

Mr. President, to go from time-honored methods of warfare to something that is more modern, I should like to advert briefly to proposals which are frequently made in the press regarding the sending abroad of our so-called flying fortresses, that is the four-engined bombers, the so-called B–17 planes. If recent experience is any guide, this matter may not come before Congress for decision, although I contend that it should do so. Whether one happens to favor sending such planes abroad or whether one happens not to favor it, it seems to me that a question of such importance should come before the Congress. But, in any event, whether it comes before Congress or not, I feel that it is incumbent on me to impart what little knowledge I have been able to glean about the situation concerning these four-engined bombers.

The proposal which is most frequently mentioned in the press is to send 32 of these ships abroad. It is noteworthy that we have 48 of these ships, and, of that number, only 46 are immediately available; so that gives us 46 effective flying fortresses. No one, so far as I know, has ever suggested that these planes are obsolete; in fact, they are so modern and so up to date in their construction that they are very nearly unique. Being a nation of great distances, situated between two great oceans, and being in a hemisphere that is of enormous area, it has been natural for us to lead the way in the development of airplanes which are capable of taking to the air and staying in the air for long periods of time. It is natural that we should have gone further in the development of such planes than has been the case in Europe, where the areas are relatively small, and where a plane with a radius of 1,000 miles is adequate for most purposes. So we have led the way in developing the very large planes.

Of course, Mr. President, as a great nation that is interested in any change which may take place in the balance of power, we are naturally gravely concerned with what takes place in Europe. I know that my sympathies are strongly with those brave men and women over there who are fighting for their freedom; but we simply cannot, as responsible men, close our eyes to the fact that we must also look across the Pacific, that we must also be interested in what takes place to the south of us, and that, in any situation which might arise, even in the Pacific or in the Caribbean area, these planes would be of the very highest utility, because they can cover great distances at high speed on short notice and perform a function which is not within the capabilities of any other weapon.

I also point out that in the United States Army no man is allowed to fly one of these planes until he has been flying for 4 years. That is a practical matter. Flying one of those planes is entirely different from flying one of the small planes. It is such a big machine that functions which are normally performed in a smaller plane by one man have to be subdivided and allotted to several different men.

I flew back from Barksdale Field in Louisiana to Washington in the spring. The teamwork and the coordination and the specialized knowledge which had to be possessed not only by the captain of the ship but by all the other members of the crew was of the most expert kind. Such ships are highly complex machines; and I doubt very much whether today in any other country there are men who, without much extra training, are capable of being pilots of those ships and men who could step into the jobs as crews of those ships. When I say that I do not in the least belittle the foreign pilots, because, as far as I can make out, the pilots in the Royal Air Force are absolutely second to none in their skill and their bravery and their professional qualifications; but it simply so happens that flying the type of bombers that they have over there—two-engine bombers—is an entirely different proposition; and it is not at all inconceivable to me, if haste were employed and these ships were utilized upon short notice, that there might be a considerable risk of destruction and a considerable risk of the planes falling into enemy hands.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Perhaps the Senator intends to cover this question. If he does, I hope he will ignore it; but I think it would be exceedingly interesting if the Senator would give the Senate a practical idea of the manning of one of these 46 big ships—how many men are required, what are their various duties, and how much they carry in the way of ammunition and guns and bombing material.

Mr. LODGE. I shall try to do that as best I can. I should like to say that I am not an expert; I am not a technical man; I am not an aviator. I fly a good deal as a passenger, but I do not want to pose as being any kind of an expert at all. I can only tell the Senate what I myself have seen and what I have been able to learn by inquiring from others.

As I recall, these ships have a crew of about eight. They have an engineer and an assistant engineer. They have two radio men. They have a bombardier, who sits down below. They have one man who steers the ship on the horizontal plane when it is under way, who sits in an entirely different position from the men who are in the control cabin, and who are in communication by telephone. They have pilot, copilot, and navigator. When I flew back from Barksdale Field we were in a flight of four of these ships. They were flying so close together most of the time that I could clearly see the teeth and the eyes of the men in the plane next to me. To fly as close together as that several of these great, big, enormous machines without having any accident is in itself an excessively complicated thing.

As far as the number of bombs is concerned, I cannot give the Senator the exact number or weight; but they have a bomb bay that is the size of an ordinary small room which has racks on either side. Incidentally, the bomb bay in one of our ships is devised to carry American bombs; and I am advised that the lugs on the American bombs are of an entirely different type from that which is used in Great Britain.

I do not think I have answered the Senator as completely as I should like to do; but that is the extent of my knowledge on that point at the present time.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will permit me to suggest an additional point on which I should like to have information, these ships not only carry bombs but they carry artillery of various kinds; do they not?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; they do.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish the Senator would give us a description of that, not only as to the bombs they carry but as to the different kinds of artillery that are in one of these ships, and how they are managed and manipulated.

Mr. LODGE. They have .50-caliber machine guns. Those guns, of course, have to be operated by individual gunners. Some of the ships that I have seen have blisters on the top and on the underneath part and on the sides, and a gun in the nose, making five guns in all. I forgot to mention, too, that of course they have to have a navigator, who does nothing but navigate. So, to enumerate, each ship has a pilot, enginemen, bombardiers, navigators, and gunners; and then very important, of course, are the radio men, who not only are charged with radio communication between the ship and the ground, but with radio communication between their own ship and the other ships; and if anything goes wrong in the telephone system within the ship they have to maintain that system, because, of course, it is an absolutely essential part of the ship's equipment.

These facts bring me to this conclusion: We have embarked on a national defense program. We know that it takes more time to train men than it takes to build planes. A man cannot be trained to fly these specialized military craft, whether they are four-engine bombers or whether they are high-speed planes, without having the craft there for him to study in. That is a fact that we just cannot get away from.

In my judgment, based upon what I have been told by experts in whom I have confidence, we ought to have about a thousand flying fortresses. We have 46 that are immediately available, and I simply cannot understand how we can afford to get rid of these ships unless we are prepared to have the training program of our young aviators suffer very materially.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator answer another question before he takes his seat?

Mr. LODGE. I will try to do so.

Mr. NORRIS. I am exceedingly interested in the description the Senator has given. I wonder if he can give us information as to the speed of these ships; at what elevation they are capable of flying when they are loaded; whether the elevation would not, as a matter of strategy, if it is very high, give an advantage to the ships over any attacking squadron; and whether their size offers any impediment to their utility and their usefulness on account of their being more easily hit by a foe than smaller ships could be hit.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator also give the cost?

Mr. LODGE. I shall try to answer the Senator from Nebraska first.

I was told by the very able officer who commanded this flight of four planes that those ships will go higher than the physique of a man can endure. We went up to 20,000 feet, using oxygen, of course, and that was far higher than I had ever before been in my life, and I was advised that the ships could reach even greater heights than that—a maximum of 36,000 feet. As to their speed—I am speaking from memory now and should want to verify it because I have not made a note of that here—I think they can go up to 200 miles an hour. My recollection is that their speed is more than that, but I should not want to make a flat statement about it. But the tremendous altitude they can reach makes them, of course, ideal for horizontal bombing. For long-range horizontal bombing I believe they are considered to be very fine ships.

The Senator from Pennsylvania asks me to state the cost of the ships. I cannot give that to him offhand, but I shall be very glad to find out and to put it into the RECORD.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Can the Senator tell us what length of time is necessary for the replacement of one of these ships? Assuming that we follow out the suggestions of the propaganda organization which apparently is dominating the policy of the United States Government at the present time and transfer some of these flying fortresses, how long would it take to replace them, if the Senator has that information?

Mr. LODGE. Again I should have to give an estimate on that subject, subject to correction. I will verify it, and, if I am wrong, put the correct statement into the RECORD. I should think it would take 8 or 9 months; but that is just a guess.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, if the Senator will further yield, the Senator has never heard any suggestion that those planes are obsolete, has he?

Mr. LODGE. No.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. In other words, are they not considered the very finest long-range bombing planes in the world?

Mr. LODGE. I believe they are. I believe they are quite in a class by themselves.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I notice that the argument has been made that with these planes Britain would be able to bomb certain parts of Germany that she could not bomb without them. Has the Senator any view on that subject? I notice that the British bombing planes seem to be able to go as far as Italy; and I do not quite see what part of Germany they could reach with our bombers that they could not reach with their own bombers.

Mr. LODGE. I will say to the Senator from Ohio that if the British had planes of this type I think their present radius of action undoubtedly would be extended, because the flying fortresses can hold the air for a much longer period than can the present British planes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I think the reports to which the Senator from Ohio referred were reports that the British would be able to bomb Poland and Czechoslovakia as well as Germany if they had these flying fortresses.

Mr. LODGE. I think their possession would undoubtedly extend the radius of action of the British.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. The Senator noticed in the newspapers, did he not, that the Rock of Gibraltar, a British-controlled area, was bombed by American planes that we sent to France to stop dictators?

Mr. LODGE. I saw that reported; yes.

Mr. LODGE subsequently said: Mr. President, I desire to make a brief statement arising out of the questions which were asked me by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] earlier in the day, when I was presenting to the Senate certain facts about the so-called flying fortresses. At that time I tried to answer the questions as best I could without having thoroughly analyzed the matter. Since that time I have had occasion to verify the facts, and I should like to make these statements for the RECORD:

The crew of a flying fortress, the four-engine bomber, under normal conditions consists of eight men—a pilot, a copilot, a navigator, a bombardier, an engineer, an assistant engineer, a radio operator, and an assistant radio operator.

The maximum height which these planes can attain is 36,000 feet.

The time it will take to produce the planes once industry is geared up and established to do it is about 1 year. I had made a guess of 8 or 9 months, and I find I was low.

The number of guns which the planes mount is five—one in the nose, one on the top, one on each side, and one in the bottom.

The total cost of building one of the planes has been in the past about a quarter of a million dollars.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 162) to protect producers, manufacturers, distributors, and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured wool products, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House having proceeded to reconsider the bill (H. R. 3840) to amend the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended, and for other purposes, returned by the President of the United States with his objections to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, it was:

Resolved, That the said bill do not pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives not agreeing to pass the same.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (S. 3929) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Memphis, Tenn., and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

EXTENSION OF CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 960) extending the classified executive civil service of the United States.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, before I discuss the motion to reconsider, which is the pending question, I understand, I wish to say, first, that I think the committee in charge of the bill has done a very excellent piece of work in bringing it to the floor of the Senate, and the Senator from New York has handled the bill most ably.

There is some slight reason for my taking the floor on this particular motion. I was quite discouraged when the vote was taken awhile ago on the amendment eliminating from the operation of the bill deputy collectors and the other officials who would have been eliminated. I was discouraged, because for many years, ever since I have been grown, I have been reading in political platforms the declarations of both political parties against a system of patronage and in favor of a merit system, and I have seen every effort that has been made to bring those promises into effect almost fail. Some progress has been made under the present administration, but greater progress should be made.

The pending measure should be passed, in my opinion, just as the committee reported it. I do not mean that the bill is perfect, by any means; it does not go so far as I should like to have it go, and it could be improved materially, in my judgment, as I think the civil service itself could be improved. I do not wish to be understood, in my advocacy of the enactment of the pending measure, as believing at all that the civil service or the merit system in the Federal Government is perfect. It needs much correction, and perhaps some of the abuses which have grown up, and which now exist in the civil service itself, afford some of the reasons why it is so difficult to expand and extend the civil-service laws.

However, I think there is a different reason. There is an issue which has repeatedly been before this country, almost since the beginning of the Government. The patronage evil, as I call it—for to me it is an evil and a sore spot in the structure of government—began to grow and develop in the beginning of Thomas Jefferson's first administration, and even further back than that; it started in the administration of President George Washington, not that President Washington was at all inclined to make appointments to office on any basis other than on merit and efficiency, for he was not. He sought to fill every position strictly on that basis, and that basis alone. There were many instances of personal friends and political supporters of President George Washington seeking appointment in his administration, and instances of President Washington refusing an appointment to a political supporter and friend, and giving it to a man who had opposed him, on the ground that his own political opponent was better fitted and better qualified to do the particular work. That was the attitude of President Washington.

Of course, I shall not recount the difficulties which have arisen during the history of our country because of the patronage evil, but, as a matter of fact, every Senator knows conditions had grown so bad that it took the assassination of a President of the United States even to start the merit system in this country. It was not until after the assassination of President Garfield by a disappointed office seeker that civil service actually got under way. Even then the headway was not very fast, and progress was slow.

I am proud of the fact that the greatest advance and greatest progress made was under the administration of a great Democrat, President Grover Cleveland, and I wish Democrats who are opposing the pending measure, and who are voting for this particular amendment, would read again the statement of President Grover Cleveland on this issue.

Mr. President, I think I shall call to the attention of Democratic Senators, if any of them will do me the honor to listen for a moment, the declaration of the Democratic Party in their convention at Chicago in the year 1940:

> We pledge the immediate extension of a genuine system of merit to all positions in the executive branch of the Federal Government except actual bona fide policy-making positions.

That is the voice of the Democratic Party speaking in its platform at this very moment, a platform upon which we are running and seeking return to power.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. I notice that the Senator emphasized "genuine system of merit."

Mr. HATCH. Oh, yes.

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator well knows that covering into the civil service 200,000 persons who have not stood a competitive examination destroys the very foundation, goes to the very roots, of the merit system, does it not?

Mr. HATCH. I am quite sure the Senator understands my thought on that subject. I know that a start must be made, and I know as well as that I am standing here that unless a start is made in the manner here proposed there will be no start made at all, and we will have nothing. I expressed myself on that a few days ago in a quotation from the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. ELLENDER. The start seems to have been made a way back, soon after the civil-service law went into effect. As was brought to the attention of the Senate, the system of blanketing in employees has existed under Presidents Cleveland, Harrison, McKinley, Theodore Roosevelt, Taft, Wilson, Harding, and Coolidge. All of these administrations resorted to the same scheme now being resorted to; that is, putting under civil service thousands of employees in direct contravention to the civil-service laws, which to my mind should be followed strictly. I am for civil service, as I have said, and I am for the merit system as the Democratic Party calls for it, and I know of no better way to get a genuine merit system than to place applicants for jobs on a competitive basis.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Louisiana that I fully appreciate the fine things he has said, and his attitude on the merit system. I think it is an admirable attitude. But I think he is absolutely killing any prospect of getting that which he says he wants if he is successful in the position he has taken in reference to the pending and other amendments.

I desire to continue reading the Democratic platform in this year, 1940. I have not yet finished reading it.

> The competitive method of selecting employees shall be improved until experience and qualification shall be the sole test in determining fitness for employment in the Federal service. Promotion and tenure in Federal service shall depend upon fitness, experience, and qualification.

Another clause reads:

> Arbitrary and unreasonable rules as to academic training shall be abolished, all to the end that a genuine system of efficiency and merit shall prevail throughout the entire Federal service.

We have already declared that we will place all employees in the executive branch of the Government under the merit system except policy-making officials, and there is not a single policy-making official included who would be eliminated by the Senator's amendment, unless possibly a district attorney might be so considered. He is nearer to it. But certainly a collector of internal revenue has no policies to make, and a United States marshal has no policies to make.

It happens that I was a collector of internal revenue at one time. I was a political appointee, and as the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] was speaking my thought went back to the condition he was describing when I was appointed to that position. The States of Arizona and New Mexico had been combined in one collection district. The collector resided in Arizona. Congress had created the new district of New Mexico, separate from Arizona, and I was appointed collector. I knew nothing about the collector's duties. I was a practicing lawyer. I had been quite active in the campaign which immediately preceded the creation of this district, which might explain my appointment.

I took over the district and had to start with a complete new office force. There were several deputies, clerks, and others. I think I made good selections, competent, worthy persons, just as good as could be found anywhere under that system or method. Fortunately, I borrowed from the district of Arizona the chief deputy, who had been employed there for a number of years, and had experience and qualification. He remained until we could get the complete new office force trained to discharge their duties. That was in the early part of 1920. The new office force remained in office, except those who were under the civil service, only until after the election in 1920, and in 1921, when a new President took office, all the deputies were removed and there was appointed a new group of inexperienced, untrained men, taking the places of men who had just commenced to learn their work.

Mr. President, that is at least one experience in my life which has taught me to be strongly against the patronage system and to favor the merit system. I know the patronage system was wasteful; I know it was extravagant. I know that no business under the sun could last 30 days under such a system. Today the business of the United States is the largest business in the world, and we still resort to those old methods in the employment of the men who are to operate this great business. We still resist any effort made to change those methods.

I shall not speak longer, Mr. President, except to say I certainly hope the motion to reconsider will be agreed to. I hope we may have a yea-and-nay vote on the question, and then I hope the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana will be rejected.

PERSONAL STATEMENT BY SENATOR M'KELLAR

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have been waiting since today's session began to see the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] in the Chamber, so I might correct some of the inaccuracies of his statement made yesterday. I asked Mr. Loeffler to communicate with the Senator and have him come to the Senate Chamber if he so desired. Mr. Loeffler telephoned the Senator's office in the Senate Office Building and asked them to notify him in the Senate Office Building restaurant, and I suppose the Senator knows that I am speaking at this time.

Yesterday the Senator from Wisconsin indulged in a tirade against me which he said was vouched for by the RECORD, and actually undertook to give page numbers of past RECORDS to prove the misrepresentations—and I could use a very much stronger word—he then made.

On page 12534 of yesterday's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the Senator from Wisconsin said:

I want to show you when he—

Meaning me—

stood for monopoly, * * *.

Mr. President, this statement is absolutely false, not borne out by any record the Senator from Wisconsin submitted or could submit.

Again the Senator from Wisconsin said:

* * * When he stood against the public operating utilities—

This statement is likewise false, and the RECORD shows it to be false.

The Senator then quoted, with some vigor, a statement from a speech I made in the Sixty-eighth Congress, when I said:

I do not believe that the Government ought to be put in business if it is possible to avoid it.

Mr. President, by accident, this statement of the Senator from Wisconsin seems to be the truth. I still hold the same view.

Then the Senator quoted from a speech of one of the then Senators from Alabama, Senator Underwood, in which he quoted Senator Underwood as saying:

I have not been able to find out yet what the Senator from Tennessee is for. He is not for the proposal of the Senator from Nebraska—

Meaning the present senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]—

The Senator says he is not now for the Alabama Power Co.'s offer, and I do not know what the Senator from Tennessee is for.

Mr. President, this is an evasive misrepresentation. The RECORD shows—the very RECORD the Senator submits—my attitude with perfect clarity, as the Senator from Wisconsin would have found if he had read it, and I doubt if he did read it.

At that time I was opposed to the Underwood proposal, which was the Alabama Power Co. proposal, and I was at first also opposed to the Norris proposal for public ownership of the dams on the Tennessee River, because the Senator did not provide that Tennessee should be paid for the taking of her property.

The Senator from Wisconsin then cited a statement from the RECORD showing that Senator Heflin was arguing with me on the Underwood proposal. Be it remembered that the Underwood proposal was an Alabama Power Co. proposal, the same Alabama Power Co. which is now one of the Willkie companies, operated and conducted by Mr. Willkie. At that time they were trying to get Muscle Shoals, which the Government had built. In some way they got Mr. Heflin and Mr. Underwood, the Senators from that State at that time, to join them, and if the Senator from Wisconsin had had the slightest honesty of purpose or the slightest fairness in debate he would have quoted from that very RECORD which he cites, on page 1673, Sixty-eighth Congress, second session, when this matter was under discussion, when I said in reply to Senator Heflin:

The Senator from Alabama has had something to say about the company that I have been keeping. He charges me with voting with the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and thinking or voting with the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones]. I do not know but what I shall plead guilty to both charges—

Since I have been in the Senate I have voted literally hundreds of times with the senior Senator from Nebraska, and I have never yet been ashamed of the company I kept in so voting.

I continue to quote from the RECORD what I then said in the Senate—

so that there may not be any question about the fact; but, while talking of line-ups, I want to call the attention of the Senator from Alabama to the distinguished progressive company—

And, of course, the word "progressive" should be followed by an exclamation mark—that he has been keeping lately on the Republican side of the Chamber. I wish to read the list of those who voted for the Underwood substitute. I shall not read all of the names, but I shall merely read enough of them to show the company that the Senator from Alabama is keeping in this matter.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator, though, does not object if I have converted them to the right course for once in their lives, does he?

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator has; but I am not so sure that the Senator has converted the well-known progressives whose names I am about to read. I am rather inclined to think these well-known progressives have rather converted the Senator to their way of thinking. I desire to read the list of yeas on the Underwood substitute.

Let me digress long enough to say that the Underwood substitute was the substitute of the Alabama Power Co., now controlled by Mr. Willkie. The same company is still in existence, the same company the so-called progressive leaders in the Senate stood for. Let me read the list, as I then gave it:

Ball, a well-known progressive; Butler—

Then of Massachusetts—

a well-known progressive.

An exclamation mark should really have been placed after each use of the word "progressive."

Cameron, a well-known progressive; Curtis, a well-known progressive; Dale, Edge, Fess, Hale, Keyes, McCormick, McLean, Means, Metcalf, Oddie, Pepper—

That is the Pepper from Pennsylvania, not from Florida.

Phipps, Reed of Pennsylvania, Shortridge, Smoot, Stanfield, Sterling, Wadsworth, Warren, Weller, and Willis.

I will finish reading from this excerpt, and then make a statement.

Those Senators—

As I then said—

are perfectly splendid Senators. I do not for a moment read their names for any other purpose than merely to show how changes have come over the spirit of the dreams of the Senator from Alabama. Think of the Senator from Alabama yoking up with those well-known progressives of the Senate. I think the Senator from Alabama is to be congratulated or these well-known progressives on the Republican side are to be congratulated, and I will leave that matter to individual opinion.

It will be remembered that most of those who voted for the Alabama Power Co. proposal were probably the most ardent reactionaries ever to sit in this body. Probably few Senators now in the Senate were Members of the Senate at that time. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is present. I know he will agree that there was not a progressive among all those whose names I have read. This matter was in the same RECORD from which the Senator from Wisconsin read yesterday, or from which he claimed to have read, or which he claimed to have obtained from an unknown source. He would not tell the source. Yet this matter was in the RECORD, and he could have read it. In spite of the RECORD, he asserted that I had voted for the Alabama Power Co. No man, unless it be the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], ever fought harder than I did the Alabama Power Co. and its various machinations to get hold of Muscle Shoals and other Tennessee dam sites. I have been at it for 24 years, and I have not stopped yet; and I will not allow any Senator, I do not care who he may be, to misrepresent my attitude about it.

Thus we see that the power companies in some way managed to inveigle the two Alabama Senators into their cause at that time, but the Senator from Nebraska, GEORGE NORRIS, and myself, Senator Jones and other Senators fought the matter through, and defeated the power-company amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama, Mr. Underwood. Of course, the implication of the Senator from Wisconsin in this matter was absolutely false.

The Senator from Wisconsin spoke of my defeating the Norris bill. Mr. President, that is an old story. The Senator from Wisconsin is a newcomer, and perhaps has never heard of it. I offered an amendment to the Norris bill providing for compensation to the State of Tennessee for the use of her lands and water. At that time the Senator from Nebraska did not accept the amendment, and I filibustered against the bill and prevented it from coming to a vote. Finally, the then leader of the Republicans, Senator Charles Curtis, came to me about 8 or 9 o'clock in the morning, after we had debated the bill all night, and said he had just left President Coolidge, that President Coolidge would veto the bill, and that there was no necessity for making any further fight. The bill was vetoed.

As I stated yesterday, the next year the Senator from Nebraska was good enough to include my amendment, providing for compensation for the property of the State of Tennessee which was taken; and it is in the law today, except as modified by the T. V. A. tax bill, in which that provision of the law was modified by increasing the compensation to the State of Tennessee, at least for a while.

The statements and the insinuations of the Senator from Wisconsin about this matter are absolutely, outrageously, and calumniously false and untrue. He then makes this statement for himself:

So, now, Mr. President, reviewing the RECORD, we find that the senior Senator from Tennessee was apparently for the Alabama Power Co.

He pretended to read from the RECORD. Of course, Mr. President, that statement is absolutely false. I have been a Member of this body for nearly 24 years. The idea of anybody being ignorant enough or malicious enough or dishonest enough to make a statement like that about my record is past my understanding. The RECORD which the Senator from Wisconsin cites proves the statement to be false. I believe every Senator who has been a Member of the Senate for any length of time knows that it is false. I use the word "false" because the rules of the Senate prevent me from using a shorter and uglier word.

The Senator from Wisconsin then stated:

He—

Referring to me again—

stated emphatically that he was opposed to governmental operation, that he believed that Government operation could not be as successful as private operation.

That statement is likewise utterly false. There is not a word of truth in it. I stated at the time that I preferred the operation of private industries by private companies, as we all do. But when private companies become as rotten, corrupt, and dishonest as the power companies were at that time, there is nothing for honest Senators to do but to vote to put them under the control of the Federal Government.

Later, as will be remembered, I asked the Senator from Wisconsin to yield to me, and he declined to do so. However, he finally yielded, and I asked him where he obtained the so-called information from the RECORD. He tried in every way in the world to evade the question. He started off with something else. I had to call his attention to it, as Senators will remember. I kept after him, and finally he said he received a memorandum from somebody else. Then I questioned him again, and asked him where he had obtained it, and he said:

No; I will not say who told me.

Mr. President, that was a cowardly course. It was a dishonest course. It is no way for Senators to treat one another in debate on this floor. Think of it for a moment. A Senator utters absolute and unqualified falsehoods in the Senate against another Senator, and when asked why he does so he says he does so on the basis of information received from someone else. When asked who his informant is, he declines time after time to give the name of his informant. All I have to say about such conduct on the floor of the Senate is that it is a departure from the well-known rule of gentility, honesty, and fair dealing in this body.

Mr. President, I have been a Member of the Senate for a long time. I believe I am an honest man, and I think the Senate believes I am an honest man. I will not permit any newcomer, or anyone else, to utter the basest kind of falsehoods about me or my record without letting him know just what I think of him. If the rules of the Senate permitted me to use stronger language, I should do so.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD a memorandum showing my position on the various proposals made relating to the Muscle Shoals nitrate and power plants.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORANDUM

January 14, 1921 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 60, part 2, p. 1416), Senator MCKELLAR voted "yea" on the passage of the bill (S. 3390) for the development of the nitrogen production plant of Muscle Shoals by the Government, and the bill passed the Senate.

During the consideration of the sundry civil bill, February 5, 1921, Senator MCKELLAR supported and voted for a committee amendment appropriating $10,000,000 for the continuation of the Muscle Shoals project for the development of power and nitrates by the Government (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 60, part 3, p. 2653).

January 24, 1922 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 62, part 2, p. 1643), Senator MCKELLAR spoke in support of the Henry Ford offer for the purchase of the Muscle Shoals plant on the Tennessee River, stating:

"It is the only proposition that has been offered that has any material substance to it. It is a proposition that will mean many, many millions of dollars to the Government. * * * It will mean cheaper fertilizers for the farmers of this country. * * *"

March 10, 1922 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 62, part 4, p. 3660), Mr. MCKELLAR again supported the Ford proposal.

February 20, 1922 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 62, part 3, p. 2667), Senator MCKELLAR discussed the bid of the Alabama Power Co., inserting in the RECORD at the same time a memorandum containing a statement of former Governor Emmett O'Neal, of Alabama, in regard to the same subject, in which he opposed the Alabama Power Co. proposal to acquire Muscle Shoals.

At the same time Senator MCKELLAR referred to the then incumbent Governor of Alabama, quoting him as saying:

"It would be most unfortunate for the Alabama Power Co. to get Muscle Shoals."

Senator McKELLAR then added:

"Surely these two gentlemen, one an ex-Governor and one the present Governor, know what they are talking about when they warn Congress and warn the people of this country that this great corporation, composed, as they say, largely of Canadian and English stockholders, should not be given control over one of the greatest water-power sites in the world." [1]

January 14, 1924 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 65, pt. 1, p. 921): Mr. McKELLAR spoke again in support of the Ford proposal, but qualified his support with the following statement:

"It is perfectly apparent, however, that the Alabama Power Co. will be the chief beneficiary of the bid and the controlling force in the organization if the bid should be accepted. If, by any mischance, we should ever get into a war with Great Britain, which I pray God may never come, but should it come—and the best of friends among nations sometimes fall out—our Government would be in the attitude of having to request citizens of Great Britain to turn over to our Government a water-power plant built by us for war purposes, and without which we might be wholly unable to wage war. This fact alone furnishes a conclusive reason why the combination bid should not be accepted by our Government or by the Congress." [2]

December 10, 1924 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 66, pt. 1, p. 398), Mr. McKELLAR said:

"I have never approved it. (Alabama Power Co. offer.) I stated that when I first spoke. The Senator (Mr. Underwood) cannot say that. All I am saying is, if the Senator would permit me, that I considered the Alabama Power Co. offer at the time was not worthy of acceptance, but I say further that the offer of the Alabama Power Co., unworthy of acceptance as it is, is infinitely better for the Government and the people of America than is the proposal contained in the Senator's amendment."

January 8, 1925 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 66, pt. 2, p. 1454), the Senate voted on the so-called Underwood bill (S. 3507, 68th Cong., 2d sess.) which was offered as an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the substitute of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to the House bill (H. R. 518) providing for the acceptance of the Ford offer. Mr. McKELLAR is recorded voting "nay" against the Underwood amendment.

Later, January 12, 1925 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 66, pt. 2, p. 1808) Mr. McKELLAR voted "nay" against the House bill (H. R. 518) embodying the Underwood amendment. He justified his vote, apparently, by his statement of December 10, 1924, that "the offer of the Alabama Power Co., unworthy of acceptance as it is, is infinitely better for the Government and the people of America than is the proposal contained in the Senator's amendment."

March 18, 1925 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 67, pt. 1, p. 363), Mr. McKELLAR further spoke in opposition to the Underwood proposal and supported the Norris proposal.

March 1, 1926 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 67, pt. 5, p. 4767), Mr. McKELLAR again expresses his opposition to turning over the Muscle Shoals projects to "private interests," and calls attention to the fact that, as a Member of the House of Representatives and a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, he "introduced the original amendment in that committee for the appropriation of $20,000,000, just as it appeared in the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, section 124 (39 Stat. 215).

It is true that he supported the Ford offer, as originally proposed, in several statements, but he voted against the Underwood amendment, and when it was embodied in the bill, he voted against the bill.

A careful review of the RECORD fails to reveal any statements made by Mr. McKELLAR in support of the Alabama Power Co. proposal and his support of the Ford proposal, apparently, was conditioned upon certain contingencies which did not eventuate; and because they did not, he voted against the Ford offer. The RECORD further shows that he consistently supported the continuation of the control of Muscle Shoals by the Government for the manufacture of nitrates for fertilizers in time of peace and for the use of national defense in time of war.

EXTENSION OF CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 960) extending the classified executive civil service of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from New York was agreed to.

Mr. MEAD. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ELLENDER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

[1] Then followed a statement by Mr. McKELLAR in which he appeared to support the Ford offer as opposed to any proposal of the Alabama Power Co.

[2] This was an equivocal support of the Ford proposal and a clear statement against the Alabama Power Co. proposal.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Ellender	McNary	Smith
Andrews	Frazier	Maloney	Stewart
Austin	George	Mead	Taft
Barbour	Gerry	Miller	Thomas, Idaho
Barkley	Gibson	Minton	Thomas, Okla.
Bulow	Gillette	Neely	Thomas, Utah
Burke	Green	Norris	Townsend
Byrd	Gurney	Nye	Tydings
Byrnes	Harrison	O'Mahoney	Vandenberg
Capper	Hatch	Overton	Van Nuys
Caraway	Hayden	Pepper	Wagner
Chavez	Hill	Pittman	Walsh
Clark, Idaho	Holt	Radcliffe	Wheeler
Clark, Mo.	Hughes	Reed	White
Connally	Johnson, Calif.	Schwellenbach	Wiley
Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Sheppard
Davis	Lodge	Shipstead
Downey	McKellar	Smathers

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-nine Senators having responded to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on my motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the request seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, when the Senator from New York moved to reconsider the vote by which the substitute amendment offered by me was agreed to, I moved to lay that motion on the table but, at the request of several Senators, I withdrew my motion in order to permit further debate.

I wish to say now that I believe the procedure under which this bill is being considered is a little out of line. I have been a Member of this body now for almost 4 years, and it has never before occurred that every time an amendment is adopted by the Senate a motion is immediately made to reconsider the vote by which it was adopted. As will be recalled, the Senate rejected a committee amendment to the bill and the Senator from New York moved for reconsideration. I think the conferees ought to consider the differences between the two Houses. I hope the Senator from New York will not persist in pursuing this method of procedure, and I trust that the Senate will vote as it did the last time, and maintain my position.

Mr. President, I now move to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from New York.

Mr. MEAD. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MEAD. There is so much confusion in the Chamber, and there have been so many questions directed to me during the last few moments, that I doubt very much whether all the Senators know just what the parliamentary situation is. As I understand, we are voting on the motion of the Senator from Louisiana to lay on the table my motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana was adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that to be a correct statement of the question.

The Chief Clerk resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. GURNEY (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ]. If he were present, he would vote "nay," and, if I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). On this motion I have a pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. STEWART (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN]. I understand that if he were present he would vote as I intend to vote. I therefore am at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DAVIS. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER]. I understand that if present he would vote "nay" on this question. I transfer my pair with him to the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN], who would vote "yea" if present. I vote "yea."

Mr. BYRNES (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. I am informed, however, that if he were present he would vote as I have voted, so I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I understand that he is unable to be present. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] has a pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. I am advised that if the Senator from Mississippi were present he would vote "yea," and that if the Senator from Wisconsin were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I have a pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] is absent on official business.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN] are necessarily absent.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] is absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senators from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO and Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are detained in committee meetings.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], the Senators from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS and Mr. SLATTERY], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ], and the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] are detained in various Government departments.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is detained in a conference in one of the Government departments. I am advised that if present and voting, he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 32, as follows:

YEAS—29

Adams	Davis	McNary	Thomas, Okla.
Andrews	Ellender	Minton	Townsend
Austin	Frazier	Overton	Vandenberg
Burke	Hayden	Reed	Van Nuys
Byrnes	Hill	Smathers	Wiley
Capper	Hughes	Smith
Connally	Lodge	Stewart
Danaher	McKellar	Thomas, Idaho

NAYS—32

Barbour	George	Johnson, Colo.	Pepper
Barkley	Gerry	Maloney	Radcliffe
Bulow	Gibson	Mead	Sheppard
Byrd	Gillette	Miller	Taft
Caraway	Green	Neely	Thomas, Utah
Clark, Idaho	Hatch	Norris	Tydings
Clark, Mo.	Holt	Nye	Wagner
Downey	Johnson, Calif.	O'Mahoney	White

NOT VOTING—34

Ashurst	Donahey	La Follette	Schwellenbach
Bailey	Glass	Lee	Shipstead
Bankhead	Guffey	Lucas	Slattery
Bilbo	Gurney	McCarran	Tobey
Bone	Hale	Murray	Truman
Bridges	Harrison	Pittman	Walsh
Brown	Herring	Reynolds	Wheeler
Chandler	Holman	Russell
Chavez	King	Schwartz

So Mr. ELLENDER's motion to lay on the table Mr. MEAD's motion to reconsider was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] to reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] was adopted. Upon that question the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GURNEY (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ]. I understand that if he were present, he would vote "yea." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay." I withhold my vote.

Mr. MCNARY (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. STEWART (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DAVIS. Making the same announcement as on the previous vote, I am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] to the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. MINTON. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. I am advised that if the Senator from Mississippi were present he would vote "nay" on this question, and that if the Senator from Wisconsin were present he would vote "yea."

The Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] is absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ] are detained on business in Government departments.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] are detained in committee meetings.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], the Senators from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY and Mr. LUCAS], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is detained in a conference in one of the Government departments. I am advised that, if present and voting, he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 37, as follows:

YEAS—30

So Mr. MEAD's motion to reconsider the vote by which Mr. ELLENDER's amendment was agreed to was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD], as amended by the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER].

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I have no disposition to interfere with the consideration of the very important measure now pending in any way which would in any degree be considered a filibuster, but I desire now to give notice that tomorrow, as soon as I can obtain the floor after the convening of the Senate, I shall address the Senate on the subject of the transfer of the destroyers and the prospective transfer of the other Army and Navy craft.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 14, beginning with the word "except", it is proposed to strike out down to and including line 2, on page 3, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

Nor shall the incumbent of any such position be retained in such position for a period of longer than 6 months after it is so covered into the classified civil service unless he is reappointed to such position in accordance with the civil-service laws: Provided, That the incumbent of any such position shall be given a preference of 10 points upon any competitive examination for such position.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, as I have pointed out in the course of the debate, and as was pointed out by many Senators, the fundamental purpose of the civil-service law was to establish a merit system whereby selections for appointments should be made upon demonstrated relative fitness of the applicants, without regard to political, religious, or any other similar consideration. In order to attain that end, the civil-service law provides a plan of competitive examination for all applicants for jobs.

There are in the service of the Federal Government today in excess of 650,000 men and women who have complied with the very letter of the law and the rules and regulations set up by the Civil Service Commission, and yet Senators are being urged to do away with the law as now written and to permit to be placed in the civil service men and women who have been appointed, not because of merit, not because they have passed examinations to test their fitness for the jobs, but, in most cases, because they had good sponsors, who said to departmental heads, "Give this man or that woman a job."

Mr. President, I say that is unfair; it is wrong to the service as a whole to permit these 200,000 employees to retain their jobs and be placed under civil service without a competitive examination when, as I pointed out yesterday, there are already over 800,000 eligibles who have taken the examinations, many of whom are qualified now to hold these various jobs.

As I pointed out to the Senate yesterday, since the time the civil-service law was placed on the statute books, in 1883, examinations have been taken by 10,264,668 persons. These persons took those examinations in good faith, in the hope that if they passed, if and when jobs were available, those jobs would be given to them. Of that number of applicants, 6,024,015 successfully passed examinations and were eligible for appointment.

Now let me point out to the Senate how small a number of those who qualified under examinations received jobs. Out of the 6,024,015 who qualified, only 2,168,736, in the length of time I have named, actually received appointments. So that almost 4,000,000 persons who took these examinations in good faith, in the hope that some day they would be accorded an opportunity to get jobs, under the civil-service system, from our Government were disappointed.

What are we doing today under the pending bill? We are violating the fundamental principle of the civil service law. We are being asked, in the face of the civil-service law itself, while thousands who have taken examinations stand by ready to serve, to give preference to political appointees. I say that such a procedure is not conducive to a good merit system. It merely gives lip service to the merit system, for which all of us are supposed to stand.

Mr. President, as I indicated yesterday, during last year 611,616 men and women presented themselves for examination. Of that number 556,571 took the examinations, and of those who took the examinations 254,095 passed, qualified for appointment, and are eligible for appointment. Let us see how they fared.

Of this number, only 66,290 have received appointments. So that there are today from last year's eligibles alone almost 200,000 persons who are entitled to appointment and who are now waiting on the Government to fulfill its obligations, now that the occasion has been presented.

Let us take the figure for the year before last. From July 1, 1937, to June 30, 1938, there were 388,404 persons who took the examinations, and 197,424 actually passed and were eligible for appointment. Out of that number of 197,424 only 51,454 actually received jobs. So from the examination list, or I may say the eligible lists of 2 years ago, we still have today almost 150,000 men and women who are eligible, probably almost all of whom are able to fill some of these jobs, but they must be shunted aside, they must be again disappointed in order to give way to political appointees.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. Is it not the fact and is it not reasonably to be expected that an incumbent who is now in his position would naturally have an advantage in competing against one who has never filled that position.

Mr. ELLENDER. There is no question about that, I may say to the Senator, and in order to give an advantage because of his experience to the person who now holds the position, my amendment provides that that person shall have a 10-point preference over all persons who apply for examination, so that granting that 70 percent is necessary to pass an examination, which is now the civil-service requirement, all such a person will need to pass is a mark of 60 percent. Ten points are automatically added to such a person's grade in consideration of his experience.

Mr. DANAHER. Of course, the Senator's answer to my first question precipitates what I was coming to with the second question. Why would the Senator give that incumbent any such advantage in the event he is not really qualified in comparison with a competitor?

Mr. ELLENDER. To be frank, I thought that might be a way to answer some of the arguments which were advanced on the floor of the Senate yesterday and the day before. It was proposed for no other purpose. So far as I am concerned I would prefer to have the 10-point feature stricken out.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator claims that a man who is already occupying a position, in taking a new examination would have an advantage over one who did not, and then he gives the incumbent two advantages, by not only giving him the advantage of the experience, but 10 points besides.

Let me say, I like the philosophy of the Senator's amendment as to its other provisions. I think that as a matter of decency there ought to be an examination. But, I would much prefer to vote for the Senator's amendment without the 10-percent clause being in it, because what the Senator has done is to give to the encumbent such an advantage—one natural and the other artificial—that it would be practically impossible, or useless, rather, to have the examination of anyone else.

Mr. ELLENDER. I do not entirely agree with the Senator, and I may——

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. The Senator from Maryland, in my humble opinion, is perfectly right, and that is the reason for my inquiry of the Senator from Louisiana. If the incumbent is to be given an advantage born of his experience in the job, and then in addition given a 10-point competitive credit over another competitor, it seems to me that necessarily you may eliminate contestants who would be superior were it not for the artificially large credit. I feel that if we are to have a real merit system, which I strongly favor, I would much rather see every position thrown open to true competition, so the public may receive the best possible classified civil-service lists that can be obtained. You do not have to give an advantage to the incumbent in a civil-service examination of a 10-point credit.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, that was really my contention from the beginning, and I may say that if there are other Senators who likewise feel opposed to the 10-point proposition, I may be inclined to modify my amendment so as to strike it out.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me show the Senator how I believe his well-intentioned proposal would result in a miscarriage of equity. First of all, an ex-service man under the present law, as I recall, has a 5 percent credit, and the man who is wounded I think receives a 10 percent credit in his civil service examination computation. The reason for that is that men who have given their time, at great sacrifice and risk of life, and quite often have incurred wounds for which the Government wants to recognize them—those who have served the country in time of need—have priority for the jobs, all things being equal. The Senator's amendment, however, if adopted, would have this effect. Let us assume there would be an ex-service man better qualified than the incumbent, who was not an ex-service man. We will assume that both have 75 percent as a natural average in taking the examination. The incumbent, under the Senator's amendment would be automatically given an average of 10 more points, or 85 percent. But an ex-service man who had 75 percent would only have a total of 80 percent, with his credit of 5 percent. Therefore, although the ex-service man, under the intent and purpose of our philosophy of the civil service, should have the preference, he would be precluded from getting the job. That is one illustration.

Here is another even worse. Let us suppose the incumbent had an average of 80 percent, and the ex-service man had an average of 84 percent, showing that the ex-service man was 4 percent more efficient or more qualified for the job than was the incumbent. When the ex-service man had his 5 percent credit added to the 84 percent he would have only 89 percent, even with his service qualification, and in fact in a strict competitive examination he came out ahead of the incumbent, but the incumbent, having an average of 80 percent, would have 10 percent automatically added to his average, which would deny the ex-service man, who had not only served his country, but who was more efficient in an examination, from getting the job after all.

If the Senator from Louisiana will give that matter consideration—and I know he wants to do the best thing—I believe he will see that as this amendment is drawn, the field for inequality is very wide, since the incumbent would have an advantage, anyway, by having served in the job, and be better qualified than the average man in taking the examination. I want to support the Senator's amendment, as I know the Senator from Connecticut does, and I believe the Senator from Louisiana would be well-advised, from the standpoint of the parliamentary situation, if he would voluntarily strike out the remaining clause, and I offer that suggestion in the best of faith.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, of course I gave considerable attention to that question before I presented the amendment, and I concluded, to be frank, that this method would probably be the better way to get the matter passed by the Senate. But, as I said awhile ago, I am not wedded to the 10-percent provision. Probably before I take my seat I may follow the suggestion of the Senator from Maryland, which conforms with the original views that I entertained. The only reason I made the proposal, as I stated, was because I felt that with that provision in the amendment it would be easier to have it agreed to so that we could at least have the semblance of open competition.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. There is no priority with respect to Federal positions, anyway. They ought to be open to all citizens of the Republic. Of course, under our political situation, whichever party is in control gets the non-civil-service positions, and I am not quarreling with that.

This bill comes in to change that old system and to put the matter on a civil-service basis. Certainly the incumbent already has an advantage, but when the positions belong to the whole people—and that is the philosophy of the whole civil-service law—anything that defeats its proper operation defeats the whole philosophy of any real civil service. I am glad the Senator feels as he does, because I am sure he is on the right track.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator knows my very deep interest in his amendment. I think I have amply demonstrated it. I want to join the plea made by the Senator from Maryland. I think the 10-percent clause runs counter to the general theory of the amendment itself, and I have the feeling that the incumbent has far more than a 10-percent advantage, naturally, because of his familiarity with his job. I hope the Senator will do what the Senator from Maryland requested.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to go into any detail with respect to the hearings that the special Civil Service Committee, of which I am chairman, held concerning the operation of the merit system of the civil service. I should like to present to the Senate a few glaring examples of injustices that may follow likewise from the adoption of the bill as now drafted without competitive feature in the bill.

As Senators know, in recent years hundreds upon hundreds of persons have been placed in Government jobs without civil-service examinations. I cite from knowledge that in the General Accounting Office hundreds of positions have been filled by men and women who have not taken any kind of examination, but who have been placed in the positions held by them through Executive order. The tragedy of it all is that in some instances, those who were given the jobs without examination, but through political influence, receive better pay when they enter the service than do those who took the civil-service examinations but whose salaries have not advanced with the years. Their advancement has been phenomenal as compared with that of those who have been in the service for years. I have reviewed cases of persons who were given jobs under civil service. They passed the examinations, and started at the initial salary of $1,200 at the time. They remained in service for more than 20 years, and climbed up to a salary of $1,440. In many instances newcomers, entering the service without examination, have started at salaries as high as $1,800. They have been doing practically the same work as the "work horses" have been doing for 20 years. I say that such a system strikes at the very roots of the merit system. It is giving only lip service to civil service.

I use as illustration the case of Ralph C. Gustin, a relative of Mr. Baity, who was in charge at the General Accounting Office. He entered the service in 1934 under an Executive order as an assistant auditor. He received $1,800 a year.

From 1934 to 1937, less than 3 years, his salary was raised to $2,600 and at one time in 1936, he was receiving $3,200.

Mr. Cornell entered the service in 1935 under an Executive order. At the beginning he received a salary of $2,300 a year. In less than 2 years his salary was raised to $3,200.

Let me cite in contrast the case of one of the "work horses" who has been in the service for almost a lifetime. Mr. Enyart entered the service December 14, 1917. He started at a salary of $1,200. Up to September 16, 1935, his salary had been raised to $2,600, and he has remained at that salary until the present time. He took the civil-service examination. He worked under the rules and regulations of the department. He has remained in the service from 1917 until the present time, and has received the enormous increase of $1,400 in his salary. A newcomer, in less than 2½ years, received an increase of $1,200. Senators, that is not the right principle. That practice is not conducive to a real merit system.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. A number of similar cases have been called to my attention. Persons who have been in some of the old established departments for years are receiving very meager salaries. No one questions their competence. However, new employees enter the service, particularly in some of the new bureaus, and in 1 year receive increases in their salaries ranging from $1,000 to as much as $2,000 or $3,000. Complaints have come to me, as chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee, to the effect that some of the older bureaus are being discriminated against because in the newer bureaus salaries are raised by considerable amounts in a very short time.

Mr. ELLENDER. There is no question about that. I have been confronted with many cases in different departments, wherein persons were doing practically the same kind of work, but receiving different salaries. In one department employees were paid considerably more than employees in other departments were receiving, even in the face of the classified provision of the law.

As I pointed out a while ago, it will be argued by my good friend from New York that in his bill W. P. A. emergency employees will be excluded. I point out to him that many persons have been put on the pay roll in the General Accounting Office, not to take care of W. P. A., but of other big departments which have been organized since 1933. Such employees will be permitted to remain in their present positions, with salaries far in excess of those received by the forgotten workers who have been in the service for more than 20 years.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. I had not intended to make the point which the Senator has just mentioned. I rise rather to make answer to the complaint—perhaps a justifiable complaint—referred to by the Senator from Montana.

By our bill we reduce the number of such complaints, for we provide the machinery whereby they may be compromised. To illustrate, first we set up in the bill a board of review. For the first time in the history of the country there will be employee representation on such a board. Secondly, we extend to the great army of Federal employees, who are the subject of this discussion, the standards of the Classification Act, which will, to a very large degree, eliminate inequalities. So, by the board of review, aimed directly at eliminating the injustices referred to by the Senator, and by the extension of the Classification Act, we expect that the number of complaints will be reduced to an almost irreducible minimum in the future.

Mr. ELLENDER. With reference to the question raised by the Senator from New York as to the board of review, at present the bill does not provide for naming a representative of the employees on the board. I have an amendment to that effect.

Mr. MEAD. I also have such an amendment. I shall be glad to accept the Senator's amendment in that respect.

Mr. ELLENDER. Notwithstanding the fact that a board of review is provided, as the Senator from New York says, to hear complaints and to work out injustices, I have another helpful amendment which I hope the Senator will accept.

Title II of the bill provides for the extension of the Classification Act. However, there is a provision in the second part of the bill which states that after the classification has been made, if perchance one of the employees is placed in a class in which his salary will be less than the classification calls for, he is to receive the same salary as long as he remains in the service. That provision is in the bill. I do not believe that the bill as written would correct such evils as are now under discussion, even though the bill provides for a board of review.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I am not complaining because employees receive good salaries.

Mr. ELLENDER. Neither am I. I am pleading for equality.

Mr. WHEELER. However, there is no question that men and women working in some of the older established departments have been grossly discriminated against during the past few years. In some of the departments in the past few years, during the emergency, young lawyers just out of college have started at salaries which they could not obtain anywhere in the country in the private practice of law. That is one of the things which has tended to bring discredit upon some of the departments. Some of the departments have taken young fellows just out of college and have given them salaries in excess of those received by very able district judges throughout the western and middle-western part of the country after long terms of service.

There are a tremendous number of people unemployed in the United States today, many people are going hungry and many are looking for jobs at sufficient wages barely to make a living, and yet we have been grossly extravagant in the salaries paid in some of the departments.

I am not complaining about the bill. I shall vote for the measure, but I think something ought to be done to correct the situation to which I have referred. Either we have got to raise the salaries of some of the older employees in some of the departments or we will have to reduce some of the salaries of the others, because a great many employees in the older departments have lost interest in their work. They say, "We are being discriminated against; some fellow who is just out of college is appointed and given the salary of $5,000 or $6,000, while we have been working in the department for years and are receiving only $4,000. Of course, it is not right.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I should like to leave this thought with the Senator: The employees of the service, through their chosen organization, without exception, have unanimously appealed to us for the provisions of this bill to eliminate the very inequality to which the Senator so properly refers.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, to continue with a few more examples of inequality which may be of interest to Senators, Mr. Leslie L. Whitehead, freight-rate clerk, entered the service October 15, 1934, at the nominal salary of $2,000, and in a couple of years his salary was raised to $3,200. Another individual who has been employed in the same department under the civil service since 1917 is receiving now only $2,600.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I have been listening to the examples given by the Senator, and I am sure the Senator must have gone into the matter thoroughly. What does he know about the ability of these employees? I can well understand that a man might be in a department for 20 years and not be worth half what he got when he started, indeed, he might not have been worth anything to start with. I think that is probably true of many of them. It is easy enough to say that one man started at $1,800 and 20 years later is receiving $1,800, but he still may be worth only $1,800, while a man appointed 2 years ago who is receiving $3,000 may be worth $3,000.

Mr. ELLENDER. I may say to the Senator that the salaries under the civil service are usually gaged under the Classification Act; they are classified. Each class has a certain salary, and a certain method is provided by which the employee can reach the goal; that is, the highest salary, in a certain classification.

Mr. MINTON. Let me ask the Senator, do they all get the same salary in the same classification?

Mr. ELLENDER. That is the point. Most of the persons of whom I am speaking were in the same department doing practically the same work. One was there since 1917 and his salary, as pointed out, was raised to $2,600—he started at $1,200 in 1917—whereas the other employee started on October 15, 1934, and is now getting $3,200.

The employee who was getting $3,200 was not appointed under the civil-service regulations; he did not have to take a competitive examination, but simply, I presume, had to get the recommendation of someone with a little influence. Such a procedure as that is not conducive to the merit system.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. The able Senator from Louisiana is making an excellent argument in favor of the bill, for he is arguing for section 2 of the bill which will cover the agencies not now covered by the civil-service classification provisions of the law which will prevent the pyramiding of salaries. The salaries under the Classification Act were fixed by the Congress; they are fixed according to grades, and an employee can only advance in an orderly manner under the rules laid down by the Congress; but many positions, particularly the last one the Senator mentioned, are in agencies not covered by the Civil Service Act, or the Classification Act, and, therefore, the employee who had a grievance would have no board of appeals to resort to as he would have under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator does not mean to say, does he, that the General Accounting Office is not under the civil service?

Mr. MEAD. No; but the Senator mentioned some other agency such as the R. F. C. However, all parts of the General Accounting Office are not under the civil service.

Mr. ELLENDER. The ones I am mentioning now are emergency employees.

Mr. MEAD. The emergency employees of the General Accounting Office are not under the civil service, and not under the Classification Act. Only if this bill passes as amended will they come under the Classification Act, and no injustice such as the Senator mentions will occur in the future.

Mr. ELLENDER. Of course, I should like to agree with my good friend from New York, but, as the bill has been presented to the Senate from the committee, the situation which he describes will not prevail, because, although the classification principle is applied to field work, the bill still provides that any employees, whatever salaries are today being paid to them, if their classification happens to be such that their salary would not be as great as that they are now receiving, will be allowed to have the same salary until they either die or resign or retire from office.

Mr. MEAD. As I said a moment ago, there are a number of amendments floating around the Chamber, one of which the Senator has and one which I have, which I am perfectly willing to accept, that, if adopted, will change the salary status. We want to bring them under the Civil Service Act, under the Classification Act, and under salary standards that the Senator's amendment and mine would provide.

Mr. ELLENDER. I am glad the Senator will accept such an amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. I merely rose because the Senator from New York, in his colloquy with me about the bill, indicated that he thought the bill he was advocating would obviate the very evils of which the Senator from Louisiana is speaking.

Mr. MEAD. That is correct.

Mr. HATCH. I think conditions to which reference has been made are not justifiable, and certainly the Senator is right when he says they are contrary to every theory of the merit system. I know of no Senator who wants to continue those conditions; that is what we are trying to eliminate; and there are a number of other conditions which ought also to be eliminated.

Mr. ELLENDER. I appreciate the Senator's views; he expressed them yesterday, and it was stated then that if we force competitive examination there will not be enough votes cast to pass the bill. The effect would be to let the injustices which now exist, continue to stare in the face those thousands who have taken the examinations and who have qualified. That goes to the heart of the civil service. It affects 650,000 persons who are now in the civil service, because many, when I examined them and asked, "Why do you not do this and better yourself?" have answered, "Senator, what is the use?"

It strikes me that if we are to have a merit system, we should make it so that anybody who enters the service can reach the top if he takes the examination, becomes eligible, and is found to be better qualified than others. If we can get a system of that kind, I say we will have a real merit system; but the practice to which I have referred, as I have pointed out this afternoon, has been followed by practically every President from the time the original law was adopted. What the Congress did was to create new bureaus and new agencies and exempted the prospective employees of them from civil-service regulations.

Mr. HATCH. That was done by the Congress itself.

Mr. ELLENDER. Exactly, and that practice has been continued ever since the civil-service law has been on the statute books. I think it is time to stop it.

Mr. HATCH. That is what some of us are trying to do.

Mr. ELLENDER. My amendment would not prevent the President from placing bureaus and departments under the civil-service system, but it would give him the right to do so provided the existing civil-service law is complied with in respect to open competitive examinations.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I should like to ask the Senator a question to see if I understand him. He says the President has the right to put them under the civil service, but the Senator from Louisiana wants him to take names from the existing lists and discharge employees who are now in the departments.

Mr. ELLENDER. No, sir. The Senator from Louisiana is not asking for that. The Senator from Louisiana is simply saying to the President, "You may place every department that is not now under the civil service under the civil service, but I desire that the civil-service law as it is now written on the statute books be applied in order to find competent men and women to place in the various positions." That will mean that almost every person who is now employed will have the right to take the examination and, as was pointed out by the Senator from Connecticut, those who have been occupying positions for 2, 3, 4, or 15 years will certainly have a decided advantage over those who are to take the examination as applicants.

Mr. MINTON. If there is an existing list who have already passed examinations for positions such as stenographers, clerks, file clerks, and so on, those who now have the jobs will lose them and those who happen to be on the list, and who have passed the examination, will be the ones to get the positions. Is that correct?

Mr. ELLENDER. What was the Senator's question?

Mr. MINTON. I am trying to understand what the Senator is talking about. There seems to me to be something to recommend the persons who already have these jobs. They must have been performing their duties well, or they would not be there.

Mr. ELLENDER. I grant to the Senator that there may be some jobs wherein there are at present some men and women who are qualified; but I dare say there are hundreds of jobs to fill for which there are not a sufficient number of eligibles, and in most of these cases the present incumbents will have a chance at the examinations.

Mr. MINTON. In other words, they will have a chance to take examinations with somebody else for jobs they already have.

Mr. ELLENDER. That is the way it ought to be.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes; in just a minute. Let me again read to the Senator from Indiana, in connection with the answer I have just given him, a statement on the merit system, which comes from the Civil Service Commission itself:

> One purpose of the civil-service law is to give all citizens an equal right to demonstrate their qualifications for Government employment. Another purpose is to insure that the persons appointed are the best qualified among those seeking Government employment. The better the quality of employees, the smaller is the number required. The Civil Service Commission aims, through the competitive-examination process, to save money to the taxpayers by securing the most competent employees for the Federal service.

That is a statement from the Civil Service Commission, but it seems as though it is only lip service.

I now yield to my friend from Washington.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. ELLENDER. Certainly.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. It is a rather long question. I ask the Senator to listen to it.

Mr. ELLENDER. Can the Senator break it up a little, so as to give it to me in small bits? [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. We have two individuals, A and B. On January 1, 1938, A started to work for W. P. A., say, in the administrative staff. On the same day B took and successfully passed a civil-service examination and got on the list. Let us assume that after the adoption of the Senator's amendment A also took the examination and got exactly the same grade as B. Would B have a preference over A because of the fact that he had been on the list since January 1, 1938?

Mr. ELLENDER. Not if both took the examination and A was selected for the job; no.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. No; my question is, Does a man have any priority just because he has been on the list longer than somebody else, assuming that both have the same grades?

Mr. ELLENDER. Under my amendment?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Under the Senator's amendment or under the civil-service system.

Mr. ELLENDER. No; there would not be any priority by virtue of being on the list a longer time. The person who has the job at present would receive the same consideration as a person on the outside with respect to examinations; but I maintain that the fact that the incumbent has had the experience would give him a better chance to pass the examination.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I want the Senator to assume that they both pass the examination and have the same grade: Who would get the job?

Mr. ELLENDER. If both pass the examination, and both have the same grade, and both apply for the same job?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Yes.

Mr. ELLENDER. The way that is done is this: The Civil Service Commission has a register, and from that register is selected the three persons with the highest grades, and the names of those three persons are sent to the head of the department in which a vacancy exists; and from that list the department head selects one of the three. He may select the one with the highest grade, or the one with the second highest grade, or the one with the lowest grade of the three; and whomever he selects and certifies gets the job.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. And no preference is given because one man happened to get on the list 2 years ago, and the other got on the list today?

Mr. ELLENDER. No; not at all. In other words, each State has such lists from each district; and whenever there is a vacancy in a district within the State, for field work, one of the three is selected by the departmental head from this eligible list; it does not matter when the examination was taken.

There is another point which I discussed to a certain extent earlier in the day, and that is with respect to the age of the applicant. Today, if a person applies for a job for which a civil-service examination is necessary, he must be under 55 years of age or else he cannot qualify even if he makes a grade of 100 percent. If this bill goes through and a noncompetitive examination is given to the person who now has the job, he may be 70 years old, but if he passes the examination and is not physically disabled he may obtain the job. That is not logical. Furthermore, such a person 70 years of age and who is in good health cannot be retired unless he has been in the service as long as 15 years. If he is disabled, he is eligible for retirement after having served only 5 years.

Concessions of that kind are sure to weaken the foundation of our civil-service system and automatically affect the thousands who are now in the service and the thousands who would like to get into the service, because, as I said awhile ago, it puts them in the attitude of saying, "Oh, what is the use?"

Even in the civil service itself, in various departments, there have been many discrepancies. I want to say to the Senator from New York that the part of the bill which creates a board of review was one of the recommendations that I proposed to submit to the Senate when our Civil Service Committee, which is examining the civil service, makes its report to the Senate. I believe that such a board, if created, will cure a great many of the evils which have existed in the past in the civil service.

We have had some cases of this kind, for instance, in the Post Office Department: A Miss Leone Adair, who entered the service in 1926, CAF–2, salary $1,440, was promoted from year to year to grade CAF–4, with a salary of $2,040. It seems that the head of a division in the Post Office Department in which she was employed needed a secretarial assistant. This Miss Adair was eligible for the position, but she was not a beautiful girl; she wore glasses, she was homely, and her face was not quite as good looking as it should have been, probably, in the estimation of the person who needed a secretary. He searched around among the 96 or 97 girls who were working in the Division and selected a Mrs. Smithers, who was a very charming and very affable person. In order to obtain the services of this fine-looking lady, who had entered the service in 1936 as a CAF–2 with a salary of $1,440—and who, in the meantime, was promoted to CAF–3, salary, $1,620—he promoted her from that position of CAF–3, salary $1,620, to CAF–6 overnight, with a salary of $2,300—in other words, a salary increase of almost $700 overnight. As I recall, this division head found no fault with the work of Miss Adair, but he said Mrs. Smithers could better answer the telephone [laughter] than could Miss Adair. She could make a better appearance than Miss Adair when Senators and Congressmen called. [Laughter.]

What effect do you think that had upon the other 95 girls in the office who were striving to better their conditions, who had taken the examinations, and who worked hard? I say, Senators, such procedure is wrong, and there is nothing which will destroy the merit system as that will. I could cite many other cases to demonstrate that many promotions were made on that basis, and nothing else.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President——

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. It is true, is it not, that the department head has the right to promote within his department?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes; under the rules and regulations established by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. MINTON. I am merely trying to find out the system. The Senator has criticised what was done in this case. Did the department head in that case have the authority, under the law, to do what he did?

Mr. ELLENDER. Evidently he did. As I recall the situation, if the person at the head of this department had waited until an Executive order, which was issued sometime in February 1938 had become effective, he could not have made the change. A day or so before the order was made operative, the promotion was made from CAF–3 to CAF–6, with an additional salary, and, of course, this lady got the job. In the same department, besides Miss Leone Adair, who was in grade 4 and entitled to the job because she got into grade CAF–4 by normal promotion, and who was receiving a salary of $2,400, there was another lady, a Mrs. Counselman, who had been in the department since April 11, 1934, and another who had been in the department since 1918, a Mrs. Costello, both of whom were in higher grades than the lady who was promoted and who should have been given preference. But notwithstanding the fact that these two had a higher rating than Mrs. Smithers, this departmental head overlooked all those and selected Mrs. Smithers, and promoted her from CAF–3 to CAF–6 as I have just indicated.

Mr. MINTON. What does the Senator know about the capabilities of these people?

Mr. ELLENDER. I should like to believe that it was ability the head of this department was looking for. [Laughter.] I would just like to believe that. I have some pictures in my office of the two clerks standing side by side, and I am sorry that I do not have them here, to show to the Senator from Indiana. If he had been in the same position the head of that department occupied, I do not know but that he might have made the same decision. [Laughter.]

Mr. MINTON. I am not interested in the pictures; in fact, I have an amendment here myself which I intend to offer, to do away with this picture bureau.

Mr. ELLENDER. The pictures have nothing to do with the picture bureau. They were taken during hearings by very obliging photographers who represented the press. [Laughter.]

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. I can add my endorsement to what the Senator is saying so far as inequalities and injustices are concerned, and that is why I believe that the Senator from Louisiana and I should have the support of the Senator from Indiana, in order to put the bill through as hurriedly as possible.

Mr. MINTON. I am going to vote for it.

Mr. MEAD. In order that we may cover them all under the Classification Act, and beyond that—and this is the crux of the bill—in order that we might create the boards of review provided for, and give those boards employee representation, so that these injustices might be aired in the various departments of the Government. It is a start in the right direction, and I am sure that we are all now on the same track, and we should make rapid progress.

Mr. ELLENDER. I am not attempting to strike from the bill the provision for the boards of review. The bill will provide for the boards even if my amendment is agreed to.

Mr. MEAD. The Senator wants to strengthen the bill.

Mr. ELLENDER. I have some pertinent amendments to the provisions of the bill that deal with the boards of review.

Mr. MINTON. I am getting a little confused. Is the Senator from New York for the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. MEAD. We are together, only——

Mr. ELLENDER. We are together, but truly far apart. [Laughter.]

Mr. MINTON. If the Senators are together, then I am at sea.

Mr. MEAD. We are together. The only difficulty I can see is that the Senator and I are both for the boards of review, and we are both for employee representation on the boards of review, but the Senator is advancing a great many arguments why we ought to have them, and I am anxious to expedite the having of them.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, another point I advanced in debate was on the question of apportionment. I shall not go into further details about that question, because I discussed it before, and pointed out to Senators the inequalities which exist today in Washington as to the number of employees who should come from the States of Indiana, Louisiana, California, and other States, when in reality other States near by are getting the great proportion of the jobs. I contend that the adoption of this measure will further aggravate the situation. It is bound to, because if my amendment is not agreed to, it will mean that the President will have the authority, under a certain procedure written into the bill, to maintain the jobs of these people through a noncompetitive examination, and if those people pass the examination, the Civil Service Commission will be precluded from applying the law as now written in the Civil Service Act with respect to apportionment. Irrespective of the States from which the employees come, if they pass the examination they are going to be retained in the service, with preference over others who may now be eligible.

Let me again point out to Senators, for the benefit of some who may not have been here when I discussed the matter yesterday, what the situation is. Before I give the figures, let me say that in the past 7 or 8 years there has been much improvement in the matter of apportionment. I notice that the number of departmental employees in the city of Washington listed from the various States of the Union has been increased considerably. Let us take, for instance, the State of Alabama, from which my good friend, the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], who sits at my side, hails. In 1933 Alabama was receiving 41.5 percent of its quota. This year it has been increased to 61.7 percent. But Alabama is still almost 40 percent under the quota to which it is entitled under the law as enacted in 1883. Yet the Senate today is being asked to close its eyes to that provision of the law, and to permit various applicants to be taken into the service irrespective of the States in which they live, and irrespective of whether or not Montana, the Virgin Islands, Florida, Louisiana, or other States, have their respective quotas.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator need not worry about Montana having her quota, because I am sure she has her quota anyway.

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. WHEELER. I knew I was.

Mr. HILL. What is the quota?

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator from Montana has just said that we must not worry, as I understood him, because his State already has its quota, and that is true. As a matter of fact, the State of Montana in 1933 had 61.66 percent of its quota, and today Montana has 100.9 percent. In other words, it is nearly 1 percent over.

Mr. MEAD. Montana has 48 positions in excess of her quota today.

Mr. ELLENDER. I gave the percentage.

Mr. MINTON. How is Indiana faring?

Mr. ELLENDER. In 1933 the State of Indiana received 80.6 percent of its quota. Today the State is receiving 87.8 percent. It is still 12.2 percent under its quota.

Mr. DOWNEY rose.

Mr. ELLENDER. Probably the junior Senator from California desires to find out about the State of California. In 1933 that State received 22.2 percent of what she was entitled to and is now receiving 35.2 percent. In other words, the State lacks almost 65 percent of the number of employees to which the State of California is entitled, and the pending bill will further aggravate that situation.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. DOWNEY. I wonder whether the Senator from Montana could instruct the Senator from California how he accomplished the result shown by the figures as to his State? I should like to know. [Laughter.]

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator from Montana will have to answer that for himself. I can vouch that he is a go-getter. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER. I will take the Senator off to one side and give him the information. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUGHES. How about Delaware?

Mr. ELLENDER. Delaware happens to be nearby, and I am sorry to point out to the Senator that in 1933 his State had 96.9 percent of its quota but now it has 89.6 percent. There has been a drop of almost 10 percent.

Mr. HUGHES. Would it appear from that that they had had an inefficient Senator? [Laughter.]

Mr. ELLENDER. I would not say that. I have high esteem for the distinguished Senator from Delaware. I know he is capable and his constituents hold him in high regard.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, is it not a fact that the closeness of some States to the Capital of the Nation, to Washington, has more to do with the number of employees in the Government departments than any other one fact? For instance, I might refer to Maryland and Virginia; and there are eight or ten or twelve thousand Government employees from the District of Columbia. Those ten or twelve thousand have come from every State in the Union. They were not born in this District.

Mr. ELLENDER. Generally speaking, that is correct. Very few States which are far away have their quotas. I do not know of any other State that is far off that has a hundred percent, except Montana.

Let us get some figures on nearby States. In 1933 the State of Virginia was getting 344.9 percent; in other words, almost three and a half times what they were entitled to. Today they are receiving 207.8 percent.

Mr. HILL. What about Maryland?

Mr. ELLENDER. The State of Maryland, which is nearby, in 1933 had 475 percent, in other words, four and three-quarters times the number of persons it was entitled to in departmental work at Washington. In 1940 it still has 313.4 percent, over three times what it should have.

Highest of all, on the list, of course, is the District of Columbia. It is entitled to 205 jobs, and has 8,873. I did not figure the percentage in that case.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. Gladly.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator give us the figures as to the State of New York?

Mr. ELLENDER. In 1933 the State of New York received 54.6 percent of its quota. Today it has 99 percent of its quota—almost 100 percent.

Mr. HILL. If the bill were to pass, will it freeze or have a strong tendency to freeze these inequalities which the Senator from Louisiana has pointed out to the Senate?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes. The inequalities will be frozen mighty hard. [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. They will be frozen mighty hard?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes. In other words, it will aggravate the problem to a large extent, and we as Senators have been asked to close our eyes to the situation, in the face of the law which says an apportionment should be had.

Mr. HILL. Does the Senator mean we, as Senators representing our several States, are being asked to vote for a bill and to enact it into law, which would freeze these inequalities and these injustices against our States? Is that correct?

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator is absolutely correct.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Louisiana is chairman of a special committee of the Senate to investigate the civil service, and I know that as chairman of that special committee he has given a great deal of time, effort, and study to the question of the civil service. Will the Senator tell us succinctly, what is the best way to remove these inequalities, and remove them now, not some time in the future?

Mr. ELLENDER. I believe the present bill could be amended, that is, with reference to apportionment, the matter to which I believe the Senator referred. Yesterday the Senate voted to strike out the apportionment provision which was adopted by the House. I believe the Civil Service Commission could, under the law at present, establish eligible lists for departmental work in Washington for every State. In my mind there is no reason to have simply one list, what we may call a "national list," that is taken from all the States of the Union, and let the Commission select from this list the three highest applicants. It strikes me that the Civil Service Commission has the authority, and if it does not have the authority it should be given the authority, to establish eligible lists as I have just indicated for every State in the Union with respect to the departmental jobs in the city of Washington, and in that way the Civil Service Commission could select from the State lists persons to fill jobs as they become vacant, and I am sure that it would not take many years before the quota system could be balanced in all States.

It seems to me there has been no real earnest effort made to carry out the apportionment provisions of the law itself, the spirit of the law, although some improvement has been made, I grant to the Senate, but I believe further improvement could be made along the lines I have just suggested.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. HILL. The carrying out of the law, the administration of the law, is in the hands of the Civil Service Commission; is that correct?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes. That is, the Civil Service Commission sets up the machinery to conduct examinations, and then to classify the applicants; but the actual jobs are, of course, given out by the departmental heads. They are assigned, as I have indicated on several occasions, to one of the three persons highest on the eligible lists.

Mr. HILL. Is there no provision in the law under which the quota system is set up and provided for, placing the authority or responsibility on the Commission or some other agency to carry out the quota system?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes; that is written in the law.

Mr. HILL. Why is it not carried out?

Mr. ELLENDER. There is a provision in the law which says, as the Senator from New York pointed out yesterday, that wherever it is practical the Commission shall do it.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield right there?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. Let me explain that as best I can in order that the Senator from Alabama may have a clear idea of the problem he has in mind, because I know from what he said a while ago that he is confused, or that we have confused him. If there are a number of people to be taken from the stenographic list, every State which is in excess of its quota is passed up, and every State which is not in excess of its quotas is given these new vacancies until such time as it becomes in excess of its quota.

For instance, the State of New York in 1940 had 5,034 positions. The State of New York in 1940 was entitled to 5,087 positions. So that the Civil Service Commission, in keeping with the quota law, has brought New York State into approximate balance.

The point I wish to make, however, is that it is operating in the interest of the distant States. A moment ago the Senator from Alabama asked, "Are we, by passing this measure, going to freeze these inequalities?"

Let me say to the Senator that in this bill we are dealing with positions which are not in the civil service, which are not under the quota law, which are not under the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission. The Senator from Alabama will find that about 50 of the positions in the T. V. A. are filled by persons from the State of Vermont, as compared with the great number of positions held by persons from his State.

Let us consider the Federal Housing Authority. The Senator may find more positions held in the Federal Housing Authority by persons from Michigan than by persons from Alabama. When we pass the pending bill we will put them under the civil service, we will put them under the quota law, and then equality will result.

Mr. HILL. But they were not placed under the quota law in the beginning. They are put under the quota law only after all the places have been filled by those now in the places, and those people represent the present inequalities.

Mr. MEAD. Upon inquiry, I think the Senator from Alabama would find that he would not be serving his State nearly as well by insisting upon the quota as he would by simply taking his chances.

Mr. HILL. Let me say to the Senator from New York that under the quota system my State is entitled to 100 percent, whereas by taking my chances my State today has only 63 percent, according to the information the Senator from Louisiana gives me.

Mr. MEAD. The quota pertains only to civil-service positions, and the bill deals only with positions not now in the civil service.

Mr. HILL. Has the Senator from New York any figures or any break-down with reference to these positions which he would now bring in under the civil service, as to what they would be, so far as the different States are concerned, and what effect they would have on the quotas of the different States? In other words, if we bring in all these new positions, without providing that they must come strictly under the quota, what effect will that have on the quotas as they exist today?

Mr. MEAD. As my distinguished colleague, the Senator from Louisiana, said, it probably will to a marked degree depend upon the ability of the Senators and the Representatives from the various States in acquiring these positions. I do not know how busy the Senator from Alabama has been. I imagine he has been very modest. But if the Senator from Louisiana is correct, that obtaining these positions may, to a marked degree, depend upon our ability to get recognition, or upon our ability to obtain projects in our States which employ large numbers of men, depending upon that we may be able to arrive at a quota, and I am sure there will be no inequality in the State of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. WHEELER. I was about to suggest that I have not the slightest doubt that it will be found that the State of New York and the State of Pennsylvania have the big bulk of those who are not under the civil service.

Mr. MEAD. I am not sure of that. I have no figures. Without figures I should not advance a guess, because it would be inaccurate and unbecoming of a Senator to make a guess.

Mr. WHEELER. I should make a guess.

Mr. MEAD. I should not.

Mr. WHEELER. I should be willing to wager that my guess would be correct.

Mr. MEAD. I should not make a guess, and I should not be willing to bet on it. I should have to have more figures than I have.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Montana is not including Cabinet members in his figures with reference to New York. [Laughter.]

Mr. MEAD. The Senator from Montana is probably not alluding to the fact that, so far as the civil-service quota is concerned, his State is over its quota.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. HILL. From my personal knowledge and observation of the various bureaus and departments, I should certainly corroborate and confirm the opinion just expressed by the Senator from Montana. When we go into the various bureaus and departments we see countless numbers of persons from New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Virginia, the States close at hand. I am counting New York as a State close at hand.

Mr. MEAD. If I may give the Senator from Alabama the number of appointments his State has in one agency as compared with the total, he will realize that we are not doing an injustice to his State. In the Tennessee Valley Authority there are 6,000 positions, and the State of Alabama has 1,587. To be sure that the Senator from Montana has some accurate figures to corroborate his guess, which he is willing to support with a wager, let me say to him that the great State of New York, with its teeming millions of population, has 119 jobs in the T. V. A.

Mr. ELLENDER. I do not think the Senator wants to be unfair about the figures.

Mr. MEAD. I do not. I merely wish to make this observation: The Senator from Alabama asked how we could arrive at the number of appointees in the various bureaus outside the civil service, and I said that the Senator from Louisiana had answered that question, because he had said a little while ago that it might depend upon the ability of the Senator or Representative.

Mr. ELLENDER. If we delve into the Customs Service we find that New York has the greatest number of jobs in that department of Government.

Mr. MEAD. That is in the civil service.

Mr. ELLENDER. I understand, but the T. V. A., to which the Senator from New York refers, has nothing to do with the apportionment part of the law.

Mr. MEAD. That is correct.

Mr. ELLENDER. The apportionment part of the law applies to departmental work in the District of Columbia, and has nothing to do with any job outside the District of Columbia.

Mr. MEAD. The Senator knows that if we pass a bill and cover all the agencies into the civil service, the civil service quota will have something to do with the question hereafter.

Mr. ELLENDER. It will have something to do with it hereafter—after all those who are put in the service die or leave the service. Then, when new appointments are made, I grant that the plan would work all right, because all applicants would then have to come within the purview of the civil-service law and take a competitive examination. But let us not lose sight of the fact that if the bill should be passed, and if the President of the United States should exercise his right to give every department the opportunity to come under civil service, when those who are now in the positions should take the noncompetitive examinations, they would not be asked whether they are from New York, Louisiana, or Alabama, as would be the case in a competitive examination. They would be blanketed in, which, as I say, would aggravate the apportionment situation which we have been discussing.

Mr. MEAD. I am not sure that everything the Senator has said is correct.

Mr. ELLENDER. I am positive of it.

Mr. MEAD. We do not know where they live, and we do not know which States would be in excess of their quotas.

We know the quotas of the States only as they pertain to civil-service positions. We do not know the quotas of the States as they pertain to so-called patronage positions. The Senator knows that about 25 percent of the applicants for noncompetitive examinations do not pass.

Mr. ELLENDER. From 25 to 30 percent.

Mr. MEAD. In some cases the percentage is as high as 28 percent. In the failures we give the Civil Service an opportunity to balance the proportions as between the States.

Mr. ELLENDER. I am glad the Senator brought up that point. As I recall, when he first discussed the bill on Monday, he said that the proposed plan would put the Civil Service Commission to enormous expense, and that if all the jobs were opened up thousands of persons would be permitted to take the examinations. I contend that since the record shows that from 25 to 28 percent of those taking the noncompetitive examinations fail, the Civil Service Commission would have to call for examinations in practically all the departments, in the same way as though the positions had been put under competitive examination from the beginning. Does not the Senator agree to that?

Mr. MEAD. Eventually there would have to be examinations.

Mr. ELLENDER. There would have to be examinations to fill vacancies because of failures. I am now speaking of those who are already in the service. As the Senator stated, from 25 to 28 percent of those who have taken the noncompetitive examinations have failed. In order to fill the gaps caused by the failure of 25 or 28 percent, it would be necessary, in most cases, for the Commission to call for examinations, would it not?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; except that it would not be necessary to the same extent as we were discussing yesterday because the President might cover only one agency, and the Civil Service Commission would hold a noncompetitive examination applying only to the one agency. Perhaps a number in that agency would fail, but the agency would not suffer a break-down, as it would in the case of a wide-open examination; and, if a general examination were held later, it would apply only to positions within the one agency. When that job was done, the President might cover another agency. So we should have a very gradual infiltration into the civil service, and we should have examinations spread over a long period of years.

Mr. ELLENDER. I contend that the failures we are talking about, amounting to 25 or 30 percent, apply not to one department but to all departments. So, if we have as many failures as that, in order to fill those positions made vacant, it would be necessary under all conditions for the Commission to give competitive examinations.

Mr. MEAD. No; the Senator is mistaken. If in a particular agency there should be a certain percentage of failures, and we should require only noncompetitive examinations, most of the vacancies due to failures could be filled from existing lists, without a new examination.

Mr. ELLENDER. By the same token, I say that we could probably absorb most of those now qualified to enter the service. I will say further to the Senator that under the terms of the bill, even with my amendment, the President is not called upon to cover all departments at once. He may go at it systematically. He may call for examinations for the T. V. A. and then call for examinations for the Federal land bank, or for other departments to come under the civil service. Even after such examinations are held, and up to the time the applicants qualify, the incumbents remain. They may remain in the positions for a period of 6 months. So there would be no break-down, as the Senator from New York is contending.

Mr. President I am about to conclude my remarks. I could give to the Senate many examples along the same line as those which I have stated, but I do not wish to burden the RECORD with them.

Since all of us seem to be for civil service, for the merit system, and for classification, let us have it in the genuine way. Let us have it in the way the law now provides. As I pointed out a while ago, the only way in which to obtain a real merit system is through competitive examination, so that each and every American citizen shall have the right to take the examination. If he qualifies and is able to fill the position, let him have it under civil service. I feel confident that that is the only way by which we can establish a genuine merit system.

Mr. ELLENDER subsequently said: Mr. President, when I concluded my remarks a few minutes ago I intended to modify the pending amendment by striking from it, beginning on line 7, the colon and the following words:

Provided, That the incumbent of any such position shall be given a preference of 10 points on any competitive examination for such position.

I ask unanimous consent that this modification appear at the end of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

HOUSING OF DRAFTEES AND VOLUNTARY ENLISTMENT

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I wish to call attention briefly to an article which appeared in the Washington Post of this morning. It is entitled "Inadequate Housing to Slow Down Draft." The article is by John G. Norris, Post staff writer. The article reads as follows:

INADEQUATE HOUSING TO SLOW DOWN DRAFT—ALL OF FIRST LEVY WON'T BE IN UNIFORM UNTIL MARCH 1

(By John G. Norris, Post Staff Writer)

Army officials told members of the Senate and House Military Committees yesterday that the first levy of drafted men—originally scheduled for call October 1—will not all be in uniform until March 1.

Delay in passing the conscription bill caused War Department officials earlier to extend the October date for inducting 400,000 draftees until later in the fall. Then it became evident that adequate housing would not be ready for all the men until after the first of the year, and yesterday it was admitted that all facilities for the first draft will not be available before the end of February.

A War Department statement issued after the congressional delegation conferred with Army chiefs gave no induction dates but emphasized that the draftees will be taken gradually into service to permit completion of adequate facilities and insure healthful and comfortable living conditions for the men when they arrive in camp.

MUCH BUILDING AHEAD

The statement revealed that 30 cantonments and 16 semipermanent camps will have to be constructed to handle the draftees and mobilized National Guard men, besides enlargement of facilities at 90 existing posts, and construction of Army air stations on about 30 civilian airdromes.

Representative SMITH (Democrat) of Connecticut, one of the group which met with Secretary of War Stimson and Gen. George C. Marshall, Chief of Staff, said the number of men to be called under the draft this fall and winter is expected to be less than the planned 400,000; perhaps 360,000. The first increment will enter service in late November, and the last—probably about 125,000 men—around the end of February.

I also desire to call attention to an article appearing in this evening's newspaper, the Washington Daily News, reading in part as follows:

VOLUNTEERS MAY GREATLY CUT NUMBER OF DRAFTEES

Selective-service officials today expect voluntary enlistments after registration day will make it unnecessary to draft many men for the first contingent of 400,000 conscripts.

On the basis of inquiries at headquarters here by men seeking to volunteer, officials believed the entire 400,000 may be raised by that method before January 1.

Since the Conscription Act was signed by President Roosevelt 261 men have visited or telephoned conscription headquarters here to find out how quickly they can enlist for 1 year of military training. Officials pointed out that although 261 is a low figure, few persons know the location of their offices here.

Most inquirers are surprised to learn that, although the Army is accepting regular enlistments, they cannot volunteer immediately for training under the 1-year conscription plan. They must wait until after October 16—registration day—and then apply to local draft boards. They may not be accepted if they have dependents or are engaged in essential industries.

That is the very thing some of us were contending—first, that it was impossible for the Army to put the Conscription Act into effect and get the necessary men immediately, because the Army did not have the proper equipment or the proper cantonments; and yet the hysteria manifested in practically every single newspaper and on the floor of the Senate was such that it was said, "You must do it now. You must do it now. If you do not do it now," some of the headlines read and some of the editorials read, "it may be too late." Too late for what? "It may be too late if you do not pass the bill tonight, or if you do not pass it tomorrow."

Now, finally, the truth is coming out. The Army has not the facilities to take the men at once. A boy in my office went down the other day with the idea of enlisting, and asked if he could enlist for 1 year, and the officials said, "No"; they were not taking men for 1 year. He went right down to the Army headquarters here and asked the officials in person, and they said, "No"; he could not enlist for 1 year.

Quoting again from the article in the Washington Daily News:

Selective-service officials today expect voluntary enlistments after registration day will make it unnecessary to draft many men for the first contingent of 400,000 conscripts.

Yet we were told that if we did not put the draft into effect immediately they would not be able to raise the necessary men. We were told not only that it must be done now, but that the Army could not wait until January 1. They could not give those who wished to volunteer 2 months in which to do it; they had to have the draft immediately, for otherwise Hitler might come here and take over the United States of America in the meantime.

The article further says:

On the basis of inquiries at headquarters here by men seeking to volunteer, officials believed the entire 400,000 may be raised by that method before January 1.

If the entire 400,000 may be raised by January 1, is there any question in the mind of any sane person that if the Army should need 400,000 more enlisted men within a few months after that time they would be able to get them? The Army officials are turning away men at present. According to their own statement, 261 men have been turned away in this city, and they will not accept voluntary enlistments until after October; and then the men will have to go to the draft board and apply to it, because they will not be accepted at the regular enlistment places.

In all my service in the Senate of the United States I have never seen so much misrepresentation of the facts in the newspapers of the country, in the great daily newspapers of the city of New York and of the city of Washington, as there was with reference to the conscription issue. I have never seen so many false statements carried on the front pages and in the editorials of the great newspapers of the country as there were with reference to the question of conscription. I have never seen so much propaganda—most of it false propaganda—carried over the radio by news commentators as there was with reference to the conscription issue.

According to high officials of the Army, it is impossible to provide at once the necessary cantonments to house the drafted men; and, of course, everybody who had any sense at all knew that if four or five or eight hundred thousand men were put into camps before the necessary cantonments and other buildings were provided for them, there would be untold misery and suffering and colds and deaths from pneumonia and other diseases. I am glad to see that the Army officials are taking the position they are taking, that they are not going to try to take in draftees until they have comfortable places for them to sleep in and comfortable quarters for them to eat and to live in.

I am not criticizing the Army officials because of their actions. I think they are now taking the sensible view of the matter. I merely call attention to this subject because of the hysteria which has been manifested in the newspapers. I do not think it was exactly hysteria. I think it was deliberate and premeditated falsehood and propaganda, carried on in some of the newspapers for the purpose of intimidating the Congress of the United States and for the purpose of scaring the American people.

It is extremely unfortunate for our so-called American way of life if the great newspapers and the radio of the country are to be used to whip up the emotions and the fears of the American people at a time like this. It rather distresses some of us, because if the American people can be swept off their feet by this kind of propaganda in time of peace we wonder whether or not we can maintain our democratic way of life.

CORRECTIONS IN THE SELECTIVE SYSTEM OF THE NAVY

Mr. WALSH. From the Committee on Naval Affairs, I report favorably without amendment House bill 10295, and file a report (No. 2180) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill. It is designed to clarify the intent of certain provisions in the Naval Selection Act, and to remove certain inequalities. A similar bill was enacted at this session of the Congress, and vetoed because of certain objections of the President. The objectionable features have been removed and, with that exception, this is practically the same bill as was previously passed by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be reported by its title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The bill (H. R. 10295) to amend the act of June 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 944).

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, what does the bill purport to do?

Mr. WALSH. It is similar to a bill which passed the Senate some months ago, and also passed the House of Representatives, but which was vetoed by the President. It contained 14 separate corrections or modifications of the selective system of the Navy. The President vetoed the bill on the basis of certain objections to certain provisions. Those provisions have been eliminated, and the bill contains only the provisions of the bill which was passed by the Congress which are not objectionable to the House or the Senate or the President.

Mr. AUSTIN. Was the bill considered by the committee?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; and the committee reported it unanimously. This is the second time these features of the bill have been reported.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 10295), to amend the act of June 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 944), was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMPENSATION OF MASTERS AT ARMS AND GUARDS AT NAVY YARDS AND NAVAL STATIONS

Mr. WALSH. From the Committee on Naval Affairs I report favorably, without amendment, House bill 10405, and file a report (No. 2181) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

This bill affects about 400 guards. It is recommended and approved by the Navy Department. The guards are paid $1,200 per annum. Their pay is less than that of common laborers. The turn-over has become so great, by reason of better positions being available to the guards as common laborers, that the question of maintaining proper guards has become very serious.

The bill for which I am now asking consideration provides for increasing the compensation of the guards, upon their entering the service, from $1,200 to $1,500. It will apply to about 400 guards, who are in charge of Government property, and whose duty it is to prevent sabotage and to maintain discipline and law and order at the various naval stations throughout the country. The bill is reported unanimously from the committee.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I wish to ask whether the guards are enlisted in the Navy.

Mr. WALSH. They are not. They are civilians.

Mr. AUSTIN. Are they employed just as workmen are employed?

Mr. WALSH. They are employed as policemen. They are in charge of property, and it is their duty to safeguard against fire, patrol the grounds, and to preserve law and order. Perhaps when the Senator has visited the Naval Academy he has seen men at the gates. They are the guards, who will be affected by the bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does such a guard have authority to serve process?

Mr. WALSH. In and on the naval premises. The Senator undoubtedly has in mind a proposal which is before the committee at this time to give the Secretary of the Navy authority to select certain naval officers to serve process outside naval reservations. The committee is looking with disfavor at the present time upon that recommendation, or bill, and it has made no change in the law. The employees affected by the bill I have just reported have jurisdiction only within the naval reservations.

Mr. AUSTIN. The measure is of a protective character rather than of a remedial character?

Mr. WALSH. Entirely so.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 10405) to provide for adjusting the compensation of persons employed as masters at arms and guards at navy yards and stations, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FIRE, MARINE, AND CASUALTY INSURANCE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, through the cooperation of the majority leader, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 9722, Calendar No. 2008, to provide for the regulation of the business of fire, marine, and casualty insurance, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia was, under the heading "Chapter I—Titles and Definitions", in section 1, in the table of contents, on page 2, after "Sec. 20. Foreign or alien companies", to insert "Sec. 20–A. Lloyds organizations"; on the same page, after "Sec. 39. The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, on page 3, line 4, after the word "surety", to insert "and shall not affect a plan under which any person provides pension benefits to his employees", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. Application: All fire, marine, and casualty insurance companies now or hereafter incorporated or formed in the District, or authorized to do business in the District, all brokers and all agents and other representatives of such companies, shall, to the extent hereinafter provided, be subject to this act: Provided, That this act shall not affect the business of life and title insurance, and shall not affect the right or authority of any solvent company to make contracts of fidelity or surety, and shall not affect a plan under which any person provides pension benefits to his employees.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 18, on page 24, line 22, after the word "Administrator", to insert "and in debentures issued by the Federal Housing Administrator", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 18. Investment of funds of domestic companies: A domestic company shall invest its funds only in—

(1) Bonds or other evidences of indebtedness of the United States, or of any State; or of the Dominion of Canada, or of any Province thereof.

(2) Bonds or other evidences of indebtedness of any county, city, town, village, school district, or other municipal district within the United States or the Dominion of Canada which shall be a direct obligation of the county, city, town, village, or district issuing the same.

(3) Bonds or notes secured by mortgages or deeds of trust on unencumbered real estate or perpetual leases thereon in the United States or Dominion of Canada worth not less than 50 percent more than the amount loaned thereon. Where improvements on the land constitute a part of the value on which the loan is made, the improvements shall be insured against fire for the benefit of the mortgage in an amount not less than the difference between two-thirds of the value of the land and the amount of the loan: Provided, That for the purposes of this section real estate shall not be deemed to be encumbered within the meaning of this section by reason of the existence of taxes or assessments that are not delinquent, instruments creating or reserving mineral, oil, or timber rights, rights-of-way, joint driveways, sewer rights, rights in walls, nor by reason of building restrictions or other restrictive covenants, nor when such real estate is subject to lease in whole or in part whereby rents or profits are reserved to the owner.

(4) Bonds or notes secured by mortgages insured by the Federal Housing Administrator and in debentures issued by the Federal Housing Administrator: Provided, That the restrictions in subparagraph (3) of this section in regard to the ratio of the loan to the value of the property shall not apply to such insured mortgages.

(5) Bonds or other evidences of indebtedness of the farm-loan banks authorized under the Federal Farm Loan Act or acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, and bonds or other evidences of indebtedness of national mortgage associations.

(6) Stock or bonds and other evidences of indebtedness of any solvent corporation of any State or Territory of the United States or of the District or of any Province of the Dominion of Canada, excepting stock in its own corporation: Provided, That no such investment shall be made in or loan made upon the security of any such stocks upon which dividends in cash during the period of 5 years next preceding such purchase in each fiscal year for said 5 years shall not have been paid, and upon which bonds any regular interest payment shall have been defaulted any time within 5 years prior to such purchase or loan.

(7) Loans upon the pledge of any of the securities aforesaid.

(8) A company doing business in a foreign country may invest the funds required to meet its obligations in such country and in conformity to the laws thereof in the same kind of securities in such foreign country that such company is allowed by law to invest in the United States.

(9) The bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, a corporation organized under and pursuant to the authority of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, passed by the Congress of the United States and approved June 13, 1933.

No loan or investment shall be made by any such company, unless the same shall have been authorized by the board of directors or by a committee thereof charged with the duty of supervising loans or investments.

No such company shall subscribe to or participate in any underwriting of the purchase or sale of securities or property, or enter into any transaction for such purchase or sale on account of said company, jointly with any other corporation, firm, or person, or enter into any agreement to withhold from sale any of its securities or property; but the disposition of its assets shall at all times be within the control of the company.

Nothing in this act shall prohibit a company from accepting in good faith, to protect its interest, securities, or property, other than herein referred to, in payment of or to secure debts due or to become due the company.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 20, on page 27, at the beginning of line 18, to insert "or as a Lloyd's organization", and on the same page, line 23, after the word "act", to insert certain words, so as to make the section read:

SEC. 20. Foreign or alien companies: Upon complying with the provisions of this act, a foreign or alien company organized as a stock, mutual, or reciprocal company, or as a Lloyd's organization, but not otherwise, may be authorized by certificate of authority to transact in the District the kind or kinds of business which a domestic company similarly organized may be authorized to transact under this act. Such certificate of authority shall be issued as provided under section 2, chapter II, of this act. The issuance of a certificate of authority to a Lloyd's organization shall be subject to the provisions of section 20A of this act.

SEC. 20A. Individuals and aggregations of individuals transacting an insurance business upon the plan known as Lloyd's whereby the individual underwriters become liable severally for specified proportions of the whole amount insured by a policy, heretofore organized under the laws of a State of the United States, or of a foreign government, may be authorized to transact business in the District, upon the following conditions:

1. They shall comply with and be subject to the same terms, conditions, and provisions as are imposed by this act upon foreign stock insurance companies, except as provided in the next succeeding paragraph and except that the maximum amount of insurance to be assumed by an individual underwriter upon any single risk for each kind of insurance shall not exceed 10 percent of the value of the cash and securities deposited in trust by such underwriter, plus the share of admitted assets other than underwriter's deposits of such Lloyd's belonging to such underwriter, less the share of liabilities and reserves of such Lloyd's allocable to such underwriter, but in no event shall it exceed 10 percent of the value of cash or securities deposited in trust by such underwriter;

2. They shall have and shall at all times maintain surpluses of not less than $300,000 in the aggregate and shall at all times have on deposit with an insurance department of a State of the United States, or with a bank or trust company designated by such insurance department, for the benefit of all policyholders within the United States the sum of at least $350,000 in cash or in securities such as are required for the investment of the assets of insurance companies authorized to do business in the District: Provided, That they shall not be required to establish or maintain such a deposit if they have on deposit in the hands of a bank or trust company in the United States as trustee cash deposits or securities issued by the United States worth not less than $2,000,000 in the aggregate and held in trust for the benefit of all policyholders in the United States;

3. They shall file with the Superintendent an authenticated copy of their powers of attorney and an authenticated copy of the trust agreement, or other agreement under which deposits made by underwriters are held;

4. They shall notify the Superintendent forthwith of any amendments to their powers of attorney, deposit agreement, or other documents underlying their organization, by filing with the superintendent an authenticated copy of such documents as amended;

5. They shall notify the Superintendent forthwith of any change in their names or change of attorney in fact, or change of address of their attorney in fact;

6. In the case of an alien Lloyd's, their annual statement shall embrace only their condition and transactions in the United States, and may be verified by the oath of their resident manager or other person or persons having proper authority;

7. There shall be filed with the Superintendent by the attorney in fact at the time of filing the annual statement, or more often if the Superintendent requires, a statement verified by the appropriate official of such Lloyd's, setting forth—

(a) the names and addresses of all the underwriters of such Lloyd's;

(b) a description of the cash and securities deposited in trust by each underwriter;

(c) the maximum amount of insurance assumed by each underwriter upon any single risk or each kind of insurance; and

(d) that the maximum amount of insurance assumed upon any single risk for each kind of insurance by any individual underwriter does not exceed the limitation provided for in paragraph 1 of this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, after line 10, to strike out:

SEC. 40. Taxes paid by policyholder on premiums charged by unauthorized companies: Except as provided in section 41 of this act, and in lieu of taxes avoided, there is hereby levied and assessed a tax of 50 cents on each dollar or fractional part thereof of the premium hereafter charged by any unauthorized company for the making, renewal, continuation, or reinstatement of each policy covering any person, property, or insurable interests within the District, when such policy is executed within or requires any act of performance in the District, and is issued to or for or in the name of or for the account of any person who does business in or who resides in the District: Provided, however, That marine or transportation insurance upon property while the same is in the course of exportation from or importation into the District or upon vessels or craft engaged in interstate or foreign trade or commerce shall be exempt from the tax imposed by this section: And provided further, That premiums for reinsurance and premiums for policies of life insurance shall be exempt from the tax imposed by this section. Every such person to or for or in the name of or for the account of whom any such policy shall hereafter be issued, renewed, continued, or reinstated shall withhold from each premium becoming due thereon after this act becomes effective the amount of tax hereby imposed, and pay the same to the collector of taxes for the District through the Superintendent within 10 days from the time such premiums become due. Every such person hereby required to withhold and pay such tax is hereby made liable for such tax, and in case he willfully fails to withhold or truthfully account for and pay the same as herein provided, shall pay in addition to the amount of such tax a sum equal to 5 percent thereof, and 1 percent additional for each month the tax remains unpaid, which sum shall be added to the tax and paid or collected therewith.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the clerk will renumber the sections where necessary.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] conducted the hearings on the bill, and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, on a previous occasion was about to ask that the bill be taken up for consideration when I requested that it be held up until certain amendments could be considered. Both the Senators to whom I have referred have now agreed to the amendments, as have the corporation counsel and the Superintendent of Insurance of the District of Columbia. Both Senators named have consented that I call up the bill for consideration in behalf of the committee, and, since I was the Senator at whose request action was deferred in the first instance, it would appear that this procedure is entirely appropriate.

Mr. President, I submit a proposed amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 18, beginning with line 20, it is proposed to strike out subsection (2) to and including line 13, on page 19, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

(2) Casualty: (a) Upon the health of persons, or against injury, disablement, or death of persons resulting from traveling or general accidents by land or water and against liability of the assured for injuries to employees or other persons; (b) against liability of the assured for loss or destruction of or damage to property; (c) upon the lives of domestic animals; (d) against loss of or damage to glass and its appurtenances; (e) against loss of or damage to any property resulting from the explosion of or injury to any boiler, heater, unfired pressure vessel, pipes, or containers connected therewith, any engine, turbine, compressor, pump or wheel, or any apparatus generating, transmitting, or using electricity, or any other machine or apparatus connected with or operated by any of the previously named boilers, vessels, or machines; and including the incidental power to make inspections of and to issue certificates of inspection upon any such boilers, apparatus, and machinery, whether insured or otherwise; (f) against loss by burglary or theft, or both, and against loss of or damage to moneys and securities; (g) to guarantee and indemnify merchants, traders, and those engaged in business and giving credit, from loss and damage by reason of giving and extending credit to their customers and those dealing with them; (h) against loss or damage by water or other fluid or substance to any property resulting from the breakage or leakage of sprinklers or water pipes; (i) to insure against any other casualty risk which may lawfully be the subject of insuance, and which it is not contrary to public policy to insure: Provided, That this section shall not be construed as having any effect whatever upon the right or authority of any solvent company to make contracts of fidelity or surety.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANAHER. I offer another amendment on page 20, line 22, after the words "reciprocal company", to insert a comma and the words "or of a Lloyd's organization."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANAHER. I offer an amendment, on page 37, line 2, after the word "which", to strike out "in his opinion is illegal, inequitable, or contrary to public interests", and insert a comma and "is inequitable or does not comply with the requirements of the law of the District."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANAHER. I propose an amendment on page 55, line 5, after the word "jurisdiction", to strike out the the words "through any" and to insert the words "by appeal or through any other", so as to read:

SEC. 45. Court proceedings: Any person affected by an order, ruling, proceeding, or action of the Superintendent, or any person acting in his behalf and at his instance, may contest the validity of the same in any court of competent jurisdiction by appeal or through any other appropriate proceedings. In said proceedings and appeals said Superintendent shall not be taxed with any costs, nor shall he be required to give any supersedeas bond or security for costs or damages on any appeal whatsoever. Said Superintendent shall not be liable to suit or action or for any judgment or decree for any damages, loss, or injury claimed by any person on any appeal taken by said Superintendent in any case, nor shall said Superintendent be required in any case to make any deposit for costs or pay for any service to the clerks of any court or to any marshal of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I offer several amendments involving renumbering.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed on page 44, line 23, to strike the number "42" and insert "41"; on page 47, line 2, to strike the number "41" and insert "40"; on page 49, line 23, to strike the number "42" and insert "41"; and on page 54, line 26, to strike the number "46" and insert "45".

The amendments were agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of several postmasters.

POST OFFICE NOMINATIONS REPORTED AND CONFIRMED

Mr. ELLENDER. From the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads I report favorably the nomination of Mildred P. Prescott to be postmaster at Lutcher, La., in place of M. P. Prescott. The incumbent's position expired March 18, 1940. I also report the nomination of John Richard Haydel to be postmaster at Vacherie, La., in place of S. J. Waguespack, Jr. The incumbent's position expired March 18, 1940.

I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of these two nominations of postmasters.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and, without objection, the nominations are confirmed.

Mr. ELLENDER. I ask that the President be notified of the confirmation of these nominations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the President will be notified.

ARMY NOMINATIONS REPORTED AND CONFIRMED

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report favorably certain Army nominations, and because of the large number of nominations, and the large amount of printing involved, I ask unanimous consent for their present consideration and confirmation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and, without objection, the nominations are confirmed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be at once notified of these confirmations, and that the names of the persons confirmed be not again printed, but that proper reference be made to the pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on which their nominations appear.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Daniel E. McGrath, of Texas, to be district attorney for the Canal Zone.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. CONNALLY. I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. McGrath.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the President will be notified.

CALIFORNIA DEBRIS COMMISSION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Maj. Henry C. Wolfe, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, to be a member of the California Debris Commission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

COAST GUARD OF THE UNITED STATES

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Coast Guard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations in the Coast Guard are confirmed en bloc.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters on the calendar be confirmed en bloc, except the nomination of Anna M. Brewster, to be postmaster at East Islip, N. Y., which I ask to go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters, except the one referred to by the Senator from Kentucky, are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE MARINE CORPS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Marine Corps.

Mr. WALSH. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations for promotion and appointments in the Marine Corps be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations in the Marine Corps are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 23 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, September 26, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Saviour of man we wait at the altar of prayer: As the hart panteth after the water brook, so panteth our souls after Thee, O God. Whither shall we go from Thy Spirit, or whither shall we flee from Thy presence? If we take the wings of the morning and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea, even there shall Thy hand lead us and Thy right hand shall hold us. We thank Thee, blessed Lord, that Thou art our Father and wilt hear us when we pray. In this hour of humanity's struggle for the right and the tyrant's thirst for power, we pray that the world's human desert, so songless, and treeless, may become freshened and vitalized by the hidden mysteries of the garden of the Lord. Oh river of God flow this way. Out of the depths we pray Thee. Yield Thyself to the world's dark embrace and save it from the all-engulfing abyss of terror. Stay Thou the prowess of the mighty and be in the midst of the darkness until it quivers with the light, and the forces of evil fade away. O Saviour of the human way, come and draw nearer and nearer to the brokenhearted and the homeless, and hold them close to the bosom of the All-Father. Bless our Speaker and the Congress with wisdom and clear understanding. And unto Thee be eternal praise. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

DEDICATION OF WASHINGTON AIRPORT—ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, this afternoon at 3 o'clock was to have taken place the dedication of the Washington National Airport. The Chief Executive of our Republic was to have made an address at 3 p. m., and I am sure many Members of Congress had anticipated joining in these exercises.

I have been asked by the Civil Aeronautics Authority and those in charge of the program to announce that, due to the inclement weather today, the program will be held on Saturday afternoon at the same hour.

KEEP CONGRESS ON THE JOB

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I should like to read into the RECORD an editorial from the Trenton Evening Times of Trenton, N. J., entitled "Keep Congress on the Job." I read:

KEEP CONGRESS ON THE JOB

In his acceptance speech, President Roosevelt said: "Events move so fast in other parts of the world that it has becouse my duty to remain either in the White House or at some nearby point where I can reach Washington, and even Europe and Asia, by direct telephone—where, if need be, I can be back at my desk in the space of a very few hours."

If this proximity to the scene of governmental action is necessary in the case of the President, it is equally necessary in the case of Congress. The ultimate responsibility for any American involvement in events abroad rests in the hands of the law-making body. Formal agreements with other countries, moreover, are supposed to be entered into only with the advice and consent of the Senate. For Congress to adjourn might be for it to raise added difficulties in either direction.

Under present circumstances, there is no telling how great or unprecedented the Executive assumption of extraconstitutional authority may be. Definite safeguarts against the possibility of an arbitrary exercise of power are clearly needed, and these safeguards can best be provided by alert legislative action in accordance with the established practices of the democracy.

The very fact that Henry A. Wallace, presumably with Presidential approval, has been trying to make political capital out of Adolf Hitler and the Nazi regime is enough to suggest the danger of leaving official Washington in the hands of an administration bent upon furthering the third-term idea. Congress is definitely needed in order that at least a semblance of national balance shall be maintained.

American foreign policy, despite any conceivable stretch of the Constitution, cannot be construed as the responsibility of a single person or as a fit object of partisan monopoly. Its formulation is, especially in times like these, a broad public obligation calling for collective reasoning and wisdom of the type that can best be secured through the deliberative processes of free government. Congress should remain on the job to make certain that all unforeseen emergencies shall be handled in the democratic way.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[Mr. SHANNON addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

THE ADJOURNMENT OF CONGRESS

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I have every sympathy for these statesmen who are so baptized in the doctrine of their labors that they cannot think about leaving, but I am getting a little tired of these brethren getting up every day and saying, "Now, I am going to vote, and work, and talk so they can hear me back home against postponement of our activities and against adjournment" but who privately say to those who favor adjournment, "I hope the heck you outvote us."

HON. RENÉ L. DE ROUEN

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, for 10 years the gentleman from Louisiana, RENÉ L. DEROUEN, has served as chairman of the Public Lands Committee. I take this opportunity to pay tribute to his splendid personal qualities and the brilliant public record that he has made as chairman of this committee and as a Member of this body.

Although he has no public lands in his own State of Louisiana, he has become an authority on matters pertaining to the public domain. His work on the committee and in the House has always been characterized by fairness, impartiality, and a detailed and intelligent knowledge of the subject involved. The members of the Public Lands Committee who have worked the longest with him and know him best are the most appreciative of his splendid and outstanding qualities, but all Members who have served on this committee hold him in the highest esteem. We all regret that he has resigned from the chairmanship of this committee, and that he is voluntarily leaving his post of duty here in Congress. The entire membership of this legislative body will greatly miss him.

On behalf of the members of the Public Lands Committee, I want to extend to him our very best wishes for his health and happiness in the future and to assure him that his very excellent and outstanding work in this body is greatly appreciated by all Members. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I want to add a few words to what the distinguished gentleman from Utah has just said with reference to our beloved colleague, the capable, earnest, courteous chairman of the Public Lands Committee of the House, Dr. DEROUEN. It has been my honor and privilege to serve upon his committee since I have been a Member of Congress. I have never met any man in public or private life who is more considerate, more courteous, or more sincere in his treatment of his fellowmen and his fellow members of the committee than our distinguished chairman, and I join with my friend from Utah in saying I deeply regret the decision of the gentleman from Louisiana to retire as a Member of the House. He has served long, ably, and faithfully in the House and on the Committee on the Public Lands. Our retiring chairman has shown unusual knowledge of affairs in connection with public lands and laws affecting them.

Let me add, however, that we shall have a very worthy successor as chairman of this committee in the person of the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ROBINSON]. [Applause.]

Let me add also that the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ROBINSON] has likewise shown a thorough knowledge with the problems of the West, and the public lands of this country. I doubt if there is a Member of the House that would be more peculiarly fitted for the position of chairman of this committee, which is one of the most important committees of the House. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech made by J. Edgar Hoover before the National Convention of the American Legion, in Boston, Mass.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. YOUNGDAHL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from the Minneapolis Tribune.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, I concur in everything that has been said in reference to the distinguished gentleman from Louisiana, Dr. DEROUEN, who has been chairman of the Public Lands Committee for a great many years. He is not a westerner. The Public Lands Committee is primarily concerned with problems that arise in the West. The many millions of acres of land in this great Nation, in the national forests, in the national parks, in the public domain, in the Indian reservations, the game refuges, and so forth, are all under the jurisdiction of this important committee. The gentleman from Louisiana, Dr. DEROUEN, has shown himself to be a gentleman of unusual courtesy, with a rare understanding of the difficult matters involved in handling of the work on the Public Lands Committee. He is a man who has given sympathetic and serious consideration to our problems in the West, and we western Members regret, indeed, his going. We know that in his voluntary retirement from this position and retirement from membership in this great body, the West, his district, and the Nation loses the service of a great and good man. We are delighted, however, and feel fortunate to know that the very able and fair-minded gentleman from Utah, WILL ROBINSON, will be chairman of this important committee that is of such great significance to the Nation and particularly to the West.

Under the able leadership of the gentleman from Utah, WILL ROBINSON, the duties and responsibilities of this committee will be well cared for, and there is no man in this House better qualified to follow the distinguished gentleman from Louisiana than is the able Member from Utah [Mr. ROBINSON]. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial appearing in the Boston Sunday Post entitled "TINKHAM on the Doctrine."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, it has been my pleasure and privilege to serve as a member of the Committee on Public Lands, and I do not want to let the day go by without adding my word of tribute to the man who has been chairman all the time I have been a member of that committee, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DEROUEN]. We are going to miss him very much. His consideration, his thoughtful guidance of the work of that committee, and his interest in the problems that are peculiar to other sections of the country beside his own have, in my judgment, marked him as truly statesmanlike, and I shall miss him very much.

I would like to second what the gentleman from Montana said, however, that we may look forward to a most efficient chairman, and one who I am sure will carry on the work in a worthy fashion. I refer to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ROBINSON].

CONSIDERATION OF CERTAIN BILLS NEXT MONDAY

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next it may be in order to consider bills on the Consent Calendar as well as individual bills on the Private Calendar, and that it shall also be in order for the Speaker to recognize Members to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN]?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand the gentleman's request is just to have the two calendars called, not to consider omnibus bills?

Mr. WARREN. Not omnibus bills.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Can the gentleman tell us what bills may be called up under suspension?

Mr. WARREN. No; I have no knowledge of that. That will be indicated by the Speaker in due time.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. There will not be any important legislation called up? I am asking this for the benefit of Members who might like to be here if that happens. What bills will be called up?

Mr. WARREN. I cannot answer that question. The Speaker will have to indicate that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair may say the only commitment the Chair has made is with reference to a bill that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] has reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce (S. 3920) to amend the Railway Employment Insurance Act.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. In all probability that will be the only one?

The SPEAKER. That is the only one the Chair has in contemplation at this time.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that we have a bill in the Veterans' Committee on which we will probably ask for a suspension. The members on his side, members of that committee, are agreeable to it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What I would like to know is if any bill about which there is great controversy will be called up. If that is contemplated, the membership should have an opportunity to know that it is coming up.

Mr. RANKIN. There will not be any controversy about this veterans' bill.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from North Carolina whether that is ordinarily suspension day?

Mr. WARREN. No; it is not. Suspension days, are the first and third Mondays in the month.

Mr. FISH. I do not intend to object. However, this railroad bill is quite important, and I think the Members ought to be notified so they may have the opportunity to be here. If there is any other legislation coming up, I think the Members ought to be notified.

Mr. WARREN. The Speaker has just stated the only bill he now has in mind, and this is Wednesday. That certainly should be sufficient time.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I did not hear the request that the gentleman made.

Mr. WARREN. The request was for unanimous consent to consider bills on the Consent Calendar and individual bills on the Private Calendar, and also that permission be granted to the Speaker to recognize Members to suspend the rules for that day only.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That is for next Monday?

Mr. WARREN. Next Monday.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. We are not to imply that the gentleman is ready to make the usual request which precedes adjournment about 4 or 5 days with reference to suspensions?

Mr. WARREN. No; I am not.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I have two unanimous-consent requests. The first is to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article called South of the Border, and the other is to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter to the gentleman from Texas, Hon. MARTIN DIES, from Mrs. James Cunningham Gray, of Boston, with an affidavit.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

[Mr. PIERCE addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

[Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of calling to the attention of this House the fact that some Member or person with access to our documents undoubtedly not fully realizing the responsibility of his act, is violating the rules of this House by giving to the C. I. O. News names of men who have withdrawn their names from the petition on the mines safety bill. I believe it was on April 12, 1934, that Speaker Rainey ruled on this. I am quite sure that when the person who is doing this realizes that he is violating the rules of this House and the loyalty of the Members of this House he will be rather careful in the future not to indulge in any such indiscretion. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

ELLIE B. CRAWFORD

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Accounts, I submit a privileged resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 611

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to Ellie B. Crawford, widow of James Terrell Crawford, late an employee of the House, an amount equal to 6 months' salary compensation, and an additional amount, not to exceed $250, to defray funeral expenses of the said James Terrell Crawford.

The resolution was agreed to.

RENÉ L. DE ROUEN

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I, too, want to pay my respects to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DEROUEN], who is chairman of the Public Lands Committee. It has been several years since I have served with him on that committee. May I say that I found him to be one of the most honest, conscientious, and hard-working Members of Congress, a man who always tried to see that the right thing was accomplished in his committee. He gave everybody attention and he tried to do the thing that was right. It is too bad that men like the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DEROUEN], as well as the gentleman from Louisiana, PAUL MALONEY, are not returning to the House of Representatives. When anybody can get along with me in a committee he is doing a pretty good job. [Laughter and applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and include therein an editorial from the Chicago Tribune upon the Illinois Waterway.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I objected to the consideration of a private bill which would have made an exception in the Army law forbidding enlistment of felons, for the benefit of one man, who had served his sentence for a crime and wanted to reenlist in the Army. I have no objection to th's particular case on its merits. My purpose was this: It was conceded in the brief debate that a change in the general law is needed. I believe it is most important when this and similar questions are coming up in connection not only with enlistment but with conscription we should not start an era of logrolling on private bills to take care of special cases but should promptly put through any necessary general changes in the law needed to give the Army an opportunity to take care of inequalities and injustices in the administration of Army enlistment.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. I call the attention of the gentleman to the headline in this morning's paper, Rush of Volunteers Expected to Cut Down the Draft Call.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I have in my office records of instances where volunteers are being refused by the Army. We should take care of any such abuses by proper general laws, not by private bills.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein three bills I have recently introduced.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on this coming Friday after the disposition of the regular business of the day, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to insert an article by Dr. Paul J. Raver, of the Bonneville Administration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

[Mr. RANKIN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, on completion of today's legislative business, I should like to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. May the Chair state that the House will probably desire to adjourn about 3:30 this afternoon.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a table from the Department of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SASSCER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include in the Appendix of the RECORD an editorial with reference to the United States Naval Academy appearing in the Annapolis Evening Capital.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SCHAFER or Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain extracts from Moody's Utilities and a few brief newspaper articles.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] and the country to the fact that Mr. Leo T. Crowley, formerly of Wisconsin, a big-shot main cog of the New Deal administration, who is chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, has been serving in a dual capacity for many months. While on the Federal Government pay roll as chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, this New Deal right-hand man of President Roosevelt has been president of the Standard Gas & Electric Co., one of the largest utility holding companies in the country, which is pyramided on another great utility holding company, the Standard Power & Light Corporation. According to pages 1073 and 1079 of Moody's 1939 Manual of Public Utility Investments, the Standard Gas & Electric Holding Co. had assets of $766,845,601 on December 31, 1938, and the Standard Power & Light Holding Co. had assets of $138,041,805 on December 31, 1938.

Mr. Speaker, the Evening Star, Washington, D. C., on August 27, 1940, carried the following Associated Press article entitled "Crowley Is Elected Board Chairman of Standard Gas":

CROWLEY IS ELECTED BOARD CHAIRMAN OF STANDARD GAS—F. D. I. C. HEAD EXPECTED TO TAKE NEW DUTIES AFTER NOVEMBER

NEW YORK, August 27.—Leo T. Crowley, head of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, has become president as well as chairman of the Standard Gas & Electric Co., holding unit of a big public-utility system.

As president, Crowley replaced Bernard W. Lynch, who has been with the Standard Gas system more than 30 years and became president in 1936.

The shift, effective August 15, was disclosed in a letter to Standard Gas & Electric security holders offering the top company's debentures in exchange for common stock of the San Diego Consolidated Gas & Electric Co., part of a plan for simplifying the corporate set-up.

Lynch was made chairman of the finance committee of the Philadelphia Co., largest subsidiary in the Standard Gas system, and remains as director of other units, including San Diego Consolidated Gas & Electric.

Crowley became chairman of the holding company last December, succeeding Victor Emanuel, who took the chairmanship of the finance committee.

Crowley retained his government post as chairman of the F. D. I. C., but is expected to devote all his attention to the utility system after the November elections.

Mr. Speaker, may I repeat one paragraph of this Associated Press article which states "Crowley became chairman of the holding company last December, succeeding Victor Emanuel, who took the chairmanship of the finance committee." This reveals that for more than 9 months Mr. Leo T. Crowley, while on the Federal Government pay roll as Chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and a right-hand man of President Roosevelt, has been chairman of one of the greatest utility holding companies in the United States, which has control of so many electric utilities that it takes all of pages 1073 to 1148, inclusive, of the 1939 Moody's Manual of Public Utility Investments to list them. Page 1076 of this 1939 Moody's Manual reveals that Leo T. Crowley's Standard Gas & Electric Holding Co. controls 69 private hydroelectric stations and 76 private steam electric stations, which had an output of 5,417,955,298 kilowatt-hours of electricity during the year ending December 31, 1938. This is not so bad for a New Deal utility tycoon who holds one of the most important positions on the Federal Government pay roll.

Mr. Speaker, on August 24, 1940, the Milwaukee Journal carried an Associated Press article entitled "President Slaps Utility Bosses." Under permission granted by the House, I incorporate this article in the RECORD at this point, as follows:

PRESIDENT SLAPS UTILITY BOSSES—FEW AT TOP HELD REINS UNTIL HOLDING FIRM ACT OF 1935, HE SAYS

[From the Milwaukee Journal of August 24, 1940]

WASHINGTON, D. C.—President Roosevelt described utility-holding companies Friday as "corporate monstrosities" which once were permitted to pyramid stockholdings until "a few men at the top with only a microscopic investment of their own" were in control.

Mr. Roosevelt made the assertion when he signed a bill authorizing the securities commission to regulate investment trusts and investment bankers.

Discussing what he called the administration's "vigorous program to protect the investor," he said he had great hopes that the new law would "enable the investment trust industry to fulfill its basic purpose as a vehicle to diversify the small investors' risk and to provide a valuable source of equity capital for deserving small and new business enterprises."

The Chief Executive cited the Utility Holding Company Act of 1935 as an example of the measures by which, he said, "we are cleaning house, putting our financial machinery in good order."

Mr. Speaker, when we examine the record of our ex-international banker New Deal President, Mr. Roosevelt, we find with reference to "driving the money changers and utility holding company tycoons from the temple of our Government," like Isaac of old, "the voice is Jacob's voice, but the hands are the hands of Esau." The record reveals that President Roosevelt has placed the international money changers and utility holding company tycoons in the pulpit of the temple of our Federal Government.

Mr. Speaker, I have brought these facts about our New Deal utility holding company tycoon Mr. Leo T. Crowley to the attention of the House and the country today in order that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], who always has much to say about private electric utilities and electric utility holding companies, might have something to work on. Mr. Leo T. Crowley, one of President Roosevelt's right-hand men, should be forced to resign immediately as chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation as "no man can serve two masters." [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DIMOND asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

EXEMPTIONS FROM THE DRAFT

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I took this time in order to ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs a question which has come up about the draft.

I had a case come up yesterday regarding a young man who had served 4 years in the United States Navy and was discharged on January 20, 1940. The question which came up was this: Is this young man exempt from the draft? I called up General Ulio's office, and he referred me to Colonel Rich. Colonel Rich contacted the draft board. I was informed that while the law exempted from the draft a person who had served an enlistment in the Army, through an oversight a man who had served one or more enlistments in the Marine Corps or in the United States Navy was not exempt. Is that correct?

Mr. ANDREWS. Will the gentleman yield? I can answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. ENGEL. Yes; I yield.

Mr. ANDREWS. The interpretation which the gentleman received from the War Department was quite correct. The reason the exemption is not in the bill is because it was a specific recommendation from the Navy Department for their own Department and the Marine Corps. I personally believe that such exemption should be provided, and I believe that legislation to that effect should be brought in by the Naval Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives.

Mr. ENGEL. Then these men who have served one or more enlistments in the Marine Corps or the Navy are not exempt from the draft, and men who have served similar enlistments in the Army are exempt. Is that correct?

Mr. ANDREWS. The gentleman is correct.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include an excerpt from a letter written by George Washington to Lafayette.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein a release from the Department of Justice and an excerpt from a special committee, on the Bill of Rights, of the American Bar Association.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BANDMASTER IN THE REGULAR ARMY

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House, I present a privileged report on the bill (H. R. 3840) to amend the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provisions for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the report be read in lieu of the bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. I think we ought to have a quorum here for this matter, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, may I propound a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman withhold the point of order for the time being?

Mr. WARREN. I do.

Mr. FISH. I would like to inquire how the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] offers this legislation under any special preference at this time. I did not quite understand. The gentleman offered a bill——

The SPEAKER. The veto message was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. The Committee on Military Affairs has made a report and the report is of the highest privilege. It is a Presidential veto.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I renew my point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina makes the point of order that a quorum is not present. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 220]

Allen, Pa.	DeRouen	Johnson, Ind.	Rockefeller
Anderson, Calif.	Dies	Jones, Tex.	Rodgers, Pa.

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 337 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

BANDMASTERS IN THE UNITED STATES ARMY

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred H. R. 3840, to amend the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended, and for other purposes, having considered the same, submit the following report thereon, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill provides that for each United States Army and National Guard band there shall be a commissioned officer, to be known as the bandmaster, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who would take the place of the present warrant officer band leader. Bandmasters with less than 5 years' service were to rank with second lieutenants, and bandmasters with service of 5 years or more to rank with first lieutenants. The bandmasters to be appointed would be selected from band leaders in the service who were found physically qualified, or from noncommissioned officers and other enlisted musicians with at least 1 year of service in the Regular Army or National Guard. The bill also provides that band leaders who fail to pass the physical examination because of physical disability incident to the service shall be placed upon the Army retired list with 75 percent of the pay to which they would have been entitled if they had been appointed bandmaster. Bandmasters were to be entitled to the same benefit with respect to pay and allowances and retirement as apply in the case of commissioned officers in the Army of equivalent rank.

Provision was also made for reducing the number of warrant officers authorized by law by the number of band leaders who receive commissions as bandmasters and for increasing the number of commissioned officers of the Army to the extent necessary to give effect to the provisions of this bill. The bill also provides with respect to the rank of bandmaster that the chief bandmaster shall have the rank of captain and shall advise the Secretary of War instead of The Adjutant General with respect to musical organizations in the Regular Army, and also provides that bandmasters may be appointed from officers in the National Guard or in the Officers' Reserve Corps, as well as from warrant officer band leaders and noncommissioned officers and enlisted men with at least a year's service in a Regular Army band.

This bill has the endorsement of such great musicians as the late John Philip Sousa, Walter Damrosch, Frank Damrosch, Edwin Franko Goldman, Herbert F. Clark, and Frank Simmons. Also other great musicians have communicated their views in support of this bill to various Members of Congress.

From the testimony of the witness appearing in behalf of the War Department, it was stated that the additional cost of this legislation would be approximately $79,770.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House, on reconsideration, agree to pass the bill, the objection of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SMITH] 10 minutes' time.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill which would change the status of the leaders of Army bands from that of warrant officers to commissioned officers. It would also provide that one of the band leaders be appointed with the rank of captain to advise the War Department on matters pertaining to the administration of the Army bands.

The bill is familiar to most of the Members. It was passed in this Congress by unanimous consent. It has been up a good many times since the World War and has passed the House on four different occasions. During the World War the condition of the bands was not satisfactory, and General Pershing appointed a committee to go over the situation as to the bands and to make recommendation for their proper handling and administration. This committee met with men from other armies, went over the whole situation, and made a series of recommendations, some of which are carried out in this bill. Under those recommendations and at that time the leaders of the bands in the Army were commissioned, but in the reorganization of the Army after the war the band leaders were dropped back to the rank of warrant officers.

The rank of warrant officer is not a commissioned rank. Warrant officers are largely men doing clerical work in the Army—pay clerks, and men of that type. The title of a warrant officer is "Mister." He is really neither an enlisted man nor a commissioned officer, he is in a position somewhere between. It is far from a satisfactory status. Band leaders are in charge of groups of from 28 to 55 men. They are charged with the musical instruction and handling of the band and the administration of the band. They are placed under a service company or battery for the purpose of command.

The recommendations of the Pershing committee were followed out and were carried on during the war, but, as I say, the bandmasters were dropped back to warrant officers in the reorganization of the Army. Since that time the Committee on Military Affairs of the House has held hearings many times, has gone into this subject exhaustively. It is not a partisan matter. I believe the first bill on the subject was introduced by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. REECE]. Bills on this subject have been reported favorably time after time from the Committee on Military Affairs, and we have attempted to reach the objective in the best possible manner in this legislation. We provide that band leaders who have had 5 years' service or more in that capacity shall be first lieutenants and others shall be second lieutenants. It would grant an opportunity for the men who enlist in the band service at some time to reach a commissioned rank. This is about the only branch of the service where it is not possible for a man entering the service finally to reach a commission. It seems that this is a sensible thing to do, especially now, a time when more than ever we need a strengthening of the morale of the Army and of the men who are being brought into the Army.

In this connection I may state that at this time band leaders of the National Guard are finding it necessary to resign because they cannot maintain their dependents on the pay of a warrant officer. They deserve commissioned status. Their task is one of great importance. The administration of the bands would be improved by having men of commissioned status in charge of the bands, and the morale of the enlisted personnel would be improved by having the opportunity for promotion held out to the men when they enlist.

It would be possible to get many of them from college if we had this opportunity to offer them. The evidence before the committee showed that practically every nation considers the task of the leaders of its bands of sufficient importance that they are granted commissioned status. We have by special legislation picked out the leaders of some of our bands, including two of the Army bands, the one in Washington and the West Point band, and have given them commissioned status as captains.

I submit that the evidence that we have had over the years before the committees has shown conclusively that we should return to the situation we had during the war for the better administration of the bands of the Army, and that this bill should be passed, the veto of the President notwithstanding.

Mr. COLLINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLLINS. It is my understanding that the War Department has been objecting to the passage of this bill throughout the years because it is conceivable that in warfare a band leader might be in charge of troops if higher-ranking officers are killed. This would cause a situation that would be bad, for the soldiers so officered would be without a qualified officer.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. No more as an officer than he would be as a warrant officer. I may say further the War Department has never raised that question.

Mr. COLLINS. There are fighting officers, even down to second lieutenants, who could still be in command. If a band leader, however, was a captain and those officers with higher rank were killed, the band leader would then be in command, even though combat officers were with the company.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. The same argument would apply to a veterinarian or to a nurse or to all commissions, because the professional workers are of such a type that they deserve commissions for carrying it on.

Mr. COLLINS. A veterinarian and a nurse would not be on the field of battle whereas band officers would be with troops as stretcher bearers.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. A veterinarian would be just as likely to be on the field of battle as a band leader.

Mr. EDMISTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. EDMISTON. In answer to the gentleman's inquiry, in time of war the only thing the band is used for is as stretcher bearers.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. In actual combat, yes. The bands are needed for morale purposes in the camps and in the training areas.

Mr. EDMISTON. On the field of battle they act as stretcher bearers only.

Mr. COLLINS. If they are stretcher bearers the probability would be greater that they would actually be in command of troops if the officers above them were killed off.

Mr. PATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. PATRICK. Not knowing anything about this bill, I called the War Department and asked them if they were objecting to this. They said they were and I asked them why they objected. They said that because in the natural order of things, in the case of combat or destruction of those who were at the head, it would throw men in charge of troops or activities who were not qualified at all, and they would be exposed to duties they knew nothing about. That is the reason for their opposition to the measure.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. The War Department has never brought any such argument to the attention of the committee and I do not believe that under this bill any such situation could arise.

Mr. HORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. HORTON. I recall that General Wood was once a doctor. I further recall he turned out to be a crack fighting man. The same thing might hold good for a band leader.

Mr. EATON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. EATON. Does the gentleman think it would reduce the value of a band leader if he was a good fighting man?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I do not.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I knew nothing about this measure until I secured the report of the committee this morning and read it over carefully. I am wondering how many Members of the House have secured this report and carefully studied the recommendations of the War Department?

This is one of those bills, like many others, that frequently gets by the House through unanimous consent. I shall ask you to bear with me for just a minute so that I may give you some of the objections that have been raised to this measure. The War Department has consistently recommended against legislation of this nature, and likewise objects to the present bill.

Army band leaders have never had control of bands. Even during the period of the World War, when they held commissions, they had no administrative or disciplinary control over their bands. It has been held by the War Department that band leaders have had little time to devote to the acquiring of military knowledge necessary to the exercise of administrative control over an organization. The requirements necessary for service as a band leader are those of a musician, and it has never been considered to the advantage of a musician, being an artist, to divert his talent to routine duties. Should band leaders be given command and administrative duties in addition to the musical instruction of the band, it would detract from, rather than add to, their efficiency as band leaders.

Advocates of legislation to commission band leaders have claimed that many of them do exercise command over their bands and that all should be given such command, and comparison has been made of the command duties of band leaders with those of other professions commissioned in the Army. The commissioned officers of the professions referred to are, by the very nature of their duties, required to exercise command and administrative functions, which are not essential in the efficient functioning of a band. Moreover, the commissioned officers of those professions submit to more stringent examination requirements for initial appointments. Their duties after appointment steadily increase in scope with the ever-broadening field of responsibilities as they advance in rank. One of the factors upon which commissioned rank is predicated is that the field of activity in which the holder of the commission functions is of sufficient scope and variation to demand increasing experience to fit him for higher demands of that field. There is no field of activity for the band leader beyond leading a band, and it is a circumscribed and definite duty, lacking the varied assignments of growing importance given to commissioned personnel both of the line and staff of the Army.

What do we seek to do by this bill? As the President has very properly stated in his veto message, we seek to single out a special group of warrant officers for preferential treatment. We all know that there are various grades of warrant officers in the Army, some of them possessed of the highest technical skill, yet we pass over all other types of warrant officers and single out band leaders and bandmasters only and give them a preferential treatment with a commission in the Regular Army up to captain.

Mr. Speaker, this bill actually provides that any man who has been a bandmaster for less than 5 years—and there are 18 of them of the 74 now in the service who have had less than 5 years' service—are to be commissioned as second lieutenants in the Army. Is that just? Is that fair to the other classes of similar rank in the Army?

I know we all have a sentiment for bands. We all like martial music. They render a very distinct service and have a distinct place in the Army.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Does the gentleman know of a time in the history of this country when the value of music in the Army, to which the gentleman has just referred, is more important than right now, when we are taking in all these youngsters from all over the country and schoolboys from the colleges, who have been accustomed to music?

Mr. WARREN. I doubt if there is anybody in the House who is any stronger for bands than I am. Just 2 years ago I had the ambition of a lifetime gratified when at a political meeting I rode for the first time in my life behind a brass band. We know they are essential, but what I am protesting is that we pick out one class of men and commission them as officers in the United States Army, ignoring classes that are far more worthy. The President is absolutely right, and we should sustain him. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT].

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to support this bill, because I feel that it is one that will remove a discrimination to which the band leaders of the Army are now victims.

The President's veto message is based on these two arguments: First, responsibility; and second, to create the status of commissioned band leaders would be a novelty in the Army.

As to the question of responsibility, a band leader has responsibility beyond merely directing his musical organization. He is responsible for the conduct, clothing, equipment, and musical instruments, whether he is in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps. The Navy has long recognized that responsibility by commissioning their band leaders; and the same recognition is accorded band leaders in the Marine Corps. In the Army the band leader, despite his great responsibility, is rated simply as a warrant officer, thus the discrimination is very apparent. The war plans of the Army call for a commissioned officer to lead a band. Possibly the War Department recognizes the fact that during a war each member of the band will carry sidearms. While the duty of a bandsman in time of war is to act as a stretcher bearer, yet he may find himself in a position where he will have to go into action, at which time he will look to his commanding officer, now his bandmaster, for leadership.

This bill has been thoroughly analyzed and has the support of many military figures outside the War Department. Maj. Gen. C. C. Hammond, former Chief of the Militia Bureau, has endorsed this bill. Maj. Gen. M. B. Payne, who commands the Connecticut National Guard, has endorsed this bill. Major General Reckord, who heads the National Guard Association, has endorsed this bill. Our colleague the gentleman from Tennessee, CARROLL REECE, the holder of a Distinguished Service Cross, has endorsed this bill. Major General Tinley, of Iowa, who commands the National Guard in that State, has endorsed this bill, as have Maj. Gen. Edward Martin, who commands the National Guard of the State of Pennsylvania; Brigadier General Henninger, of the State of Nebraska, Major General Light, of Ohio; and many other prominent military figures of the country. The bill, too, has been endorsed by the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, and has likewise been endorsed by the Regular Veterans' Association—the men who speak for the rank and file of the Military Establishment of our country. At this point I want to read six points stating the reason why the Regular Veterans' Association believe this bill should become a law:

1. At present bandmasters are warrant officers, a rank that is an aftermath of the World War, created to take care of field clerks, whose positions are not comparable in any way to those of bandmasters.

2. Other warrant officers serve as individuals under command of commissioned officers who are authorities on the work to which they are assigned, whereas bandmasters necessarily have charge of their musical units and are responsible for the effectiveness of these units. Yet these bandmasters lack the prestige of a commanding officer.

3. From the viewpoint of ability and technical training, the bandmaster should not be classed with clerks and other warrant officers, granting the merits of the latter. But he should be ranked with similarly trained professional persons: nurses, veterinarians, doctors, dentists, and chaplains—all of whom now hold commissioned rank in the Army.

4. The bandmaster's responsibility can be measured by the thousands of dollars' worth of equipment of which he has charge, by the military effectiveness of his unit, by the way he builds up and maintains morale of men in war and peace.

5. Because music is one of the most valuable phases of our American cultural life and one most appealing not only to those in service but also to civilians, professional leaders of merit should be given command of their bands and pay commensurate with their position.

6. The Army has given commissioned rank to dentists, doctors, nurses, and chaplains. The reason? It could not get competent specialists in these professions to accept less. The same holds true with respect to our Army bands. They are, as a rule, terrible. Capable musicians and leaders will not remain in the Army under present circumstances. We need commissioned rank for Army bandmasters because we need better music.

Therefore, Members of the House, this is an important piece of legislation to the Army of the United States. We all agree that martial music is a component part of our military life and that competent bandmasters are likewise necessary.

Surely Congress is not content to tell the Army and National Guard bandmasters that they are not worthy of a commission, while, on the other hand, their brother bandmasters in the Navy and the Marine Corps are so honored. To do so is rank discrimination and an insult to the many fine musicians who are now merely warrant officers, yet referred to simply as Army bandmasters. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, there is one thing that I believe we have never seen; at least I have never seen it, and that is, a brass band going down the street and a small boy going in the opposite direction. I assure you that not only as a small boy was I attracted by a band, but I felt much as one of my colleagues preceding me felt when first riding behind a brass band.

Martial music appeals to all of us, small boys, gray-haired boys, men, and women, all in civilian or in military life. I cannot conceive of anyone being so dull as to be unstirred by martial music. I cannot think how the martial strains of Dixie would not cause an army to win a battle even against overwhelming odds.

To get to the point, bandmasters are said not to exercise the function of command. Well, if a bandmaster does not command, who does? If a bandmaster of a good band is not obeyed, who is? An efficient director of any good musical organization reaches the very acme of perfection in commanding and getting the obedience of his organization.

I have been a school teacher, and I want to tell you gentlemen, if you have not taught school you may not appreciate this, but most of you have taught school, and you know that one of the essential characteristics of a good school teacher is the power of discipline or generalship, and it is needed in a superlative degree in a bandmaster's position.

Talk about command: It takes the same type, if not the same degree, of ability to be able to yield a wand, exercise authority of control, and bring into a harmonious unit of machinelike action 28 or 55 musicians, as bandmasters are expected to do, as it does to be able to command an army on the field of battle. It requires generalship, it requires training, and it requires a knowledge of martial music. It requires psychology, personality, and all that goes with successful leadership. All this must be had by our successful bandmasters, and we cannot expect to obtain such qualities in bandmasters if we keep them in a degraded or subordinate position. As it is now, they are neither fish nor fowl, with no commissioned status, merely addressed as mister and of the same rank as clerk.

There is a social functon in the Army that is continuous and widespread. The bandmaster must have his musicians ready not only to pep up the force and maintain morale in the camps but perform on many civic and social occasions as well, and he must be a credit to the Army. He cannot very well be that in the subordinate position which he now holds.

It is with great regret that I must bring myself to vote to override a veto. However, I feel in this case it is justice to our bandmasters and in the interest of efficiency to give them officer status. In this critical time especially, when young men are going to be gathered, not only in the National Guard but additional thousands of men from every walk of life, we need just exactly that inspirational touch which good martial music can give, I tell you that the training of a soldier is not only of head work and hand work but it is a training of the heart and the emotions of the soul. Such is a part of the training which is exclusively in the hands of the bandmasters, and I hope they are given recognition accordingly. This bill should be carried over the veto. [Applause.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BENDER. I observe one of our Members has been elevated to the Press Gallery and is now writing his own publicity.

Mr. MAY. That, Mr. Speaker, evidently is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. REECE].

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it was my privilege to have sponsored a bill upon this subject several years ago, and while the bill which I introduced embodied many features that the present bill contains, the present bill is a refined product of the efforts which we made at that time and many of the objections which were raised by the War Department to the bill in the earlier years have been removed.

I think it is important to keep in mind that during the World War the band leaders were commissioned. They were commissioned for one reason, and that was because General Pershing decided it was in the interest of the service to commission them, and it was General Pershing's thought that they should retain their commissions after the war.

If you will bear with me, I would like to read a quotation from a report made by General Pershing:

> The band leader should be a commissioned officer with the grade of second lieutenant. After the completion of each period of 9 years' commissioned service, he should be promoted to the next higher grade until he reaches the grade of captain, which will be the highest grade he can attain unless he be chosen as a director of the musical institute. The importance of having the band leader commissioned cannot be too strongly urged. It is an item that will tend to raise the character of our bands from their present loose state to one that corresponds to that of the French bands.
> The band leader should be in complete charge of his band as regards instruction and discipline.

General Pershing had a study made of this whole problem and that was the conclusion which he afterward reached.

> It was General Pershing's desire that the band leader remain a commissioned officer, and he was deeply disappointed when he learned that commissioned status for them had been withdrawn after the wartime Army was demobilized.

Almost every important band leader in the United States at one time or another has endorsed this proposition, and from my study of the subject as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs in former years and in my association as a member of the Army, I can see no sound reason which can be raised against the commissioning of the band leaders.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Is it not true that the band boys are trained to fight if necessary?

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. They receive the fundamentals of military training, and in time of action are equipped with small arms.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. And they are required to fight if conditions require it.

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. And when they are at the front they are ready to fight whenever the occasion requires.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. If they furnish the music and are qualified to fight, why should they not have an opportunity to be promoted to an officer's rank?

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. I see no reason why they should not be.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Is it not true that many a young man goes into the Army and serves in the Infantry or in some other department of the Army before he is finally admitted to the band?

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. Very frequently that is the case. I hope the veto will be overridden. [Applause.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I had the great privilege of serving in France with the gentleman who has just preceded me, my colleague and buddy of the World War, Mr. REECE of Tennessee. Incidentally, he had the great privilege of being one of the few fighting men from below the Mason and Dixon's line to serve with New England's Twenty-sixth Division, the "damned Yankees." He has an enviable wartime service record with that division and was respected and loved by every man who served in it.

He knows, as I do, from our own personal experience, the conditions that prevailed as the result of the treatment of the bands in the Twenty-sixth Division, due to the lack of commissioned leadership.

In my own particular regiment the leader of the One Hundred and First Infantry Band was a renowned musician named L'Africain, who had been for 17 years with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a man of unusual musical ability and attainments. It was to the everlasting shame of the system prevailing then and now still in force that L'Africain, with his unusual musical background and talent, was booted about by every young whippersnapper of a second lieutenant who came out of Plattsburg and found himself in charge of that band. In most cases he was booted about by a man who had absolutely no knowledge of music and therefore little if any understanding of it or interest in it.

The musical organization was always a secondary consideration to any other duty which that young lieutenant might be called upon to perform. To his credit L'Africain carried a pack on his back without complaint the same as any other man and regardless of the obstacles set in his path by being forced to be subservient completely to a commanding officer with no knowledge of music, he made a real band out of the musicians assigned him. It was not unusual at all for the band of the One Hundred and First Infantry, regardless of any statements that may have been made here today, to drop those stretchers they were carrying, pick up a rifle, and get into the thick of it, as I have seen myself at Chateau-Thierry, in the Argonne, and at St. Mihiel. I think all of us have been too prone to minimize the value of music insofar as the morale of the troops is concerned. The War Department has seen fit to see to it that chaplains, without any responsibility of commanding troops, have been commissioned. Dentists and doctors of all sorts and degrees and veteranians have received commissions, for the reason that the War Department could not get the right kind of men to carry out those duties if they placed them in the enlisted category. By the same token, you cannot expect real professional band leaders to enter the service as enlisted men, and the Army will continue to have poor musical organizations until you place the band leaders under commission where their worth will be recognized and they will be able to perform their duties with some measure of real responsibility and self-respect.

I hope, therefore, that the veto will be overridden, thereby correcting an injustice of long standing. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will see fit to override this veto. I have read the report very carefully. I think the argument of the War Department and the argument advanced by the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina is answered by the fact that we all know that we are commissioning today in the Army every military aviator. Certainly no one can claim that aviators command troops. He may or may not have a machine gunner or a bomber with him.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield if I have time.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Is it not true that they are taking men right out of civilian life today and giving them commissions, men who never had a day's military training in their lives?

Mr. MILLER. We all know that has happened and such officers will command troops. I cannot see a thing in the argument of the War Department that justifies the defeat of this legislation.

Mr. GEYER of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. GEYER of California. Can the gentleman think of a greater aid to a band leader than to have a commission, in the instruction of the men?

Mr. MILLER. I think it is just simple justice to pass this bill.

Mr. GEYER of California. Absolutely.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SHANLEY].

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen, I had the honor of introducing the first bill in the Seventy-fourth Congress for the commissioning of bandmasters. I spoke for it then and had such distinguished colleagues as the late William Connery, of Massachusets, the Honorable Emmet O'Neal, of Kentucky, and the Honorable B. Carroll Reece, of Tennessee, all members of the YD Division—men who were completely sold on the proposition of commissioning bandmasters.

I have been for this bill because every major military power in Europe has commissioned its bandmasters. Certainly they, whose tremendous preparedness plans have been copied in many respects by America during these trying days, would not commission their bandmasters if they didn't believe there was a military necessity for it. Certainly that distinguished and greatest of all modern American soldiers, General Pershing, would not be for it if he did not consider it a military necessity. He not only insisted upon the commissioning of bandmasters during the great World War but he suggested it and endorsed it in postwar days.

I can understand the opposition of the War Department because they have consistently opposed the commissioning of such groups as nurses, veterinarians, and chaplains, and dentists, but may I point out that this bill was vetoed by the President on June 24 and that since that time an emergency of such tremendous importance has occurred that we have enacted legislation absolutely inconsistent with any peacetime need. Because this emergency exists it is a fair presumption that the War Department must recognize the need and that the President himself if he was able to communicate to us his desires might well be for this bill as it is today.

A commissioned officer is a symbol of authority. His office is the physical backbone of the discipline of our military forces. I have seen too much of the deplorable situation which surrounds the present attitude toward the bandmaster to ever countenance its continuance. The theory and the practice of command demand that the bandmaster be a commissioned officer that he will have the fullest respect not only from his men but from other officers in all the other categories.

There is another reason to his commissioning. He must get it because every man in every category of the Army must feel that he has a chance to win a commission. As Napoleon said, "Every soldier must carry a marshal's baton in his knapsack."

Furthermore it is significant that the bandmasters were commissioned during the World War and that war plans today in the War Department provide for a commissioned band leader. Certainly the reasons for a commissioned band leader must be as cogent and as persuasive in peacetime as in wartime especially when we know those reasons are military ones of discipline.

This bill is recognized and endorsed by the musical, patriotic, and service organizations of America, including the American Federation of Musicians, National Federation of Music Clubs, the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, chambers of commerce, and the Rotary, Lions, Kiwanis, Civitan, and other similar organizations.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHANLEY. I yield.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Is it not true that the Navy and the Marine Corps have recognized band leaders by granting them commissions?

Mr. SHANLEY. Most certainly.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER].

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to take issue with my good friend, the very distinguished gentleman from North Carolina, who spoke in opposition to overriding the Presidential veto, but I think it should be overridden.

I spent 10 years in the National Guard myself previously to coming to Congress and have had close contact with one of the best bands in the United States National Guard, the famous One Hundred and Fifty-first Field Artillery Band of Minnesota. I know the warrant officer in charge of that band, a man by the name of Saunders, because he occupied a tent adjoining mine in the battery street at many of our encampments. I can see no reason why men of his caliber and men in charge of our bands in military organizations should not be commissioned the same as other officers in charge of units in our national-defense program. They are allowed to wear leather leggings and dress the same as the other officers, they are given practically every other privilege, except that of eating at the officers' mess. They get about the same pay, they are much more qualified, of course, than some of the other officers. We must admit this, because they are specialists. I think if they knew they could become commissioned officers it would be a very great factor of encouragement to musicians throughout the Nation to give their best services to the Nation by joining the armed forces.

There is this further fact which has not yet been touched on today and that is the benefit to the man in the ranks from having music and a musical organization accompanying him in service. You will recall that when in service such as the men were in 1917 and 1918 in Europe, for instance, you were taken away from all the home ties, from all the aesthetic things you were used to having about you. You could not have your radio, you could not have your phonograph, you could not have your piano, or other musical instrument; and the only chance you had to get some recreation and a little opportunity to get away from the sordidness of war was the sweet music which sometimes was wafted to you from your band as you spent your dreary hours and days and nights in the military service. Let's give our men in camp more and better music by encouraging our musicians.

I think this veto should be overruled.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I am going to use this time reading a portion of a letter I have just received from John Fletcher, bandmaster of the One Hundred and Sixty-third Regiment, Montana National Guard. It is dated at Bozeman, Mont., September 22, 1940. From it I read this paragraph:

> Under the present organization, the adjutant of the regiment is the commanding officer of the band. He is not, however, a musician in most cases, has no musical qualifications, knows nothing of instrumentation or band personnel. This is the vital concern of only one person—the bandmaster. If the regiment is to be proud of its band, upon which hinges much of the spirit, enthusiasm, and morale of the Army, the bandmaster must take a responsibility for which he has been delegated no authority or commission. It would go a long way in helping to strengthen our national defense if some of these kinks in the Army red tape could be ironed out.

I want to go on record, Mr. Speaker, as favoring the overriding of the veto. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER].

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope that the Members of the House will vote to override the Presidential veto of this bill, which recognizes the service of Army bandmasters and permits them to receive a second lieutenant's commission with less than 5 years of service and a first lieutenant's commission after service of 5 years or more.

It is rather strange that the New Deal Fuehrer, President Roosevelt, should veto this bill, in view of the fact that his 30-year-old multimillionaire son, Mr. Elliott Roosevelt, who is within the draft age and who has had no military service, was recently commissioned a captain in the Army and received a soft swivel-chair assignment in the Air Corps procurement center at Wright Field, Ohio.

This bill which President Roosevelt vetoed only provides for a lieutenant's commission for Army bandmasters who have rendered many years of faithful and efficient service in the United States Army. The chief bandmaster, who has charge of all of the Army bands, is the only person who can obtain a captain's commission under this bill which the President has vetoed. This chief bandmaster, with many years of military service, is certainly more entitled to receive a captain's commission than the President's 30-year-old multimillionaire son, Mr. Elliott Roosevelt.

Mr. Speaker, press reports of September 21, 1940, state that Mr. Elliott Roosevelt "has applied directly to General H. H. Arnold, Chief of the Army Air Corps, for a commission." Press reports of September 24, 1940, state "Elliott Roosevelt gets Army captaincy as specialist," and that because of his special talents, which earned him the commission, according to the War Department spokesman, will be put to use in the Air Corps procurement center at Wright Field, Ohio.

Mr. Speaker, the millions of men in the country who are under 35 years of age and subject to a year's compulsory peacetime military service at $21 per month under the New Deal-Stalin-Hitler type of "involuntary servitude," which violates the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, are no doubt wondering why our multimillionaire President's multimillionaire 30-year-old son, Mr. Elliott Roosevelt, can come to Washington on September 23, 1940, and apply direct to Gen. H. H. Arnold, Chief of the Army Air Corps, and walk out of his office on September 24, 1940, with a captain's commission and an assignment to a soft swivel-chair job in the Army Air Corps procurement center at Wright Field, Ohio, and the press of the country furnished with a statement from a War Department spokesman that Mr. Elliott Roosevelt's special talents earned him the commission.

Mr. Speaker, if Mr. Elliott Roosevelt's special talents, as revealed by the record, justifies his appointment as a captain in the Army Air Corps procurement center at Wright Field, Ohio, according to those who are now in charge of the War Department, then, in the interest of national defense, and in the interest of our almost bankrupt Federal Treasury, it is essential that those War Department officials who are responsible for his commission and assignment be kicked out of the War Department without delay.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Elliott Roosevelt's talents as a military airplane salesman and a potential political racketeering United States Treasury raider reveal that no one should even think of commissioning him as a captain and assigning him for service in a swivel-chair job in the Army Air Corps procurement center at Wright Field, Ohio, or any other place within the continental or territorial limits of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, let us briefly examine some of the talents of Mr. Elliott Roosevelt, which the War Department claims as exceptional qualifications for a captain's assignment in the Army Air Corps procurement center. On November 16, 1933, President Roosevelt recognized Soviet Russia. Shortly thereafter on February 28, 1934, Mr. Elliott Roosevelt entered into an agreement with Mr. Anthony H. S. Fokker, the aviation expert, to sell the Soviet Russian Government 50 Douglas military airplanes of Lockheed make at an expected price to allow a commission of $500,000 for Mr. Fokker and $500,000 for Mr. Elliott Roosevelt. I hold in my hand a 12-page affidavit signed by Mr. Anthony H. S. Fokker on the 18th day of September 1935 as presented to the special Senate committee investigating the munitions industry in the year 1935.

In this affidavit Mr. Fokker reveals the entire deal with Mr. Elliott Roosevelt and identifies the corroborating exhibited evidence. In this affidavit Mr. Fokker reveals that this agreement which he signed with Mr. Elliott Roosevelt was a special agreement for the sale of these 50 Douglas military planes to Soviet Russia. In explaining why he had signed an agreement for such a large commission of $500,000 for himself and $500,000 for Mr. Elliott Roosevelt upon the completion of the sale, Mr. Fokker states in this affidavit that—

> He had not felt that the prices which it was proposed to charge the Russians for these 50 military planes were at all reasonable; in fact, he had thought them notably excessive, but that he had been persuaded by Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Roosevelt's associate, Mr. Stratton, that Mr. Roosevelt had enough influence with the Export-Import Bank and the Russian purchasing commission, then in the country, to swing the deal at that excessive price.

Mr. Speaker, this was certainly a money-making deal for Mr. Elliott Roosevelt, who was only 23 years of age on February 28, 1934, when he agreed with Mr. Fokker to sell 50 Douglas military airplanes of Lockheed make to Soviet Russia at a price which would allow Mr. Elliott Roosevelt a commission of $500,000.

Mr. Speaker, it was not talent but pure unmitigated gall for Mr. Elliott Roosevelt, the then 23-year-old son of the President of the United States, to enter into an agreement under which he was to receive a $500,000 commission on the sale of 50 Douglas military airplanes to the Soviet Russian Government because he claimed to have enough influence on the Federal Government Export-Import Bank, whose members were appointed by his father, so that the bank would furnish American taxpayers' money to the Russian Soviet Government to be used to purchase the planes in question.

Mr. Speaker, and this is the same Mr. Elliott Roosevelt who came to Washington on September 23, 1940, and applied direct to Gen. H. H. Arnold, Chief of the Army Air Corps, for a commission in the United States Army, and received a captain's commission on September 24, 1940, with a swivel-chair assignment to the Army Air Corps procurement center at Wright Field, Ohio, because of his special talents. In the interest of national defense and in order to protect our almost bankrupt Federal Treasury, the Congress of the United States should immediately conduct a thorough and exhaustive public investigation of Mr. Elliott Roosevelt's activities since his father became President of the United States, as well as an investigation of his strange and unusual short-cut commission as captain and assignment to the Army Air Corps procurement center.

Mr. Speaker, under permission granted by the House, I now incorporate in the RECORD at this point an exceptionally fine article by Gen. Hugh S. Johnson entitled "One Man's Opinion," which appears in today's Washington Daily News issue of September 25, 1940, as follows:

ONE MAN'S OPINION

(By Hugh S. Johnson)

"Fairly and without fear or favor." That is how the President told the Governors the selective-service law must be administered. Right. It must be done that way or the scheme won't work. Nobody must be allowed to put over any "clever little schemes" to get one boy out of the draft while another, with no more reason not to serve, is taken. That is unfair. It is doubly despicable, because for every boy who escapes his proper turn another mother's son is pushed up before his turn to serve and perhaps to die.

It is a deadly serious business. Our draft law, if properly and honestly and justly administered, is the best system for service ever invented. If unfairly administered and used for politics or any other kind of "fear or favor," it can become one of the most hateful and un-American systems of oppression and injustice ever invented.

Not only must its fairness be an unimpeachable fact, the whole country must be convinced of it. It must be above suspicion. The poorest mother of the least-favored son must be serene in her confidence that he will be treated on exactly the same footing as the son of the most powerful man in the Nation, or of men in all lower grades down to her own.

On the very day the President was making all this clear, his own son, Elliott, was commissioned and called to service as a captain in the Air Corps. As a flyer? Oh, deah, no. A young man has to work and train for that. Elliott goes in as what airmen call derisively a "kee-wee"—a bird without wings.

He didn't apply to any recruiting office. The head of the Army Air Corps, General Arnold himself, assigned him from the Specialists Reserve to a job in "procurement"—which means something to do with buying supplies. When asked what kind of a specialist Elliott claimed to be, the officials said that was confidential. As a captain, he will draw $200 a month, plus allowances that may be as high as $116 a month.

At his age of 30, he would have been in the selective draft pool. There he would have been subject to serve, as Woodrow Wilson said, "Not in that place that will most pleasure him but where it shall best serve the common good to call him." He might have served in some specialty—but that would have been decided not by him but by his qualifications in fair competition with all other boys—as also would the place and condition of his service. His compensation would have been $30 and not $200 a month. He would have been honored by having to wear the uniform and not "privileged" as is reported in the press of this new captain to wear civilian clothes.

"No matter what the sacrifices," Captain Roosevelt is quoted as saying, "it is important for all young people to join up and take part in the defense program." O. K., but could your boy "join up" in this soft fashion? "Try and do it," or "It's nice work if you can get it."

Now the President's second son won't even have to register for the draft and take his place on a footing of equality with all other young Americans of his age. Without any discernible military training, preparation, or qualification, and without any known preparation for "procurement," he is made a "captain by the scratch of a pen and an officer and a gentleman by act of Congress."

There might be a worse way to start off this great democratic and equalitarian crusade in decency called the draft, but I can't for the moment think what it is. It looks like hateful nepotism, favoritism, and unfairness at the very head of the system.

It is so raw that I am very sure of one thing—the President either didn't know about it or else didn't give a thought to the implications. I doubt if Elliott did, either. The only real trouble with that boy is that he has no inferiority complexes. Guiltless as I believe this act was at heart, it ought to be undone just as quickly as it was performed. Otherwise it will remain a stench to heaven.

Mr. Speaker, many of the Members of Congress who supported the voluntary peacetime military service amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] during the recent consideration of the New Deal Stalin-Hitler type of peacetime compulsory military service legislation were certainly surprised to hear about Mr. Elliott Roosevelt's strange and unusual short-cut voluntary application for a captain's commission in the Army Air Corps procurement division. We were particularly surprised, in view of the fact that President and Mrs. Roosevelt, the parents of Mr. Elliott Roosevelt, had both taken a very strong position in opposition to voluntary service and in favor of compulsory peacetime military service, which violates the "involuntary servitude" prohibition of the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. I know that in the minds of the many millions of men who must now register for the New Deal peacetime compulsory military service there must arise the question now as to whether they, too, can escape the arduous duties of a common soldier at $30 a month by coming to Washington and opening the door and entering the office of high New Deal officials in the War Department and walking out with a captain's commission and an assignment to a swivel-chair job with a captain's pay.

Mr. Speaker, is it any wonder that many of our countrymen are asking why President Roosevelt's 30-year-old son, Elliott, dodges the draft in the manner which I have described. May I repeat that in the interest of national defense and to protect our almost bankrupt Federal Treasury the Congress of the United States should immediately conduct a thorough and exhaustive public investigation of Mr. Elliott Roosevelt's aviation talents and his commission as a captain with an assignment to the Army Air Corps procurement center.

Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope that the Members of the House will vote to override the President's veto of this meritorious bill. If President Roosevelt believes that we have sufficient commissioned officers in the Army, he can discharge Capt. Elliott Roosevelt and fill the captain's vacancy with the chief bandmaster captain provided for in this bill. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the House Military Affairs Committee gave this matter very careful consideration. The President seems to have based his veto on the idea there was discrimination in favor of the bandmasters as against other warrant officers. From all of the hearings that the committee had on the matter and the fact that this bill has passed the House four times heretofore and the Senate three times, we feel the only discrimination that exists is the fact that these men who are leaders of the Army bands have not heretofore been made first and second lieutenants and commissioned as such. It is my view of the matter that this is a delayed simple justice and that the House should not hesitate in justice to these men to override this veto.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House on reconsideration pass the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 197, nays 114, not voting 117, as follows:

WOOL PRODUCTS

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 162) to protect producers, manufacturers, distributors, and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured wool products, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the conference report.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The Committee of Conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 162) To protect producers, manufacturers, distributors, and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured wool products, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same.

CLARENCE F. LEA,
HERRON PEARSON,
CHAS. L. SOUTH,
CHAS. A. WOLVERTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

B. K. WHEELER,
CHAS. W. TOBEY,
H. H. SCHWARTZ,
CLYDE M. REED,
EDWIN C. JOHNSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 162) to protect producers, manufacturers, distributors, and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured wool products, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The House amendment struck out all of the Senate bill after the enacting clause. The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and therefore the bill as agreed to in conference is the same as the bill as it passed the House.

CLARENCE F. LEA,
CHAS. L. SOUTH,
HERRON PEARSON,
CHAS. A. WOLVERTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, the conference report shows an agreement of the conferees of the House and the Senate on the House bill in toto, so the conferees accept the bill as passed by the House.

If no gentleman desires to be heard, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by including a short newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, a while ago I was given unanimous consent to address the House on Friday. I understand there is a possibility of adjourning over Friday, so I now ask unanimous consent to change that time to Monday, following the legislative program of the day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a radio address I delivered last night.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter from the Henry H. Houston 2d Post, No. 3, of the American Legion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

[The matter referred to appears in the Appendix.]

Mr. MYERS asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a speech made at Boston by the National Commander of the American Legion. I also ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on another topic and to include therein a brief poem by a constituent in my district.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under a previous special order, the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] is recognized for 7 minutes.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak for just a few moments this afternoon following up the political discussion that took place here yesterday.

It seems to me that with the situation in the world and in our own Nation as it is today we could well soft-pedal some of the politics, I do not need to tell the House that the things for which America has stood through the centuries, freedom, the importance of the common citizen because he is many, the right of people to be different from the majority, religious liberty, and all those things, are today challenged as perhaps never before in all history, and our country is called on to preserve those values within herself for a world which one day is going to hunger for them again.

As I see it, we face three dangers today. The first one is the danger or threat from without, the international danger to which we have given quite properly so much attention within the last few months. The next is the danger from the enemy within our gates, and to it likewise we are giving attention both through the expansion of the F. B. I. and through other agencies which are working on this problem. The third is the danger which I might describe as the danger from our taking the easy way to do things. By that I mean that I believe Congress at the present time has a very definite job to do. It is the job of seeing that we just do not take the easy way of meeting these problems. It is the job of seeing that defense is not made an excuse for stifling the voice that has always been the voice of America, the voice of the ideal Nation where there will no longer be unnecessary poverty or needless injustice. It is the job of seeing that as it becomes necessary under certain circumstances to make broad grants of power and to pass appropriation bills in a very short period of time, we do not just let it go at that but see that the Congress continues to exercise its proper prerogatives, reviews and watches carefully the things that happen, and stays on its job earnestly. I think the people of America will feel a sense of confidence if we do that.

Here is an example of what I mean.

During the course of the debate on the conscription bill I offered an amendment, which was voted down, to provide that after men had served their 1 year's training period they should not be called into active service after that except by authorization of the Congress. The amendment was voted down and the assurance was given that they could not be called into active service. I am not alarmed about the thing that has happened. I do not think anything is going to go wrong or anyone is going to abuse the very broad power that has been given. However, I do find on careful examination of this situation that prior to the passage of the conscription bill, in the so-called National Guard bill we had already authorized the President of the United States, whoever he might be, to call into active service anyone in any reserve component until the date of June 30, 1942. This, taken with the provision of the conscription bill placing trainees in the reserve components, means that until that date all these men can be called to active service without any action of the Congress at all. I merely mention this because it seems to me that that kind of grant of power is about the ultimate that could be made by Congress. I presume that the Congress acted with knowledge as to what it was doing, but I merely call it to your attention so that you may know what the situation is. I am frank to say I still think my amendment should be in that bill.

FULL PRODUCTION CAN GIVE ADEQUATE DEFENSE AND ALSO A GOOD LIVING STANDARD TO ALL

I think it is of basic importance that Congress does not get the idea that its job is done when it has appropriated money and passed bills for military defense. The main reason I asked this time this afternoon is to say one thing, namely, that it is altogether possible for the United States to provide a completely adequate defense and at the same time to provide opportunity and the highest standard of living in the world for its own people. It all depends on whether or not we bring about a situation where everybody is at work and where we have full production and full use of our resources and our industrial capacity. The arch enemy of national defense and of democratic government itself is unemployment. And unemployment springs primarily, I am convinced, from a faulty and iniquitous conception of the relationship between money on the one hand and real wealth and its production on the other.

I wish to read to you something that I put in the RECORD one time, a portion of an article by Dorothy Thompson entitled "Thoughts After the Fall of Paris." She is giving the reasons for Hitler's successes. Her second reason reads as follows, and I take it that every Member of the House knows of Miss Thompson's entirely hostile attitude toward Germany.

Here is what she says:

> Second. Hitler is winning the war because he has been fighting it with an industrial and engineering economy, while the democracies have been fighting it with a money, or financial economy, and fighting it stingily. We are now following Britain and France in our defense program.
> The Germans did not vote themselves 4,000,000,000 money units for defense. They voted—had voted for them—30,000 airplanes, so-and-so many guns, so-and-so many thousand tons of reserves of oil and raw materials. The German economy is an economy of things and men; the Allied economy is an economy of symbols; money. The German economy recognizes that all wealth is in goods, particularly in capital goods, and that these are not created by money, which is only a medium of exchange, but by the application of labor to materials.
>
> The Allies had money but failed to produce goods. The Germans had no money, but did produce them.
> To recognize this is not to accept the mystic race-domination, fanatical, Hitler-worshipping secular religion of nazi-ism. This economy was not designed by Hitler. Thorstein Veblen, an American, knew all about it; Henry George, an American, knew a great deal about it. As far as Germany is concerned, the man who first saw and practiced the facts about an industrial and engineering economy was Walter Rathenau, the coordinator of the German economy during the last war, and he was a Jew whom the Nazis murdered. The Germans were forced into it, because they had a will to conquest and no money. But the lack of money proved to be a godsend to them.

What lesson we should learn from this and what we should do about it I shall suggest in a moment. The point I want to make first is this. I believe we have got to get a vision of what the real challenge to the Congress is. It is not merely to vote military appropriations though that is necessary. The real challenge to the Congress is to provide national defense for America from the ground up. We have got to see a vision of an America united in a great effort, not only to prepare in a military sense, but also to bring into the national effort for the upbuilding of our national life every bit of resource and every person in this Nation. There are two possible points of view. One point of view is that because America needs national unity therefore everybody who pleads the cause of the poor or seeks to improve their lot or points out injustice where it exists is a "fifth columnist." This point of view, Mr. Speaker, is false and indefensible and we shall never get true national defense that way.

The other and truly patriotic point of view is this: America asks and needs the full and complete devotion of all of us. Therefore, we cannot bear to see any conditions existing within her borders which are not worthy of her. Therefore, we are driven with a great and insistent urge to conquer unemployment—not by means of temporary large expenditures, but fundamentally and permanently; therefore, we can no longer tolerate the slum; therefore, we must defeat and reverse the forces that are today making tenants and hired laborers out of what were once free farmers. With such a point of view always before us, Mr. Speaker, we can create a dynamic faith in our Nation which is what we shall need if we are to match the forces that are presently loose in the world.

We can do it. There is no question about that. The question is whether we want to badly enough. The question is whether we shall be content to see some portion of the unemployed go back to work because of our large armament expenditures and then fold our hands and await the economic whirlwind that is bound to come once those expenditures cease or are reduced. Or whether we will go to work earnestly and with determination to get at the root of the reason why our people cannot buy all they are so readily able to produce for sale.

We can do this job. For we have every resource necessary to do it. Not one reputable economist questions our ability to produce $100,000,000,000 of goods and services per year. Many believe we could produce much more than that. In any case, if, by judicious policies, we brought about a national income of $100,000,000,000 per year we could then spend $10,000,000,000 each year on defense—yes; we could sustain a Budget of even so much as $20,000,000,000 per year and still have left a larger income, after the payment of taxes, than this Nation has ever known.

IS CONGRESS THROUGH?

Is Congress through with its job, gentlemen? The question answers itself. Of course, Congress is not through. It has only started on the job of providing a true defense for America. It has not tackled fundamentally the most important part of the job.

For example, it has been years now since candidates began pledging themselves to support a national old-age retirement pension system. Everyone of us knows that only the mass-consumption key can unlock the door to mass production and full employment. Yet, there are two petitions on the Speaker's desk, either of which would bring to the floor a bill to provide a national-pension system. Only a few more names are need on these petitions and if one does not agree with the details of the bills there will be every opportunity to amend them. But, is it not time for us to undertake action for the benefit of our people, and toward the straightening out of our purchasing-power problem?

A CLEAR UNDERSTANDING OF THE PROPER FUNCTION OF MONEY, CREDIT, AND DEBT IS OUR PARAMOUNT NEED

And now, in closing, let me go back to the quotation from Dorothy Thompson, for there we find, I am sure, the key to the dynamic economy that we must have. The flow of money and credit in the Nation must be governed by the production and flow of real goods and services. At present it is just the other way around. The availability of money determines whether or not we shall produce the things we need. We have not yet discovered how to remove the brake of debt from the machine of our production. The only answer we have been able to devise to increase our production and reduce unemployment has been an increase in public debt.

Here is what we must realize: Debt is all right where it represents a transaction where one man is given the right to use money that belongs to another man. But, debt is not all right where it means that a banker creates money—usually in the form of bank deposits—against the credit of the Government and then lends that specially created money to the Government at interest and on the security of a public bond. Neither is debt justified if it is contracted by our Nation for the single reason that the Nation, and its growing business, require an additional supply of the medium of exchange.

We worry about idle money. But it is our own fault if money is idle. For we have given the banks all the business they really need by paying them—in the form of bonds—for creating money—demand deposits—for the Government. Why, under these circumstances, should loans involving risk be made? And again, we have issued billions of tax-exempt bonds at the very time we were raising the income-tax rates in the upper brackets. Naturally enough, much money has sought refuge in these tax-exempts—especially where the owners of the money were people who otherwise would pay in the high brackets.

A reformed monetary system can be the keystone of an impregnable America. For it can mean that as we increase our production we will automatically reduce our public debt instead of increasing it as we do at present. This will happen whenever we restore the money-creating function to our national Government where it has always belonged, and where the Constitution of the Nation says it shall reside.

WHAT NATIONAL DEFENSE DOES AND DOES NOT REQUIRE

National defense will require sacrifice.

National defense will require a spirit and practice of cooperation in the common interest.

National defense will require us all to learn one of the greatest and finest lessons of life—to find that there are things bigger than one's self to live for and to live in. Such things are religious faith and the ideals of one's Nation.

But, national defense does not require and must not be permitted to mean the abandonment of interest in the solution of the domestic problems of the American people. On the contrary it requires of every one of us a renewed dedication to the welfare of all our fellow citizens. And to the poor ones most because, as Charles Dickens has said, "They need it most." [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, several Members have asked me what the program will be tomorrow. We intend to go along with the national-defense appropriation bill and hope to complete it tomorrow.

Mr. MICHENER. If the gentleman will yield, when that is finished, will we adjourn until Monday?

Mr. WARREN. That has not finally been determined, but will be determined tomorrow.

A BACK-HAND THREAT AT PUBLIC POWER—THE SENATOR DERIDES PUBLIC POWER ADVOCATES

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, on the 18th of August 1940 the Honorable STYLES BRIDGES, United States Senator from

New Hampshire, delivered a radio address on the American Forum of the Air in a debate on the subject Private versus Public Ownership of Electricity. The Senator further publicized his radio address by including it in the Appendix of the RECORD, on pages 5062–5063. I did not hear the radio address when delivered on the air, but I have carefully read and analyzed it as it appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I was astonished to learn that a United States Senator, confronted with national and international problems of gravest concern, should be diverted from his duties to make an attack upon a private citizen who is defenseless in the face of this powerful opponent. The attack was made on Dr. Carl Thompson and the Public Ownership League. I could easily have understood the purpose of such a statement if it had emanated directly from the utility propaganda bureau conveniently located in Washington. I am also surprised that a United States Senator should have made an address which contained so many glaring errors. This was part of his effort to discredit public ownership, and particularly to discredit the Public Ownership League of America. The statements and inferences in the address reflect unfairly and unjustly upon many able and conscientious men. Having had close association with those whom the Senator reviles, and being an advocate of public ownership of utilities myself, I feel that I cannot allow such statements to go unchallenged. I realize that there is a possibility that the busy Senator may have been given incorrect information and that his assistants may not have had the opportunity to get at the facts.

Perhaps it may be inconceivable to Senator BRIDGES, and to those who advance similar ideas on the controversial question of public control and operation of public necessities, that men and women could, in perfect sincerity, and in the spirit of sacrificial service, devote their lives and resources to an endeavor to make better living conditions throughout our country. The group which has so untiringly advocated more widespread enjoyment of the benefits of electric power unhampered by the profit motive has been defamed and denounced, time and again, by the richly financed and tightly integrated group which is determined to monopolize power resources for private profit as against the public welfare, and what appears to some of us to be undoubted public rights.

It is not my purpose to try to convince the Senator that men are to be found, even in the greedy, sordid setting of American big business who are capable of devoting their lives to a cause unselfishly and wholly without financial reward. One such cause is that of public ownership and enjoyment of the benefits of electric power, particularly the hydro power generated by streams to which the public has an inherent right. My purpose is to correct certain misstatements the Senator made and false inferences that he conveyed to listeners and readers who might be unaware that a United States Senator does sometimes, in his eagerness to serve his group, make statements not supported by facts or capable of other interpretation.

PUBLIC OWNERSHIP MOVEMENT NOT RELATED TO "COMMERCIAL AND POLITICAL RACKETEERS"

The Senator brands the public ownership movement in this country as "a combination of commercial and political racketeers." Since there are over 10,000 publicly owned water works in the United States, over 2,600 light and power systems publicly owned and operated, thousands of miles of public roads, and universal publicly maintained postal and educational systems, the Senator has evidently taken in too much territory and has, inferentially, denounced the whole American way of life.

PUBLIC OWNERSHIP SUCCESSFUL IN OREGON

In the Senator's address he mentioned the city of Eugene, Oreg., as having a model municipal plant. It was pleasing to me to have him cite this outstandingly successful example, but this reference furnishes a clue to the source of his other material. Many times in the House of Representatives I have recited, and supported by factual details, the successful results of the Eugene, Oreg., electric-power system, and always take satisfaction in repeating them. Eugene is a city of about 20,000 people, which owns, practically free of debt, an electric plant worth about $5,000,000. While the city was building this plant and under the burden of paying for it its users enjoyed rates cheaper than any ever before known in western Oregon. Why did not other Oregon towns, like Portland the capital city, Salem, and Albany, for instance, give citizens similar benefits? The answer lies in the fact that there were in those towns too many men like Senator BRIDGES, talking and working against public enterprise and aiding the private-utility overlords in their fight to sacrifice public welfare to their private profit. I could also relate impressive stories of successful public ownership and operation in the Oregon cities of Canby, Milton, Forest Grove, McMinnville, and Cascade Locks, which have made great savings through public operation and demonstrated that it is both feasible and profitable.

We of the Pacific Northwest are public-power minded. We are somewhat independent thinkers. We do not fear our own institutions created by us for our own Government. We intend to use our own natural resources for our own benefit, even though it may irk eastern holding companies, and turn the profits to our own tills instead of into their exploitative schemes for building up the great private fortunes which are often used to wreck governments.

PUBLICLY OWNED UTILITIES ARE PRACTICAL

The Senator charges that the Public Ownership magazine carries advertising of electrical engineering firms, municipal bond houses, and Diesel engine manufacturers. What successful magazine, newspaper, or publication is there in this country today that does not carry advertising? Did the Senator's Granite monthly magazine run without advertising? Municipal power and light plants do not exist in a rarefied atmosphere entirely aside from actuality. They buy equipment and employ labor as do private plants. There are some differences, as there has as yet been no credible record of "kick-backs" and rebates for the creation of slush funds to buy elections or crush opponents. The labor record of public ownership has been very satisfactory, as has recently been set forth in substantial detail in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

A BACKHAND THRUST AT PUBLIC POWER

The Senator derisively refers to Dr. Carl D. Thompson, founder of the Public Ownership League of America, as one who is "sometimes called 'Dr. Thompson,'" thus implying, although not definitely stating, that he is not entitled to the doctor's degree and the respect which it carries. Now, it happens that I and many others in the Senate and House know Dr. Thompson personally, and have known him for many years. He is a thoroughly educated man of high scholastic standing, having not only the usual college degree, but a master's degree from the University of Chicago, and a doctor's degree from a fully accredited western college. In conferring the LL. D. degree upon Dr. Thompson, the faculty and board of trustees of Doane College stated that they gave him this recognition on the ground of his service as a "pioneer preacher of the social gospel, leader of progressive legislation in this country—courageous, unselfish, efficient advocate of the people," and in addition stated that he has worked "not for personal gain but for the public good."

The Senator stated, "Today Thompson is on the Federal pay roll at $466 per month." I know no reason why any qualified man should not be in Government service, but since there is an implication of wrongdoing, and the connection is with the Bonneville project dear to my heart, I desire to clear the matter. Inquiry develops the fact that while "rated" in the Budget at $5,600 a year, Dr. Thompson has never received anything like that amount, his appointment being on a temporary basis. He has never been employed full time and is now on a per diem basis at approximately half time with a small annual income from his public service, something like $2,000 a year. I assume private utilities pay many "advisors and consultants" that amount, or more, for a few hours of advice, steering them through the shoals toward favorable legislative enactments. The Senator may know more about such rates, as he also must have observed "the boys" in action.

Senator BRIDGES should, in all fairness, and in the face of the facts easily ascertainable, recall his insinuations and admit that he has definitely misrepresented a man of fine record and high motives. My personal acquaintance with Dr. Thompson leads me to state that I have never known a cleaner or more honest man in public life. He is always trying to find something that he can do for the common good. He is a lover of our institutions; a true, genuine Christian American. Why, Senator BRIDGES, you could not buy him with a million dollars.

PUBLIC OWNERSHIP NOT COMMUNISM

Senator BRIDGES seeks further to discredit Dr. Thompson and the Public Ownership League of America by rehashing the threadworn charges of Socialist, socialism, and communism. As a matter of fact, Dr. Thompson has not been a member of the Socialist Party or had anything to do with it for nearly 25 years and has always been an earnest and relentless opponent of communism. Public ownership of electric-light and power facilities is no more socialistic than are public water plants, police departments, the postal system, libraries, fire departments, hospitals, roads, bridges—all public necessities of community life, cooperatively owned for the common good.

HATCH ACT AND PUBLIC OWNERSHIP

Senator BRIDGES also stated that Dr. Thompson is actively engaged in public-ownership campaigns for the Bonneville project, in violation of the Hatch Act. Now, that touches near the heart of things for us in the Pacific Northwest. We want no Hatch Act cry raised to keep our people from learning how best to utilize the power of our own Columbia River to light our homes and to bring us population and industries, because we do have natural advantages. There are plenty of Electric Bond & Share agents already operating destructively and directly in our vicinity without subjecting our public enterprises to attack from New England on the floor of the Senate. It is like Hitler attacking England in Africa.

I have heard Dr. Thompson's addresses in the Oregon country. I listened to one recently, which was enthusiastically received by our Eastern Oregon Wheat League—all practical men and certainly no one's dupes. I can personally testify that they are able, effective, factual, and educational presentations of the policies laid down by the Congress in the Bonneville Act. They are, in no respect, a violation of the Hatch Act. Dr. Thompson's lectures were given only upon the request of local groups and organizations like the granges, which are interested in distribution of Bonneville power for public benefit. The talks are strictly confined to presentation of facts and information regarding the project, which anyone and everyone is entitled under the law to learn. I am advised, moreover, that the manuscripts of his addresses have been repeatedly checked and reviewed by the legal department of the Bonneville project and approved as being strictly within the law. This is only a beginning of the efforts to use the Hatch Act to thwart public projects.

I have noticed that Senator BRIDGES lists in his experience background in Who's Who his service as a county agent and secretary of the State Farm Bureau. For his information I would suggest that he write the master of the Oregon State Grange for verification of the facts he used. I am sure I know the origin of the story included in his radio address, and I am here recording my doubts as to the honest intentions of those who prevailed upon the Senator to use his high office to peddle their wares. It is not the first time our people of Oregon have had misleading private-utility propaganda dinned into their ears, but we do not always rate the destinction of an attack of national proportions.

THE PUBLIC OWNERSHIP LEAGUE OF AMERICA

I am glad that there is now and has been for the past many years such an organization as the Public Ownership League of America. To refer to such a body as a Communist organization is a slander upon the group which sustains it. It is a nonpartisan educational organization of loyal American citizens, having in its membership persons of all political parties. Among the subscribers to its support and objectives are respected Members of this House and of the United States Senate, former Governors of States, officials and engineers of some of the largest public and municipal power projects in this country and Canada. It also includes outstanding businessmen and leaders of farm and labor organizations throughout the country. As a member of the Public Ownership League, I am personally affronted when it is thus unfairly subjected to public attack, unfounded and undeserved. I have attended its meetings, and I can testify that I have never heard anything which could be construed as being mercenary or selfish or smacking of personal gain. Its members are imbued with the spirit of doing something worth while for the people. The radio address clearly and purposely created a false impression to smear those whose economic philosophy is at odds with that of the Senator and those he served by giving publicity to their ideas.

We have a branch public ownership league in Oregon, which bands together our finest and most progressive and reasonable citizens who are just naturally believers in the public ownership of necessities, for the safety and protection and enjoyment of community life. We have been educated by a long period of widespread scandals and thieveries from small investors, who formerly handed their savings over to private utility companies operated for the profit of Atlantic seaboard speculators—I would say "Wall Street," as we understand exactly what that means, but those words may sound too trite for repetition in a public power speech.

The Senator has lived close enough to the Canadian Province which has profited from the work of Sir Adam Beck to recognize that he was imbued with the spirit of public service, without any thought of personal aggrandizement. He was head of the great Hydroelectric Power Commission of Ontario and was one of the first vice presidents of the Public Ownership League. Another vice president was J. D. Ross, beloved in the Northwest, superintendent of the Seattle Public Power System and first administrator of the Bonneville project. The United States Treasury Department, after a careful and thorough investigation of the matter, in connection with tax returns, has recently declared the league to be a distinctly educational and not a propaganda organization.

To mark such an organization as socialistic or communistic is doing violence to the truth and should the charge gain any credence, it would result in unpardonable injury to the characters and reputation of high-minded Americans.

The Senator says that the league has distributed "hundreds of thousands of pieces of public-ownership propaganda under free mailing privileges of Members of Congress." Such a charge is petty politics. So far as I know, not a single piece of such material has been so sent out. Whenever such material is used, the league pays the regular postage. The Senator and his party should not attempt to educate our rural citizens on propaganda distribution under franks, as their stuffed mail boxes have done that job. It is a real calamity to be a boxholder on rural route No. 1.

WHAT RECORD IS REALLY "ROTTEN"?

The Senator says "the record is rotten with proved charges of corruption and bribery of city officials." But he offers no proof, he mentions no names nor cases, and cites no evidence. This statement, if meant to refer to the league and public-ownership proponents, is absolutely untrue. In due time I trust the Senator will cite cases. If anything wrong is found, it should be righted. If not, and the Senator is sincere in the matter, he will correct his statement. Such subject matter is similar to the usual type of tirade originated by private power company manipulators and intended to build up prejudice and malice, and avoidance of sincere and straightforward, factual argument. Lacking such argument, resort is made to invective, insinuation, and insult. The method follows the advice of an official of a fixing private power company given long ago to anyone opposing public ownership, "Do not argue with the advocates of public ownership. Pin the Bolshevik label on them. Call them Communists." Should the Senator really wish to find a "rotten record," all he needs to do is to bring out the proven evidence on the conduct of private utilities. Startling and disgraceful private utility operations are a matter of record in Government publications covering years of investigation, under the Federal Trade Commission, the Federal Power Commission, and the Securities and Exchange Commission.

In many cities of the United States, agents of the private companies have bought councilmen, mayors, and city officials by the dozens, yea, by the hundreds, and have secured franchises with ruthless dishonesty. There is no gang of highbinders that has exceeded the private utilities in the depths to which they have fallen to carry out their nefarious ends. They have selected the men for public office whom they can and do control—in legislative bodies of all degrees, in executive positions and in bureaus and departments; yes, even in civil service. Perhaps the Senator could find, as others have found, that the utilities control practically every commission in the United States that is supposed to regulate them.

PROPAGANDA AGENCIES WHICH ARE DANGEROUS

In the radio address it is stated that the private-power industry is owned by Main Street and not by Wall Street. This is a trick statement. Factually, the control securities are owned by the yacht-riding farmers of Wall Street, who are experienced in shearing sheep, milking cows, watering stock, and handling the bull, as my Mississippi colleague says. Customer ownership preferred stock, largely water, was peddled on Main Street to innocent victims. The arguments presented are strictly a defense of the right to siphon funds from the pockets of the rate payer to freeze watered securities.

A good many of such defense arguments originally came out of the old discredited N. E. L. A., and the so-called Committee on Utility Information, which operated principally from New York City, Chicago, Springfield, St. Louis, and Des Moines, and later worked New England. Anyone interested can check into the origin of such arguments from the printed words of Aylesworth, Prather, Carmichael, and their committee associates. All were stooges of Sam Insull. This chain of propaganda argument was started over 25 years ago, and was recently climaxed by the exposures at St. Louis, brought about by the tireless energy of the St. Louis Post Dispatch. This newpaper's files explain the operations of the syndicate organized to control the conduct of public officials. To counteract such syndicate operation, the only refuge of the rate payer is public ownership of those necessary facilities effected with public interest.

THE OREGON SITUATION

I am, perhaps, better acquainted with the conduct of private utilities in Oregon than elsewhere. In the Federal court at Portland, Oreg., there is now a voluntary bankruptcy proceeding, initiated by a private power company. It was admitted that they increased their bonded debt by over $20,000,000 with no visible addition to the assets of the company.

When Governor of the State of Oregon, I made a desperate effort to secure control of our public utilities commission, so that I could appoint honest, fearless men who would actually represent the public and protect its interests. I was denied that power through private utility political manipulation, financed by its ill-gotten gains. In our one large city alone, one company has now reduced power rates $1,500,000 annually because of the Bonneville yardstick. It is thus apparent what a haul they made and what they had to spend for their evil purposes. These utilities had one valuation for taxation and profits; they had another valuation for rate-making purposes. They took out of one little Oregon county over $500,000, by the sale of fraudulent securities. The Portland Co. has gone through bankruptcy twice in the last 10 years.

By contrast, Tacoma, Wash., situated 200 miles north, with less than half the people of Portland, has had a municipal electric plant with rates about one-half those effective in Portland. Tacoma, furthermore, owns its plant, practically free of debt, and worth $25,000,000. Tacoma was not inflicted with the influence of private power company agents, but was guided by men like distinguished Senator BONE, of Washington.

PUBLIC OWNERSHIP OF NATURAL MONOPOLIES

Every business that is a natural monopoly, effected with public interest, ought to be in the hands of the people. There should be but one water system, one electric-light plant, one post office—and all should belong to the people. Electricity should be as free as water. It is one of the greatest gifts given by Nature to mankind. It can be produced very cheaply, especially in hydro plants, after installation. Only about 10 percent of the over-all cost is used for manufacturing the current. Ninety percent of the amount paid in rates goes into transmission and distribution—and profits. It is an exceedingly profitable business. There are no bad bills. If a customer does not pay, the current can be quickly cut off, so everybody pays. It is being sold at a tremendous profit, by private manipulators. It has afforded the best opportunity to the jugglers and manipulators of Wall Street since the early days of railroad construction.

Holding companies created men of the type of Hopson, Insull, and the like, who came to the surface in tying together the stocks of many operating companies, so as to soak up the profits. They should have financed extensions by their enormous earnings. Instead, they pocketed the earnings or spent them on debauching our political life. Then they soaked the public for capital and squandered that, spreading stock to flatter their dupes into belief that they were coowners in a great money-making enterprise.

The big fight waged against the T. V. A., Bonneville, and Grand Coulee has been in the interests of speculators and manipulators, and opposed to the rights of the people.

A former Chairman of the Federal Power Commission, after careful examination, stated that the total value of all the electric power plants in the United States does not exceed $6,500,000,000. They are operated today, so as to pay interest charges on $13,000,000,000 book value. The difference represents junk and jokers.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend the remarks I made in the House today and to include a brief article by Gen. Hugh S. Johnson.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, a day or two ago I addressed some remarks to the Congress on the question of disintegrating our morality and impairing the integrity of the country by these very singular acts whereby the executive agencies flout the law of the land and then flout the will of Congress. I referred at that time to the destroyer deal, which was in contravention of the 1917 act. I referred to some abuses and excesses within the National Labor Relations Board, where they deliberately undertook to flout the intent and the purpose of the Congress in the expenditure of certain appropriations.

One can go on and multiply these instances a great deal and see that there is something rather fundamental about these excesses and abuses that are taking place at the present time. I could go back, I suppose, to that rather celebrated occurrence when there should have been confession rather than silence on the part of one who went to the Supreme Court of the United States. I regard that as essentially a matter of public morality. One might point out how people shrug their shoulders at heinous offenses and abuses today and turn them off with just a wisecrack. It is all part and parcel of these forces that are leeching away the substance of the country. One might well, I expect, express it in the words of Shelley's Adonais, "from the contagion of the world's slow stain he is secure." I think this is exemplified in a matter that came to my attention this morning, and I would allude to it very briefly. I allude to a bulletin that came from the Democratic National Committee, from the woman's division in New York.

I do so not because of the political implications involved, because, after all, whether it gets a few more votes or less is not of such great importance. But it is important that those who are sitting in high places today are abusing the authority and getting on dangerous ground as they trifle with what is called the moral responsibilities of government.

This bulletin gotten out by the woman's division was listed as an important bulletin. I have a copy of it here if anyone cares to see it. The title is "A New Way to Campaign." That is rather engaging. It comes out under the imprint of Mrs. Thomas F. McAllister, who is head of the woman's division. She says that—

A new way to campaign is to provide slides and films with which to carry on a kind of visual education of the voters and of the democracy of the country.

There is a whole series. This series is addressed to the general subject Seven Years of Progress Under the New Deal.

So long as they manufacture their own films I have no complaint to make, but oddly enough there are listed among these films, five that are gotten out by agencies of the Government, one by the Forestry Service, one by the Tennessee Valley Authority, one by the Rural Electrification Administration, and several by the National Youth Administration; also one by the Public Health Service.

There is a statement in this bulletin which says:

These programs can furnish instructive entertainment for Democratic rallies.

Another statement says:

Let us know if you want to use this method of presenting the New Deal record to citizens of your State.

And finally this—and this is the essential thing about this bulletin—

Films can be secured either from the Washington office or from State directors or State information offices.

Now, give heed to this. I invite, particularly, the attention of my friend the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] to this:

Your request should point out that the film is to be used for educational purposes.

Mr. TERRY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. In just a moment. These films are produced at Government expense. I wonder what happens to the Hatch Act? It seems to me that section 12, as indicated by the Civil Service Commission, which put out a brochure on September 18, indicates the purposes, as follows:

The purpose of section 12 of the Hatch Act is primarily to prevent the use of money of the Federal Government, derived largely from taxes paid by citizens of the United States, in partisan political activity and political campaigns.

That is the basic purpose of the amendments to the Hatch Act, and particularly section 12.

Now, here are some films that have been produced out of taxpayers' funds, out of funds that are derived from the Treasury of the United States. Truly they are educational films, but think of the effrontery of using them for political purposes and then putting in this bulletin that very fetching line:

You should state that your request is based upon an educational purpose.

For instance, there is a film, Trees to Tame the Winds, 20 minutes in length. I suppose for millions of free trees there should be millions of votes. It is gotten out by the Forestry Service. The taxpayers of the country paid the bill to manufacture that film.

There is one called Wasted Waters, or More Power to You, a sound film, which details the story of the Tennessee Valley Authority, paid for with money that has been received from the taxpayers of the country.

There is another film gotten out by the Rural Electrification Administration called Power on the Land. I do not suppose it is guaranteed to say anything about taxes or debt, but ostensibly it carries the electrification program to people everywhere, and is designed to intrigue the attention of the farmers of the country. I do not complain about it. I recognize there is an educational advantage in these films, but the idea of taking films that are paid for by the people of the country and using them for political purposes and for the edification of a political rally, within the terms of this bulletin from Democratic headquarters itself, in my judgment, constitutes one of those "slow stains" that only adds to the long catalog of sins under which we are leeching away the morality and basic integrity of the country.

It is a very clever way, in my judgment, to circumvent the intent and purpose of the Hatch Act. It is rather amusing. If a person purloins or misapplies the property of another to his own purposes, depending upon the amount that is involved, it constitutes larceny; yet it seems to me that here is a use of taxpayers' money to provide educational films for strictly partisan purposes, in violation of the intent and purpose of the Hatch Act, and, in my humble and considered opinion, that constitutes a kind of moral larceny.

It may be very clever, but, in my judgment, it is a kind of unctious hypocrisy; and I allude to it today in line with the observation I made the other day. It may get a few votes, but that is the least important thing, the least important aspect about this whole matter.

When you find that kind of compromise with principle in high places, what can you expect down below? It becomes a matter of rare importance in a feverish hour when we are so unctiously proclaiming the need for a new unity and faith in this country which shall have for its objective the perpetuity of this Republic and its basic principles. And then to find somewhere at the top a specious kind of innovation to circumvent the law I think is fundamental and basic, and I could not let this opportunity go by to draw attention to it, even though there are only a few Members on the floor, because I think it is far too important in its relationship to the basic problems before America today, and that is to keep intact that kind of morality and integrity evidenced by those great men who framed the Constitution and launched this noble experiment in government. Are we going to throw it blindly away? Do we esteem it so lightly that we shrug our shoulders and say, "So what?"—that expression by which we articulate the cynicism of 1940. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short letter from a constituent.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. JENKS of New Hampshire, indefinitely, on account of official business.

To Mr. CRAVENS, indefinitely, on account of official business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, further answering the inquiry of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], I have now ascertained the program for Thursday. If the appropriation bill is passed by tomorrow night, it will be the purpose to adjourn over until Monday.

SENATE ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 3929. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Memphis, Tenn.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, September 26, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1962. A letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting recommendation for the disposition of a list of papers by the Work Projects Administration, Federal Works Agency; to the Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers.

1963. A letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting recommendation for the disposition of a list of motion-picture films by the War Department; to the Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers.

1964. A letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting recommendation for the disposition of lists of papers by the Department of Agriculture; to the Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers.

1965. A letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting recommendation for the disposition of a list of papers by the Department of Commerce; to the Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers.

1966. A letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting recommendation for the disposition of a list of papers by the Work Projects Administration, Federal Works Agency; to the Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers.

1967. A letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting recommendation for the disposition of a list of papers by the War Department; to the Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers.

1968. A letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting recommendation for the disposition of a list of papers by the Treasury Department; to the Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers.

1969. A letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting recommendation for the disposition of lists of papers by the Department of State; to the Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers.

1970. A letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting recommendation for the disposition of a list of papers by the Department of Labor; to the Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers.

1971. A letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting recommendation for the disposition of a list of papers by the Work Projects Administration, Federal Works Agency; to the Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers.

1972. A letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting recommendation for the disposition of a list of papers by the Work Projects Administration, Federal Works Agency; to the Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers.

1973. A letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting recommendation for the disposition of a list of papers by the Federal Trade Commission; to the Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers.

1974. A letter from the chairman, Reconstruction Finance Corporation, transmitting a report to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation covering its operations for the second quarter of 1940, and for the period from the organization of the Corporation on February 2, 1932, to June 30, 1940, inclusive (H. Doc. No. 960); to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. VOORHIS of California: Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation. H. R. 6450. A bill to establish certain rights for combat veterans of wars of the United States; with amendment (Rept. No. 2982). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of rule XXII, the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10562) for the relief of Henry H. Smythe, and the same was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HARTER of New York:

H. R. 10566. A bill to have all schools receiving any Federal moneys, on at least 1 school day during school sessions of each week conduct the pledge of allegiance to the flag of the United States; to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. O'LEARY:

H. R. 10567. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act to exempt yachts, tugs, towboats, and unrigged vessels from certain provisions of the act of June 25, 1936, as amended," approved June 16, 1938; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan:

H. Res. 615. Resolution requesting certain information from the Secretary of War; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. STARNES of Alabama:

H. Res. 616. Resolution to authorize the expenses of investigation authorized by House Resolution 321; to the Committee on Accounts.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BARRY:

H. R. 10568. A bill for the relief of Fisil Rosenberg, his wife Sofie, his daughter Jenny, and his son Jacques; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. BOYKIN:

H. R. 10569. A bill for the relief of Nick Spithogianis; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

H. R. 10570. A bill for the relief of George Spithogianis; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. O'BRIEN:

H. R. 10571. A bill granting a pension to Lena Tenbrook; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

9322. By Mr. CULKIN: Petition signed by the employees of the New York Central Railroad, St. Lawrence division, to amend the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

9323. By Mr. KEOGH: Petition of the Twenty-eighth Ward Taxpayers Protective Association, Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring the building of a superdrydock in Brooklyn, N. Y.; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

SENATE

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1940

(Legislative day of Wednesday, September 18, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the Vice President.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we bless and praise Thee that we have wakened to the light of another day, a day which we may call our own if Thou but share in it. There may be dark and best-forgotten days behind us; do Thou forgive their failure and their sinfulness. There may be trying, testing days ahead, but let them, in their viewless flight, be messengers of help from Thee. And, as we think of what a day should be when in our heart we hear Thy timely mandate, may we ne'er defer our task, to walk in smoother paths, but may we do the present duty as seemeth best to Thee.

Let Thy blessing be upon every Member of the Senate and especially upon our beloved Vice President. Help us all to be manly for God's sake and godly for man's sake, living the life of God among men. May cheerfulness abound with industry as we go blithely on our business all this day, and bring us, loving Father, to our rest, weary and content and undishonored, blest with the gift of sweet refreshing sleep. We ask it in our dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Wednesday, September 25, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE, WAR DEPARTMENT (S. DOC. NO. 292)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation, fiscal year 1941, for the War Department (flood control, general, in Louisiana), amounting to $55,000, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON AWARD OF CERTAIN NAVAL CONTRACTS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, reporting relative to the award of certain naval quantity contracts entered into with more than one bidder under the act of March 5, 1940 (Public, No. 426, 76th Cong., 3d sess.), which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

REPORT OF RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, submitting, pursuant to law, a report covering the operations of the Corporation for the second quarter of 1940 and for the period from its organization on February 2, 1932, to June 30, 1940, which with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. WALSH presented a resolution of the convention of United American Veterans of the United States at Marlboro, Mass., favoring universal military service and training for young men, the enactment of legislation to curb the so-called "fifth column," and the elimination of the Communist Party from the ballot, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a resolution of Chelmsford (Mass.) Post, No. 212, American Legion, protesting against objectors to compulsory military training and service, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a resolution of Boyer-Daniel Post, No. 1561, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, of Arlington, Wash., favoring the employment of regular labor at prevailing wages on the Arlington Municipal Airport project (to be used as an auxiliary naval landing field) and protesting against the use of W. P. A. labor on such project, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a resolution of the City Council of New Bedford, Mass., endorsing the transfer of certain outmoded destroyers to Great Britain in exchange for naval and air bases, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

REELECTION OF PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT; THE NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. GUFFEY presented resolutions adopted by the Pennsylvania Amalgamated Conference to Help Reelect President Roosevelt, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTION ON ROOSEVELT

The Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America has given consistent support to President Franklin D. Roosevelt during the 7 years in which he has been in office. This support was granted to him upon the basis of his election pledges and for the integrity with which he has fulfilled these pledges to the people.

Under President Roosevelt's leadership the Nation has witnessed a series of remarkable social and economic reforms. Outstanding among the achievements of the past 8 years are the social-security program, unemployment insurance, and old-age protection, the Wagner Labor Relations Act, the wage-hour law, the tremendous public power projects, low-rent housing, aid to the farmers, and adequate relief standards for the jobless.

Because we saw the necessity of 4 more years of such progress, the Amalgamated was one of the leaders in the campaign to draft Roosevelt for reelection in 1940. Since this action was taken last May, the steady march of events has borne out the wisdom of our decision. An emergency has arisen which threatens the national safety of our country. The defense program, so auspiciously launched by the President, would suffer serious interruption if a change in administration were effected. Further than that, the crisis makes it imperative that the experienced leadership of Roosevelt be available to the Nation in the critical days ahead.

President Roosevelt has further justified our confidence by his firm declaration that there shall be no encroachment on labor rights or standards because of the defense emergency. That declaration is fully in accord with the philosophy and the record of the man as we know him.

Representing 50,000 members of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America in the State of Pennsylvania, acting in behalf of their families, we hereby pledge that we shall unite our strength with all other labor and progressive groups, giving all our energy and ability to this end: That President Franklin D. Roosevelt will be gloriously returned to office on November 5.

RESOLUTION ON NATIONAL DEFENSE

The tragic experience in the world abroad today has caused the sad realization by peaceable, honest, liberty-loving men and women everywhere of the truth that there is no safety in peacefulness alone. So long as bandit nations roam the hemispheres, right must be reenforced with might if right is to prevail.

It is thus, hating war and all the machinery of war, the people of America grimly begin the task of securing military preparedness. A peace-loving Nation, we must arm for defense with all the resources—human, material, and mechanical—at our disposal.

Our national security will be directly affected by the outcome of the present struggle in Europe. We heartily approve giving material aid to the people of the British Commonwealth of Nations, and we applaud the administration's brilliant achievements for national security exemplified in the results of the Pan-American conferences, the mutual defense pact with Canada, and the acquisition of valuable air and naval bases in the Western Hemisphere.

We believe that the defense effort must be a national effort, calling upon the total genius of the American people, industry, labor, technology, and the professions. The appointment of Sidney Hillman to the National Defense Commission is a recognition of this principle, as well as a guaranty that labor's problems in the defense program will be solved at their point of origin by labor's own representative and outstanding leader.

We welcome President Roosevelt's leadership in this time of crisis and give our wholehearted endorsement to his foreign policy and his swift and competent organization of the defense program.

We pledge him our entire support in this effort to keep the Western Hemisphere safe for democracy.

RESOLUTION OF SOUTH BOSTON LITHUANIAN CITIZENS' ASSOCIATION—INDEPENDENCE AND SOVEREIGNTY OF LITHUANIA

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, one of the small nations of Europe, which has met with a very tragic fate is Lithuania, which first had been deceived and then brutalized by Soviet Russia. In South Boston, Mass., there is a Lithuanian Citizens' Association, which has adopted an interesting and detailed resolution setting forth the facts regarding the fate of this unhappy country. I am sure Senators will read the resolution with interest and sympathy, and I ask that it be appropriately referred and printed in full in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas Lithuania has experienced a crisis which has wiped out its territorial boundaries, and has extinguished its very independent existence at the hands of Soviet Russia;

Whereas history shows that the nations of the world owe Lithuania an expression of gratitude for its part in checking barbarian advances, and fostering the advance of civilization throughout the ages;

Whereas of the 7 new nations appearing upon the map of Europe at the close of the World War, and of the 15 which have been subjugated, dismembered, or obliterated in the last few years, Lithuania is perhaps the oldest racially;

Whereas Lithuania is geographically so located as to be in a most strategic position in eastern Europe;

Whereas said strategic position has made Lithuania the cockpit of eastern Europe, and rendered it the battle arena over many centuries, subjecting its territory to the rigors of every war of major importance;

Whereas its geographic position caused it to suffer greater hardships than any other country during the World War;

Whereas the effects of the World War on its numerical, economic, and financial strength rendered its recovery slower than that of most other nations;

Whereas the League of Nations has guaranteed the independence of small nations;

Whereas governments of democratic form have, by expression or implication, indicated a desire for the continuation of a democratic form of government in nations, irrespective of size;

Whereas Lithuania declared its independence on February 16, 1918, with Vilna as its capital;

Whereas the independent Government of Lithuania has been recognized in fact by all the great nations of the world;

Whereas the efficacy and sanctity of treaties has always been regarded as a means of maintaining peaceful international relations;

Wheres the ultimatum which Soviet Russia issued in September 1939, demanding the privilege of establishing military bases, was enshrouded with the pretense that it was designed to offer Lithuania defense—an unsolicited defense;

Whereas subsequently, Soviet Russia returned to Lithuania about one-fourth of the land which she, herself, in 1920 had acknowledged to belong to Lithuania, retaining the other three-quarters for herself;

Whereas observing the discontent of the residents who had remained on this land, Soviet Russia exiled 10,000 of them to distant parts of Russia, to the anguish and bitter sorrow of relatives who were ruthlessly separated;

Whereas, becoming cognizant of social and economic unrest, Soviet Russia hastened its domination after subjugating Finland, and on June 15, 1940, completed definite occupation;

Whereas, under pretext of taking offense at alleged misconduct of Lithuania in reference to a few Russian soldiers, a charge grossly fabricated, Soviet Russia created an atmosphere of apprehension and summoned the Lithuanian Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs to Moscow;

Whereas on the evening of June 15 Foreign Minister Urbsys received an ultimatum demanding a cabinet favorable to Soviet Russia, and insisting on the privilege to establish an unlimited Russian army of occupation;

Whereas Lithuania, aiming to adopt a conciliatory and placatory attitude to its gigantic neighbor, offered to the popular General Rastikus the task of forming a new cabinet, but Soviet Russia countered by sending Dekanozov to Lithuania to form the cabinet, thus insuring that the popular uncompromising wish for independence, freedom, and liberty be stultified;

Whereas with the cabinet of Dekanozov's making, freedom shrieked, liberty tumbled, for the overpowering Soviet Russian horde, numbering a mechanized army of several hundred thousand, would tolerate no opposition;

Whereas thus was created the Palecki Cabinet, composed almost of its entirety of enemies of Lithuania, the one exception in its membership being made to avoid sudden and damaging reactions to the rate of foreign exchange;

Whereas with the creation of this cabinet came the demise of all political parties having any semblance of democratic principles;

Whereas the only party permitted was the so-called Working People's Party, and consequently balloting and elections became a fantastical fiction, in the face of which a congress was elected on July 14 to perpetuate the fiction, with the outcome being a fanatical alleged majority of 99.19 percent;

Whereas said elections of July 14 gave no opportunity whatsoever for a free expression of popular will, in view of the absence of party delineations and the presence of no alternatives on the ballot;

Whereas on July 21 this so-elected, so-called congress convened in Kaunas, and purported to vote for union with Soviet Rusisa;

Whereas the Under Secretary of State of the United States has deprecated and sorely denounced these atrocities on the part of Soviet Russia under the guise of voluntary self-extinction, and has recalled Minister Owen J. C. Norem for "consultation," issuing a strong note of condemnation simultaneously: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the nations of the world should show their appreciation of Lithuania's contribution to the advance of civilization, and manifest toward Lithuania a helpful and cooperative attitude; and be it further

Resolved, That the nations of the world recognize the depredations of the World War, which caused Lithuania's present lack of strength against Russian odds, and lend Lithuania succor in this its hour of need; and be it further

Resolved, That the nations of the world recognize the legal right of Lithuania to its independence and its legal right to sovereignty; and be it further

Resolved, That the nations of the world make every effort to reestablish the efficacy and sanctity of treaties as a means to peaceful international relations; and be it further

Resolved, That the nations of the world repudiate the doctrine of might being right, whether might take the form of resorting to arms or the circuitous, dubious, and fictitious course of coercion and duress through the appearances of voluntary choice; and be it further

Resolved, That the nations of the world indicate to Soviet Russia their displeasure at its ignoring of its own decrees and acknowledgments of Lithuanian independence and sovereignty; and be it further

Resolved, That the conduct of Soviet Russia in subjugating a nation only a fraction as strong, at a time of general international unrest, imposing on it arbitrary cultural limitations, and undermining its social, economic, religious order is seriously deprecated.

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President, Secretary of State, Members of Congress of the United States, to the Governments of Great Britain, France, Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia, to the League of Nations, to Soviet Russia, and to the press.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. GURNEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4365) to create the grade of aviation cadet in the Air Corps, Regular Army, and to prescribe the pay and allowances therefor, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 2182) thereon.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4370) authorizing the President to appoint an Under Secretary of War during national emergencies, fixing the compensation of the Under Secretary of War, and authorizing the Secretary of War to prescribe duties, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 2183) thereon.

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 1999) to confer jurisdiction upon certain United States commissioners to try petty offenses committed on Federal reservations reported it without amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BARBOUR:

S. 4381. A bill for the relief of the estate of William Sandlass; to the Committee on Claims.

THIRD PRESIDENTIAL TERM—LETTER FROM MILLARD S. SNIDER

[Mr. NEELY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the Appendix a letter addressed to him from Millard S. Snider, dated September 21, 1940, dealing with a third term for President.]

EXTENSION OF CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 960) extending the classified executive civil service of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question before the Senate is the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], as modified.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, the amendment which is at the desk and which has been offered by my distinguished colleague, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], is a most important amendment insofar as this bill is concerned. It is important, in that it may prevent the approval of the bill at this session of the Congress. We have never succeeded, insofar as I know, either in the National Government or in any of the political subdivisions, in securing the enactment of a system such as the Senator proposes.

His amendment would require the holding of wide-open, public competitive civil-service examinations for all the positions in all the categories that are to be filled when the various agencies are taken over by proclamation and brought within the merit system. It could not be done; it would be physically impossible; it would cost too much; it would take too long; and the result would be that the laudable object we are striving to attain, namely, the expansion of the merit system, would be delayed for years.

Mr. President, the distinguished senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], who happens to be absent for the moment, yesterday made some observations on the subject of wide open competitive examination versus noncompetitive examination, and I wish to pay high compliment to him, because I believe he is consistent and that he is in favor of a merit system. His efforts in that connection, so far as I can ascertain, are consistent with the position he took in the Senate yesterday. In answer to his argument that this is the key amendment, as contrasted with my statement made the day before that it is in reality a killing amendment, let me say to the Senator from Michigan that I select for my first witness the leader of an organization which is not concerned with patronage, but was organized primarily and fundamentally to promote and advocate the merit system. Let me quote from the president of the organization known as the National Civil Service Reform League. On its board can be found two distinguished Republicans who were formerly associated with the United States Civil Service Commission, former Commissioners Ordway and White. The question was put to Mr. Kaplan pointedly, and he was asked to state the position of his organization on the question of wide-open competitive examination versus noncompetitive examination, as provided for in the bill, and this is what he said:

I am looking at this from a realistic and an idealistic standpoint. Undoubtedly if you gave the Civil Service Commission a few years within which to do the job and millions with which to hold these examinations, and make them as practical and as real as possible, in order to determine actual ability and potential capacity to perform the work, and if you could get the political organizations on both sides to agree to it, I would say that open competitive examinations would be the ideal way to handle this matter.

He continued:

I have lost my long hair of reform long ago, and I try to view this problem of civil-service reform and extension practically. The history of civil-service reform and extension and the history of the extension of the classified service from exempted to competitive positions, whether in the Federal Government, city government, or State government, has been made almost exclusively by our having to sacrifice the ideal of open, competitive examination in order to get an extension of the civil service going. We have more or less accepted that principle realistically for the reason that if we did not the political party in power, generally having control over the appointees at the time, was utterly reluctant to sweep the incumbents out of office; and unless they could cover them in by qualifying examinations or no examinations at all, we have not gotten anywhere in an effort to extend the civil-service principles.

Mr. President, we have in the pending bill gone further in the approach toward the idealistic than was ever before attempted in a major civil service reform bill.

Let me add to the evidence I have already submitted a statement of what has been done in the State of Michigan, so ably represented by the senior Senator from that State, who spoke so effectively yesterday for the wide-open competitive method:

In Michigan, when they adopted the new law, they adopted the noncompetitive classification plan of giving qualifying examinations to incumbents similarly as provided in the Ramspeck bill. We believe that is the practical way to do it. Of course, it would be possible potentially, I suppose, to hold competitive examinations, open competitive examinations, for all these positions. I daresay it would take many, many years, and the cost involved would be tremendous.

I do not think there can be any real defensible argument made against the approval of this bill from the point of view of the public interest and point of view of morale in the service, and point of view of fairness to those who are serving.

That statement was made by Mr. Kaplan, president of the National Civil Service Reform League, and is included in the hearings before the Senate committee.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I am glad to yield.

Mr. WHITE. Is it not true that in every State save one where there is a civil-service law, and where authority is given to cover positions into the civil service, the noncompetitive examination system is followed?

Mr. MEAD. That is correct. There are three major considerations which should enter into any extension or expansion of civil service to cover exempt or non-civil-service positions, such as those we have included in the pending bill. Those three considerations which we should have in mind are, first, the rights of the public to have uninterrupted and the most efficient service possible from the Government in any of its activities; secondly, the equities of the incumbents of the positions who may be brought into the classified service by Executive order should this bill become a law; third, the maintenance of the merit system.

As I stated a moment ago, while as an individual I might look with favor upon the system recommended in the amendment advocated so effectively by the senior Senator from Michigan, when I look at it from the realistic viewpoint, when I consider the question from a practical standpoint, I am forced, rather reluctantly, to take my position along with the National Civil Service Reform League, the League of Women Voters, the representative organizations of the Federal civil-service employees, and every other organization of note which has studied this question.

When we talk about the realistic, practical viewpoint, we find that it costs the United States Government $1.60 to hold an examination and rate the papers for one individual. Looking at the record we find that the Civil Service Commission holds as many as 1,200 examinations in a year. From the record we find that there are over 2,000 categories of positions in the Federal service, and looking at the record again, having in mind that it costs $1.60 to hold a competitive examination and rate the papers of one individual, 2 years ago there was an examination for customs and immigration inspector and 241,000 citizens took the examination. It took the Civil Service Commission from that time, 2 years ago, until now to get a real start on the rating of the papers. They are not ready yet.

I give another example. Last month there was an examination for stenographers, and 130,000 applicants qualified for the examination. Three or four years ago there was an examination for railway-mail clerk, and over 200,000 tried the examination. The Commission was over a year in the computation of the papers.

If we throw 200,000 positions, representing hundreds of categories, open to the entire public of the United States, there will be not hundreds of thousands but, as I compute it, there will be at least 10,000,000 applicants. There probably will not be a Senator left in the service when all the papers would be finally and eventually graded, and I doubt very much whether the Senate of the United States would give the Civil Service Commission the huge appropriations which would be required.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I am glad to yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator admitted yesterday that with respect to applying noncompetitive examinations to the incumbents of non-civil-service positions that are covered into the civil service 25 to 30 percent of those incumbents always fail and are let out of the service. In order to fill those vacancies, would it not be necessary to call for examinations, and would not applications come from all over the country?

Mr. MEAD. No, Mr. President; it would not be necessary because, under the terms of the bill, and under the practices of the Civil Service Commission, first of all, we would set up a standard form of examination for the employees in a given agency, and if the Civil Service Commission found, as I stated yesterday, that 15 or 20 or 25 percent—25 percent at the most—failed in the examination they would fill the places of those who were separated from the service from the available lists which are now to be found in the Civil Service Commission.

The Civil Service Commission holds hundreds of examinations every year, available to every applicant in the United States; and, in view of that fact, if we covered these agencies within the civil service, we would be giving every available qualified applicant in the United States an equity in perhaps 25 percent of the jobs—an equity they do not now have—and in filling the 25 percent of these jobs, no doubt, the quota law would be followed, so that those jobs would go to the States which are not now enjoying their full quota of jobs. If, for example, the quota of the State of Maine, we will say—a State which is so ably represented by its junior Senator [Mr. WHITE], who is now present in the Senate Chamber—were found to be 25 percent below what it should be, and if the quota of my State were 25 percent in excess of what it should be, the State of Maine would have a more favorable opportunity, under the system set forth in the bill, of securing an equitable distribution or share of civil-service positions.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. Would it not be practicable for the Civil Service Commission to select persons for appointment to these new positions from among the millions who have already taken the examinations, as I pointed out yesterday, and who are now qualified to fill these jobs? We have already spent great sums of money to hold civil-service examinations of various types, in conformity with the present law. Would it not be practicable to make use of that available material? Great numbers of persons are readily obtainable for these positions, having taken and passed the civil-service examinations. I do not see why it is not practicable to take from the present lists persons who have passed the examinations and offer them the jobs which would be vacant if and when the President should decide to place the various departments under civil service.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, under the terms of the Senator's amendment, and as it would be administered, I assume that when the President covered an agency into the civil service its employees would be in the same status as every other person in the United States. We will take, for instance, the Federal Housing Administration. Every man and woman in the Federal Housing Administration, no matter how long he or she had worked there, no matter how meritorious his or her service, no matter how well they had proven their ability and capacity, would be immediately in the same status as any other man or woman in the whole United States, and a wide-open examination would have to be held. The positions could not be filled through noncompetitive examinations, or through the examinations which have already been held, because they would not represent a sufficient number of categories and it would not give everyone in the United States an equal opportunity. Under the plan provided for by my distinguished colleague the Senator from Louisiana everyone in the Federal Housing Administration would be in competition with everyone in the United States, including everyone who had already passed an examination.

Mr. President, such a plan would not work, because it would take too long, it would require the expenditure of too much money, and the examinations could not be held unless they were deferred for a period of years, and the result then would be that no progress whatever would be made.

I think the plan proposed by the bill, which will provide noncompetitive examinations, which will respect seniority, which will respect the equity of the veteran employee, and which will at the same time allow all those who are now on eligible registers an opportunity to enjoy the chance to secure a position in agencies from which they are now barred, is by far the best plan.

Mr. President, I have nothing further to say, except that I trust the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana, as modified, will be rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, as modified, of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER].

Mr. ELLENDER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	Lodge	Shipstead
Andrews	Ellender	McKellar	Smathers
Ashurst	Frazier	McNary	Smith
Austin	George	Maloney	Stewart

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President——

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

Mr. ELLENDER. If the Senator from Maine desires to address the Senate on the pending amendment?

Mr. WHITE. I shall wait until the Senator is through.

Mr. ELLENDER. Does the Senator from Maine desire to address the Senate on the pending amendment, I shall take my seat.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, as one of the minority members of the Civil Service Committee I wish to aline myself with the Senator from New York in the attitude he takes toward the pending amendment.

It seems to me that within the amendment itself is to be found compelling reason for its rejection. When we look at its terms, we find that the amendment provides—

Nor shall the incumbent of any such position—

That is, one of the positions which is authorized to be covered into the civil service by the bill—

Nor shall the incumbent of any such position be retained in such position for a period longer than 6 months after the position is so covered into the civil service unless he is reappointed to such position in accordance with the civil-service laws.

Mr. President, I take it that means that there must first be a covering of the position into the civil service, and then the amendment contemplates that there shall be a competitive examination conducted by the Civil Service Commission of all those holding these positions and all those who might desire to hold the positions.

The amendment provides that no one of these incumbents shall hold office for more than 6 months after the position has been covered into the civil service unless reappointed following a competitive examination by the Commission.

Mr. President, the testimony is that there are probably 200,000 men and women holding these positions which may be covered in under the terms of the bill. I take it that if these 200,000 positions are opened up to competitive examination there will be at the very minimum a million applicants throughout the United States for those 200,000 positions.

The Senator from New York a moment ago said, I believe, that there might well be 10,000,000 applicants for these 200,000 places. That means as a practical proposition that following the covering in of these offices or positions into the civil service the examinations could by no possibility be held and there could be no possibility of grading all the persons who take the examinations within a period of 6 months' time. In other words, if there should be any such number of applicants as we may rightfully expect, it would be an utter impossibility for the papers to be rated and for anyone to be appointed under civil-service laws within the 6 months' period laid down in the amendment, with the result, it seems to me, that every single one of these 200,000 officeholders would automatically lose their positions, because the machinery of the amendment could not be put into effect, and it could not be brought to consummation within that period of 6 months.

On the other hand, Mr. President, if, instead of covering in immediately this entire 200,000, the President proceeded slowly and covered in only one Service, we will say, and that then there should be a call for a competitive examination covering those positions in that Service, and there should then be a rating of the candidates, and there should then be appointments—if that course was followed out with respect to these 200,000 employees, and in respect to the great number—I do not know how many it is, but the great number of offices or positions of all sorts in the governmental service, the operation under this amendment would be running on after every Member of the Senate had died of old age. It seems to me that the amendment is hopelessly faulty in itself.

Mr. President, while I have the floor I wish to say a word about the general question of competitive as against noncompetitive examinations in the circumstances which confront us. I confess that when my attention was first directed to this language I was hostile to the notion of noncompetitive examinations. I was instinctively favorable to the idea of competitive examinations. As I listened to the testimony, and as I have since read the RECORD, I have been brought to the conclusion that the circumstances force us to the provision in the bill for noncompetitive examinations. I have already indicated that if we are to hold competitive examinations for 200,000 positions we shall have such a multitude of applicants, such a multitude of papers to rate, and such complicated machinery to go through that we shall never accomplish that which we are now seeking to accomplish.

Beyond that practical question there is the testimony of men and women who have given their lives to the study of civil-service problems. They are not interested in questions of patronage, but are concerned only with the advantage of the public service. We had the testimony of the Civil Service Commissioners themselves that experience has demonstrated that the method of noncompetitive examinations must be followed if we are to accomplish what is desired. The head of the Civil Service Reform League of the United States gave testimony to the same effect.

I think we ought to disabuse our minds of the thought that noncompetitive examinations are not in truth and fact real tests, because the testimony of the Civil Service Commission and the testimony of the executive officer of the Civil Service Reform League show that as we have in the past covered employees into the civil service, and as we have applied to them noncompetitive examinations, something like 28 or 30 percent have failed to meet the test, and have gone out of the service because of failure to pass the prescribed examination. That demonstrates that the bill does contemplate a real test as to the qualifications of the men and women who are holding the positions. I think it gives assurance that men and women whose merit warrants their continuance in the service will be continued in the service, and that those who cannot meet the tests of fitness will go out of the service, as manifestly they ought to go out of the service.

There may have been "original political sin" in the appointment of many men and women to office without any test as to merit; but those persons have been holding office over the years. Apparently, they have been satisfactorily meeting their obligations in responsible positions in various agencies of the Government. Otherwise, unprotected by civil service, they would be out of the Government service today. I have the definite feeling that when men and women have been in the Government service over the years, and have been doing their work to the satisfaction of those primarily responsible for the conduct of the departments of the Government of the United States, a very definite preference ought to be accorded to them. The burden is upon those who are against the system proposed by this legislation to prove that they ought not to be in the service. Every presumption should be in favor of the fitness of men and women who have faithfully served. Every presumption should work in their behalf and for their continuance in the service.

I have said that the weight of the testimony of those who view the problem objectively is in behalf of the principle of noncompetitive examinations written into the bill. The Civil Service Commission members hold that view, and they are disinterested. They have demonstrated over the years that they are loyal to the best interests of the Government service, and are constantly seeking ways to elevate the standards of the public service. I think we should give heed to the opinions of these officers of the Government. To the same effect is the testimony of the National Civil Service Reform League, which has again objectively studied the subject, and which passes what I may call an objective judgment upon it. The evidence before the committee is that constantly, since we have authorized the covering of employees and of positions into the Federal service, the Government itself has followed the system of noncompetitive examinations, and it has worked to the satisfaction not only of Government employees who may be interested, but of the Civil Service Commission, and I think of all who are familiar with the situation in the Government service.

Beyond the experience of the Federal Government is the experience of the States of the Union which have civil-service laws. The record before the committee brings to our knowledge the fact that of all the States in the Union which have civil-service laws which permit covering employees and positions into the civil service, only one State in the Union does not follow the system of noncompetitive examinations.

Mr. President, upon the record as it has been made I am wholeheartedly in favor of the committee recommendation; and I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana will not receive the approval of the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY obtained the floor.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it always causes me great regret when I find it necessary to oppose an amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana, because I recognize his sincerity in offering not only this amendment but any amendment he offers to any proposed legislation. I acknowledge the wide information he possesses on the subject of civil service.

However, it seems to me it is unwise to deal with the Government employees covered in the bill in a manner different from that in which we have dealt with other Federal employees who have been covered into the Federal service. I do not recall any act of Congress—certainly none since I have been a Member—covering positions into the civil service which did not give recognition to the experience of those who held the positions at the time they were covered into the civil service. In other words, it is bound to be presumed, regardless of the politics of any Government employees, that they are giving satisfactory service to the Government. Otherwise they would not be held in the positions—some of them for 5, 6, 7, or 8 years continuously.

The amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana takes no account whatever of such service. It gives the employees now in the positions no credit for the experience they have had and requires them to enter into competitive examinations with men and women who might be technically better educated along certain lines, who might pass a better historical examination, or who might answer more questions in astronomy or in some other branches of higher knowledge, but who could not have the practical information concerning the operation of the jobs in question which is possessed by the men and women who have been in the positions for years. It seems to be unfair to them. Many of these men and women have been compelled to accept Government positions because of inability to obtain employment elsewhere. I know of many such men and women who are now in the Government service. They have not been recommended by me, for, with the exception of deputy marshals and deputy collectors of internal revenue and now and then an assistant United States attorney, I cannot lay claim to the appointment of anybody in any of the vast branches of the Government involved in the pending legislation. The officials referred to have been eliminated by the amendment adopted yesterday; but, on the whole, they do not amount to very many compared to the 200,000 who would be covered by the bill. Yesterday I expressed some doubt of the wisdom of including assistant United States attorneys under the civil service, though I believe the deputy United States collectors of internal revenue, who have to do with the collection of taxes, whose jobs are really fundamentally nonpolitical, ought to be under the civil service. Because those positions were included in the amendment offered yesterday by the Senator from Louisiana, I voted against the entire amendment.

I believe that we ought to treat the employees proposed to be covered by this bill as we have treated all others who have been covered into the civil service. In cases where employees have been covered into the civil service by acts of Congress or by authority of the President or by proclamation of the President under an act conferring upon him that authority, there has been no complaint as to the wisdom of the policy, the qualifications of the people, or the justice and fairness of the operation of the law.

The pending bill provides, it seems to me, all the safeguards which are necessary. I shall not go into the political significance. I realize that many Members of the Congress consider it desirable to have patronage, but I have always regarded it as a liability and not as an asset, but I am sure that Members of the Senate who have been called upon to make recommendations for United States marshals or deputy marshals or collectors or deputy collectors or United States attorneys, and assistant attorneys have done their level best to choose and recommend men who were qualified, because it is of no value to a Member of the Senate to recommend and secure the appointment of a man or woman to any position who does not possess the qualifications. So self-interest would dictate that Members of the Senate who are consulted about such matters should pick the very best-qualified men and women available. But, after all, Mr. President, our job here is to legislate. I have witnessed, as no doubt all of us have witnessed—and I am satisfied that we are witnessing now—a situation which almost disqualifies us for the legislative duties we are called upon to perform. Because of the condition of unemployment throughout the country, men and women have sought—and rightfully sought—jobs under the Federal Government, and thinking that we have some influence, which is a delusion on their part so far as my knowledge goes—and so far as any influence I have is concerned, it is a delusion—but thinking we do have influence, and that all we have to do is to call up the head of some department or write a letter to some department and that the recommendation which we make either by letter or by telephone will be immediately carried out by the appointment of somebody, countless requests for such recommendations come to us. It has taken me nearly 5 or 6 years to convince some of my constituents that a letter from me to the Tennessee Valley Authority would almost guarantee that they would not be employed. I do not think some of them believe it yet. But I have quit writing any letters to the Tennessee Valley Authority because even if they ought to pay any attention to them, they do not do so, and they cannot do so under the law, for the Congress provided in the act that political considerations should not be taken into account in the employment of men and women to do this great engineering job. I think the Tennessee Valley Authority, whether rightly or wrongly, assumes that anybody who approaches them with a political letter is placing them in an embarrassing situation whereby they may be subject to criticism because, even though they paid no attention to such letter and appointed an applicant for entirely other reasons, the fact that such a letter is on file, I think, frequently is regarded as an embarrassment. So I believe we ought to look at this subject objectively, regardless of whatever effect it may have upon our power or our influence in the appointing of men or women to positions.

This system grew up years ago because in Washington the heads of the departments did not know personally the men and women who are applicants for positions back in the States, and realizing that every Representative and every Senator makes an effort to keep in touch with his people, they thought they might rely upon the better knowledge and more intimate association of Members of the legislative body in the selection of well-qualified men and women. From time to time every since the days of Grover Cleveland we have been gradually moving upward in the matter of the civil service. Now we are undertaking to cover into the civil service or to authorize the President to cover into civil service a number variously estimated at from 150,000 to 200,000 men and women. The bill provides that before a single incumbent in any of these positions may be considered for a permanent appointment the head of the agency must certify that such person has given meritorious service for the 6 months prior to the proposal to appoint him or her to a permanent position. So no incumbent of any job now can even take a noncompetitive examination without the certification of meritorious performance of duty, and after incumbents receive such certification they still have got then to undergo a noncompetitive test examination, designed, notwithstanding their experience, notwithstanding the fact that they may have held the job for years, to show that they are now qualified to hold the position. It seems to me that that is the only requirement we have ever made of any incumbents we have heretofore covered into the classified service. I know it has been true of postmasters. They did not have to have a certificate from the head of the Department that they had given meritorious service; the law presumed that if a person had held a position as postmaster for 4 years or 8 years he was qualified, or otherwise he would not be in the position. Nobody under the law we passed a year or two ago covering postmasters in the civil service was required to certify that postmasters had given acceptable service; it was taken for granted; but, even in spite of that requirement, they had to undergo a noncompetitive examination.

The law has worked satisfactorily. Of course, it has not been satisfactory to those who might want to get positions, who have not been appointed postmasters, who have not been appointed to a position. I do not know of any law that would satisfy or that ever satisfied those who apply and fail in their efforts to secure a definite appointment to a job.

But it seems to me that if this amendment were adopted it would violate the policy the Congress has from time immemorial adopted in the covering of Government employees into the civil service. It sets out a class and treats them in a different manner. It gives them no credit for acceptable performance of duty; it takes into account nothing that they have done.

Most of these positions are not very high-salaried offices. As I said a while ago, many men and women, thousands of them, have been compelled to resort to Government jobs paying smaller salaries than they previously earned in private industry or private enterprise. That situation has come to pass because of the unemployment situation. I have no doubt that many thousands of these employees would prefer to work in private industry and private employment, and, if they could find it or could obtain positions that paid as well or better, they would voluntarily go out of the Government service; I have no doubt of that. In view of the situation, it seems to me unfair to require them to compete with all those who may want jobs who have had no experience and have no expert knowledge, but who might be able to pass some sort of intellectual examination and make a higher grade than the man or woman who holds the position.

For the reasons stated, I hope the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana will not be agreed to. It seems to me it strikes at the very heart of the bill itself. I say this with regret, of course, because of my admiration and friendship for the Senator from Louisiana, but in matters of this sort we have to follow our convictions. So, I sincerely hope that this amendment will be defeated; and that the present employees will not be told that they are less worthy than all the other Government employees who have been covered into the civil service upon proving to the Civil Service Commission that they were worthy of continuance in their positions and were qualified to perform their duties.

In addition to that, I believe that the Civil Service Commission, which is now greatly burdened with examinations growing out of increased Government service, the defense program and other situations with which the Government is faced, would be swamped with so many competitive examinations and the delay would be so great in examining the papers and making out the grades that it would be a long time, many years, before those contemplated by this bill could be finally assured that they had a civil-service status under the law which we had enacted.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I should like to inquire whether there are any more speeches to be made on this amendment. I gave notice yesterday that I desired to address the Senate on another matter. I have withheld any claim for recognition on the theory that this debate would be very brief. If there is to be a vote on the amendment, I have no disposition to interfere with a vote on it, but if there is going to be further prolonged debate, I should like to claim the floor in my own right.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I have nothing further to say, I will say to the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURKE in the chair). The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] has indicated his desire to make further remarks, and he is the only one, so far as the Chair knows.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have no disposition to shut off debate on this amendment, except, if it is going to be prolonged, I myself should like recognition.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, it is not my desire to postpone a vote on this amendment. I am very anxious to dispose of it without further delay. I have listened very attentively to the argument made by my good friend from New York, and to that advanced by my good friend from Maine, and, finally, to the eloquent oratory of my good friend the majority leader. They have added nothing new to the question under consideration. The adoption of my amendment would mean a real merit system for the civil service. It would place every American citizen in the same category by providing that all could compete for these permanent civil-service appointments on an equal footing, and likewise by providing for competitive examinations; the Civil Service Commission would be in a position to select the best available talent to fill the jobs.

The argument is made that it would cost millions of dollars to hold these examinations. The Senator from New York himself admitted that many who have already taken the examinations would be eligible and he further stated that experience has shown that as many as 25 to 30 percent of those who take the noncompetitive examinations fail. Because of those failures I contend it will be necessary in any event to hold examinations for every department. Therefore there is no money to be saved by voting against my amendment.

Mr. President, it would not be conducive to a real merit system to shut the door in the faces of those thousands who have placed faith in our civil-service law, who have gone to the trouble and expense of preparing for and taking the various examinations in the hope of obtaining appointments. Surely they are entitled to consideration when these 200,000 new civil-service positions are created. And undoubtedly it would affect adversely the morale of the 650,000 persons employed under civil service at present who have abided by the civil-service rules and regulations in obtaining their positions within the service to blanket in thousands of political employees who have obtained by political influence a far better status in grade and salary than a good many who have been in the service for years.

Certainly the proponents of the bill cannot maintain that the blanketing under civil service of thousands of political appointees is consistent with a sound merit system, even though there is a provision for a noncompetitive examination. There is no merit to a system which gives permanent Government employment to thousands of persons who owe their jobs not to what they know, but rather to whom they know. No true advocate of the merit system would condone such a flagrant violation of the Civil Service Act as is being attempted by the bill presently under consideration. Mr. President, it is not honest for the two great political parties of our country to prate and preach and talk to the high heavens about establishing a true merit system within the entire Federal service, while at the same time no genuine attempt is being made to bring about that condition, but on the other hand, legislation is being put through the Congress to put the stamp of approval on political appointments. Let us at least be consistent about the merit system. Let us either be for it or against it. We should not, in all honesty, want civil service to apply after our friends have been blanketed in. The time to apply it is before the appointments are made, not after. For it will mean that these political appointees, who have thus become annointed with the life tenure of civil service, will continue in office for 10 or 20 or 30 years, before the vacancy can be filled on a merit basis. Just think of that, Senators—we are not being asked by the proponents of the pending bill to vote for the immediate inauguration of the civil service in these various Government departments and agencies—instead, we are being asked to vote it into effect some 5 and 10 and 20 and 30 years from now—depending on just how long these political appointees enjoy good health.

Mr. President, my amendment does not prevent the President from placing all of the departments of government under civil service. The effect of it is simply that if he should order any non-civil-service department under civil service, then the civil-service law as written must be observed. That is all it is intended for, and I think that is fair and, if adopted, will mark a momentous milestone for a genuine merit system. I do hope that the Senate will adopt the amendment.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the demand sufficiently seconded?

Mr. ELLENDER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Burke	Clark, Mo.	George
Andrews	Byrd	Connally	Gerry
Austin	Byrnes	Danaher	Gillette
Bailey	Capper	Davis	Green
Barbour	Caraway	Downey	Guffey

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER].

Mr. ELLENDER. I renew my request for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRNES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], who is unavoidably absent. I am advised, however, that if present, he would vote as I intend to vote, and therefore I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. PEPPER (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SHIPSTEAD (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I am informed that if present, he would vote as I intend to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. STEWART (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN], which I transfer to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DAVIS. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER]. I understand that if present, he would vote as I intend to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. McKELLAR. I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS]. I am not advised how either Senator would vote, if present. I vote "yea."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] is absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER], the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], the Senators from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS and Mr. SLATTERY], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] are detained in a meeting of the Committee on Finance.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE] is detained in a conference in one of the Government departments. I am advised that if present and voting he would vote "nay."

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER]. I am advised that if present and voting, the Senator from Maryland would vote "yea," and the Senator from Arkansas would vote "nay."

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] is unavoidably detained on official business. He has a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] has a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS].

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] is necessarily absent. If present he would vote "yea." He has a pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER].

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] is paired on this question with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. If present, the Senator from Vermont would vote "yea," and the Senator from Mississippi would vote "nay."

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. THOMAS] has a general pair with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND] is detained in committee meeting.

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 48, as follows:

YEAS—17

So Mr. ELLENDER'S amendment was rejected.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I have a few amendments which I have submitted to the able Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] and to which he has agreed. I shall ask that the first amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMATHERS in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 22, after the word "prescribe", it is proposed to insert a colon and the following:

Provided, That any such incumbent shall be given only one such noncompetitive examination.

Mr. ELLENDER. That amendment is self-explanatory. It provides that only one noncompetitive examination shall be available for any incumbent. If incumbents fail these examinations, they are to be released within 6 months under the terms of the bill. The language of the measure is not specific as to whether or not an incumbent can be given another examination if he fails the first. The present amendment covers this loophole. The investigations which I have conducted into the civil-service system have revealed that sometimes, when incumbents are blanketed into the civil service by noncompetitive examinations, a person is given two and three and even four chances to qualify. Nobody should expect more than one chance to qualify. All an incumbent has to do is to make a passing grade, and if he cannot do so on the first try, then the Government service is no place for him. This amendment should be adopted by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ELLENDER. I present another amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 12, line 3, beginning with the comma after the word "amended", it is proposed to strike out down to and including "law", in line 11.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, the purpose of that amendment is to insure that after the positions in any department are classified, all employees shall receive salaries within the salary range of their particular grade.

Under the bill as now written there could be a difference of salaries. One employee in grade CAF–2 might receive $1,800, while the other in the same grade is limited to $1,680, which is the maximum allowed for that grade under the Classification Act. The bill provides:

Except that if an officer or employee is receiving compensation in excess of the maximum rate prescribed for the appropriate grade, no change by reason of this fact shall be made in his existing compensation so long as he continues to occupy the same office or position, but the office or position shall be correctly allocated and when it becomes vacant the compensation attached thereto shall be brought within the compensation schedule, in accordance with existing law.

It can readily be seen that such a provision would cause injustices and jealousies in many instances. I submitted my amendment to the Senator from New York and he agreed to accept it. It is a worth-while amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ELLENDER. I present another amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 13, line 6, to strike out the words "or more"; on the same page 13, line 7, to strike out the word "and" and in lieu thereof insert a comma and the words "one of"; and on page 13, line 8, after the word "concerned", to insert a comma and the following: "and the third member to be designated by the employees of the Department concerned in such manner as may be determined by the Civil Service Commission."

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, the purpose of that amendment is that in the composition of these boards the Civil Service Commission shall be represented, the department affected shall be represented, and the employees shall be represented.

As the bill was reported by the committee, the Civil Service Commission was assured of representation on the board by the selection of its chairman, and the department was assured of representation on the board because it could appoint the other members, but there was no provision made for employee representation. Civil-service investigations held by a committee of the Senate of which I am chairman, revealed that a great deal of the complaints that arise in the various departments is brought about by suspicion on the part of the employees, and likewise by high-handed tactics employed by some of the department chiefs and supervisors. If the employees are to have any confidence in the actions of these boards of review, they must have representation thereon. Likewise, by having representation on the board, the tendency on the part of the department chiefs and supervisors to take advantage of employees under them will be lessened to a considerable degree. The adoption of this amendment will have a wholesome effect on the civil-service employees in all departments, and I recommend its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ELLENDER. I send to the desk another amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 13, line 17, after the period, it is proposed to insert the following new sentence:

At such hearing such employee and his representative, and such representatives of the department as may be designated by the head thereof, shall be afforded an opportunity to submit orally or in writing any information deemed by the board of review to be pertinent to the case, and shall be afforded an opportunity to hear or examine, and reply to, information submitted to such board by other parties.

Mr. ELLENDER. The purpose of that amendment is to afford an opportunity to an employee who has submitted a complaint to the board to present witnesses or present facts in support of his or her case, and the board, of course, would take such matters into consideration in rendering a decision. That, I may say, will afford a method to cure quite a few of the evils which now exist in the civil service.

Likewise, the amendment will insure the employee the right to be present when any representative of the department appears before the board or presents evidence to substantiate the department's position. As some departmental boards of review now operate in cases involving disciplinary actions, the employee is forced to present his case in writing; then the bureau chief makes answer, after reading the reply submitted by the employee, and the case is decided by the department head. Obviously the employee has little or no chance under such procedure. He never knows what the bureau chief says about him; he never gets a chance to refute statements that may be made against him; and all in all, a condition of suspicion and mistrust is engendered in the employees, and as a result they have little or no confidence in their superiors. The pending amendment will do away with that condition, insofar as these boards of review are concerned. It is to be noted that these boards of review apply only to cases involving efficiency ratings. I believe they should apply in the cases of any employee complaints or grievances, no matter what the nature. And I take this opportunity to advise the Senate, and especially my esteemed colleague the Senator from New York, who is an ardent supporter of the merit system, that I intend to propose such a bill to the Senate in the near future, and I trust that it will have his support.

I may further state that the board of review herein established fulfills one of the recommendations that was intended to be made to the special committee of the Senate to investigate certain phases of the civil service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to insert at the proper place in the bill the following:

Provided, That the Civil Service Commission shall not require the submission with examination papers on examinations ordered or conducted by said Commission, the photograph of the applicant and identification shall be made by use of fingerprints, or otherwise except by photograph.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator means the Civil Service Commission, does he not?

Mr. MINTON. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, may the amendment again be stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be Stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to insert at the proper place in the bill the following:

Provided, That the Civil Service Commission shall not require the submission with examination papers on examinations ordered or conducted by said Commission, the photograph of the applicant and identification shall be made by use of fingerprints, or otherwise except by photograph.

Mr. MINTON. In other words, Mr. President, the amendment provides simply that identification shall not be required to be made by photograph. We have heard a great deal said here, especially by the Senator from Louisiana, about discriminations against some people because perhaps of their age, or their lack of beauty, or this, that, and the other, which might be revealed by a photograph. So, Mr. President, the purpose of the amendment is simply to get away from this advantage which is given to some people by reason of their photographs.

We also know that Negroes, by way of illustration, are discriminated against, and older people are discriminated against, because their photographs reveal their race or their age, and that ought not to happen in the civil service.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. The Senator said, "We all know," as I understood him, and I think I heard him correctly. He said, "As we all know, Negroes have been discriminated against." Let me hasten to say for the RECORD that I do not know that Negroes have been discriminated against by the Civil Service Commission. Does the Senator from Indiana mean, as a statement of fact, that the Civil Service Commission has discriminated against Negroes?

Mr. MINTON. I want to modify my statement by excluding the Senator from Connecticut. I do not know what he knows. [Laughter.]

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. Speaking of photographs, I think I promised the distinguished Senator to show him a few photographs of the parties named in debate yesterday, a Miss Adair and a Mrs. Smithers. Here they are. The Senator will notice the contrast.

Incidentally I may state that the departmental head involved was asked by me why it was that he selected Mrs. Smithers as his secretary, a CAF–3 and promoted her to CAF–6, instead of appointing Miss Adair, who was in line for promotion and a CAF–5. He answered, in effect, "Why, Senator, I have nothing against Miss Adair, she is a fine stenographer, but she cannot answer the telephone as well as Mrs. Smithers." [Laughter.] Moreover he said, "My office is often visited by Senators and Congressmen and it is advisable that I have an affable lady to receive them." [Laughter.]

Mr. MINTON. I simply wanted to say, after looking at the photographs, that they bear out what I said with respect to the purpose of my amendment. The amendment ought to be adopted because photographs should not play any part in the matter. One might be misled by photographs.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I should like to know if the Senator from Indiana actually charges on the Senate floor that the Civil Service Commission discriminates against Negroes as the result of seeing the pictures accompanying the applications or the examination papers?

Mr. MINTON. No; I do not think the Civil Service Commission has anything to do with it.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. I wish to say to the able Senator from Indiana that I have an amendment similar to the one he sent to the desk. I intended to offer it, but I am very glad to accept his amendment. I think it provides an act of justice, and it ought to be adopted.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I do not understand that the Senator from New York can accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana on behalf of the rest of us. I should like to have the amendment put to a vote.

Mr. MEAD. I accept it so far as I am concerned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON].

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I should like to be recognized to speak with respect to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut is recognized.

Mr. DANAHER. As I understand, the Senator from Indiana gave as the ground for his amendment that there is discrimination somewhere arising from the fact that photographs are required to be submitted at the time examinations are held. It becomes perfectly apparent on the face of it that the reason for the amendment is that there has been an unfair discrimination under the so-called merit system. It means that there have been many instances of discrimination, and that heads of departments are quite well aware of the fact. I wanted to know whether the Senator from Indiana felt that there was any such necessity and ground for the action contemplated by the amendment. Putting the question to him in that fashion he denied there was any such ground; that the Civil Service Commission had not discriminated against anybody. If that be the fact, the amendment ought to be rejected, there being no ground for it, and no evidence established, either in the hearings or otherwise, that there is such discrimination.

Mr. MINTON. All I want to do is to make it more difficult to discriminate against anyone by reason of photographs being required, and I wish to know how the Senator from Connecticut will vote on that matter, that is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. — (a). In appointing, or fixing requirements with respect to the appointment of, persons to any civil position in the Government service no officer or employee of any executive department, independent establishment, or agency (including Government-owned, Government-controlled corporations) of the United States shall discriminate against any applicant, or deny to any applicant the privilege of taking any competitive examination held for the purpose of determining the qualifications of applicants for such position, because such applicant (1) has not been graduated from a particular school; (2) has not been graduated from a school which has been approved or accredited, or assigned a particular rating or classification, by any association, organization, or group; or (3) is not a member of any professional, technical, or other society or association.

(b) No sums appropriated or allocated for the payment of salaries and expense accounts of officers and employees of the executive department, independent establishments, and agencies of the United States shall be available to pay the salary or expense account of such officer or employee who violates the provisions of this section.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to ask the Senator whether or not I correctly understand his amendment. As I understand, it would prevent a lawyer seeking employment in a legal capacity in the Government from being discriminated against because of the fact that he was not a graduate of the Harvard Law School, or one of Frankfurter's boys.

Mr. HATCH. In answer to the Senator from Missouri, I will say that the amendment is one which has already been adopted by the Senate in a separate bill introduced by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD]. The purpose of the amendment is not to discriminate against the Harvard Law School. The amendment is of more serious import and purpose. It is to prevent building up within the civil service, or in any other department of Government, a caste system. I have consulted with the chairman of the committee [Mr. BULOW], the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD], and also with Mr. RAMSPECK, of Georgia. All are agreeable to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the Senator desire to offer an amendment?

Mr. NEELY. That is the purpose for which I addressed the Chair.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is it an amendment which is likely to provoke considerable debate?

Mr. NEELY. It is my hope that the obvious propriety of the amendment will impel the Senate to adopt it without discussion.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. In view of the fact that I have yielded for a number of amendments which I was assured would not precipitate any debate, but which nevertheless have precipitated much debate, I do not feel justified in yielding to the Senator from West Virginia unless I can have the assurance of the Senator that if the amendment shall precipitate debate he will not press it, and will allow me an opportunity to address the Senate.

Mr. NEELY. That assurance, so far as I am concerned, is now given to the able and beloved Senator from Missouri.

Mr. President, in behalf of justice to the colored people, I move to amend the bill on page 12, in line 8, after the word "position" by inserting the following: "Without regard to race, creed, or color".

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, may the amendment be stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that the part of the bill which the Senator is seeking to amend has been stricken out; so he would have to move to insert his amendment somewhere else.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, for the last hour I have been conferring with constituents in the reception room, and was not aware of the fact that the section in question had been stricken from the bill.

But there are remaining sections which should be amended in order to protect the colored race against the possibility of discrimination in the administration of the law.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NEELY. I yield to the able Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. I took up the question which the Senator has in mind and had prepared by the drafting service an amendment which gives the correct page and line. Will the Senator offer it?

Mr. NEELY. I am very much obliged to the Senator from New Mexico for having had done in an orderly manner what I am striving to do on the spur of the moment, because I did not discover the necessity for this amendment until a spokesman for the colored people directed my attention to the matter just before I entered the Senate Chamber.

Mr. President, the amendment which the Senator from New Mexico has so kindly supplied me is apparently sufficient to accomplish all that I was seeking to achieve, and I now propose it and urge its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 10, between lines 7 and 8, it is proposed to insert the following new subsection:

(e) In carrying out the provisions of this title, and the provisions of the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, there shall be no discrimination against any person, or with respect to the position held by any person, on account of race, creed, or color.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that that is a part of another amendment, the other part of which was offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], both parts of which I had intended to offer. Therefore I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. NEELY. I thank the Senator from New York, and again urge the Senate to adopt the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I find it necessary to leave the Chamber in the next few minutes. I have an amendment which I am sure will provoke no discussion.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma for that purpose.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. On page 2 of the bill, in lines 9 and 10, I offer an amendment striking from those lines the words "or connected with." The amendment relates to the provisions of the bill as applied to the Works Progress Administration. I am advised that the Senator in charge of the bill [Mr. MEAD] has no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, in lines 9 and 10, it is proposed to strike out the words "or connected with."

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for the purpose of directing an inquiry to the Senator from New York?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. Will the Senator from New York explain to us why he included the words "or connected with" in lines 9 and 10 on page 2, which words the Senator from Oklahoma now wishes to eliminate?

Mr. MEAD. Those words came over in the House bill, and they were to cover certain agencies which were part and parcel of the W. P. A. Take, for instance, the case of the National Youth Administration. At one time, before the reorganization which separated it from the W. P. A., it was part of the W. P. A., and it was evidently the desire of the framers of the bill in the House to eliminate W. P. A. and everything connected with W. P. A.; but we find that in the General Accounting Office there are certain positions which have been filled for several years, and that unless that language is stricken from the bill employees in those categories will be denied an opportunity of being covered into the civil service by noncompetitive examinations. It may be that at times they work on W. P. A. accounts, and at other times they work on national-defense accounts. It was the desire of our committee to strike out those words, and some time ago there was presented to me by the able Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] an amendment which would strike out those words. I now understand that the able Senator from Oklahoma is presenting the amendment which was to be presented by the Senator from Georgia, and I am glad he has presented it. I hope it will be agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this amendment, if agreed to, would permit the Division of Accounts, the Disbursing Division, and the Procurement Division of the Treasury to be included in the bill. I am offering the amendment at the request of officials of the Treasury Department.

Mr. DANAHER. I notice in the list of employees accredited to the W. P. A. a total of approximately 35,000 in administrative positions. Does the Senator from Oklahoma know whether or not those included in that total are covered in any way by the language referred to?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is not so intended.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator from Oklahoma.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I have an amendment which I am confident will not provoke extended debate.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. NYE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 4, after line 4, it is proposed to insert the following:

(c) That from and after the effective date of this act, and prior to June 30, 1946, any person who shall have served as an employee in the legislative, executive, independent, or other branches, establishments, or agencies of the Government for a period or periods totaling in all 15 years or more, shall acquire upon such tests of fitness as the Civil Service Commission may prescribe, a classified civil-service status for transfer to a position in the classified civil service, notwithstanding any contrary provisions of the civil-service laws or regulations: Provided, That the service of any such person in those offices, positions, or services specifically mentioned in paragraph (d) of section 3 of this act shall not be included in computing the total period or periods of any such person's service in the Government.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, in brief, the purpose of the amendment is that of accomplishing a civil-service status for the limited number of employees who at one time or another have been employed in the legislative branch particularly. I have in mind specific cases of long service to Members of the Senate or committees of the Senate, the employee having transferred from that service to another service in the Government which is noncivil service. I am sure that the performance of 15 years of service is entitled to a status under the pending legislation. That is what I am proposing to accomplish by the amendment.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, the amendment would not do any injury to the bill. In fact, it would strengthen the legislative employees' paragraph. I am willing to accept it and take it to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated. I have shown it to the Senator in charge of the bill [Mr. MEAD]. I ask that it be inserted in the bill at the proper place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

(f) No person now employed by the Federal Government shall be discriminated against because of his place of residence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. MALONEY. I should like to ask the Senator from Maryland what effect his amendment would have on existing civil-service law.

Mr. TYDINGS. It would have none, because the employees referred to are already employed. In fact, if the amendment were not put into the bill, no one who is now employed would be affected under the legislation as it now stands. The amendment is only to take care of those who have been working for some time with the Federal Government, so that they will not be discriminated against because of their place of residence. If the amendment does not go into the bill, they will not be discriminated against anyway, in the judgment of the Senator in charge of the bill and myself; but I have offered the amendment to make sure, not for the future, but for the present, that no one now working will be put out because of his place of residence.

Mr. MALONEY. Can the Senator tell me whether or not the amendment would have any destructive effect upon the existing quota system?

Mr. TYDINGS. It would have no effect whatever, because the employees referred to are already working, and the amendment does not apply to the future.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS].

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I do not wish this amendment to be adopted by unanimous consent. I have no desire to debate it or prolong the discussion, but I was opposed to striking out the Nichols-Keller amendment. Therefore, I am opposed to putting the converse of the proposition in the affirmative form. I merely wish to be recorded as against the amendment.

The matter was thrashed out the other day in connection with the Nichols-Keller amendment. I have no disposition to go over the same ground again; but I wish to be recorded as against the amendment.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, this amendment affirmatively states the position taken by our committee when we struck out the Nichols-Keller amendment; so I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS].

The amendment was agreed to.

DOWN ON THE FARM

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, someone has sent me a poem entitled "Down on the Farm." The name of the author is not given, and I do not know who wrote the poem, but whoever wrote it knew the farm situation. I ask unanimous consent to have the poem read from the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the poem will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

DOWN ON THE FARM

Down on the farm 'bout half past four
I slip on my pants and sneak out of the door;
Out of the yard I run like the dickens
To milk 10 cows and feed the chickens,
Clean out the barn, curry Nancy and Jiggs,
Separate the cream, and slop the pigs,
Work 2 hours, then eat like a Turk,
And, by heck, I'm ready for a full day's work!

Then I grease the wagon and put on the rack,
Throw a jug of water in an old grain sack,
Hitch up the horses, hustle down the lane—
Must get the hay in, for it looks like rain.
Look over yonder! Sure as I'm born,
Cattle on the rampage and cows in the corn!
Start across the medder, run a mile or two,
Heaving like I'm wind-broke, get wet clear through.
Get back to the horses, then for recompense,
Nancy gets a-straddle of the barbed-wire fence.
Joints all a-aching and muscles in a jerk,
I'm fit as a fiddle for a full day's work!

Work all summer till winter is nigh,
Then figure up the books and heave a big sigh.
Worked all year, didn't make a thing;
Got less cash now than I had last spring.
Now, some people tell us that there ain't no hell,
But they never farmed, so how can they tell?
When spring rolls 'round I take another chance,
While the fringe grows longer on my old grey pants,
Give my s'penders a hitch, my belt another jerk,
And, by heck, I'm ready for another year's work!

LABELING OF WOOL PRODUCTS—TRUTH IN FABRIC—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President——

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for the purpose of suggesting the absence of a quorum?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator from Wyoming desires to present a unanimous-consent request to take up a conference report which, of course, he is privileged to do at any time. But the Senator from Wyoming has very kindly agreed that if unanimous consent is given, he will consent to lay the conference report aside for the purpose of permitting me to address the Senate. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming for that purpose.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on Senate bill 162.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Is that question debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not debatable. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I understand the motion is not debatable, but I want to confirm what was said by the Senator from Missouri, that if the motion shall be agreed to, I shall then ask that the conference report be laid aside for the present and ask that it be taken up for consideration at some later time.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I have no objection to taking up the report at the proper time. It occurs to me that if the report should now come before the Senate it would displace the regular business. The report will take some time for discussion; I cannot say how long, but it will take some time. I repeat, I have no objection to taking up the report at the proper time, but I think the report should be considered at some length, because it has not had consideration heretofore.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma object? Otherwise, the Chair will put the question.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I object to the report being laid before the Senate for consideration at this time. I will have no objection if we can agree upon a time for taking it up. In that event, there would be no objection on my part, I assure the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, this is a highly privileged motion; I am entitled to make it; and I am stating that, if the motion shall be agreed to, the report will be laid aside and not interfere with the other business that is pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wyoming.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (S. 162) to protect producers, manufacturers, distributors, and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured wool products, and for other purposes.

Mr. NYE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. May I inquire what motion is pending before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is the very question I brought up. The conference report is now the unfinished business.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I ask unanimous consent that the conference report be laid aside temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Reserving the right to object, I am on the floor at this time, but I cannot be here later, and I do want to be here when the report is considered. So, until I can have some assurance as to when the report is to be considered, I shall have to object.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I discussed this matter with the Senator from Oklahoma a while ago, and he told me that it was necessary for him to be away from the Senate this afternoon; that he was going downtown, and I assured him the report would not come up. We had also a further understanding that it would not come up prior to a call for a quorum. So the Senator from Oklahoma will be given plenty of opportunity to come in.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I might be at the Department when the quorum is called; so that would not be satisfactory. If I can have assurance that the report will not be brought up today, that would satisfy me.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then, Mr. President, if there is objection, I will claim the floor for debate on the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I must object.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then I ask for recognition on the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. NYE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Bailey	Bulow	Capper
Andrews	Barbour	Burke	Caraway
Ashurst	Barkley	Byrd	Chavez
Austin	Bilbo	Byrnes	Clark, Idaho

Clark, Mo.	Hayden	Neely	Stewart
Connally	Herring	Norris	Taft
Danaher	Hill	Nye	Thomas, Idaho
Davis	Holt	O'Mahoney	Thomas, Okla.
Downey	Hughes	Overton	Thomas, Utah
Ellender	Johnson, Calif.	Pepper	Tobey
Frazier	Johnson, Colo.	Pittman	Townsend
George	La Follette	Radcliffe	Tydings
Gerry	Lodge	Reed	Van Nuys
Gillette	McKellar	Schwartz	Wagner
Green	McNary	Schwellenbach	Walsh
Guffey	Maloney	Sheppard	Wheeler
Gurney	Mead	Shipstead	White
Harrison	Minton	Smathers	Wiley
Hatch	Murray	Smith

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri obtained the floor.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. As I anticipated, the pending business is the adoption or rejection of the conference report on Senate bill 162. The Senate having voted to take up the conference report, it is now the unfinished business, and it is the pending business.

I doubt if those who are interested in the civil-service bill desire voluntarily to relinquish their rights for a discussion of an extraneous matter; and I hope the report may not be taken up at this particular time. I think the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ] will be agreeable that the report shall not be taken up today; and, if he has no objection, I ask unanimous consent that the report be not further considered during this day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I am not a stickler for language; but I should prefer to have the understanding that the special order of business be temporarily laid aside. I assure the Senator from Oklahoma that it will not be called up today, and that I shall hope to be able to get it up some time tomorrow. Is that satisfactory?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is entirely satisfactory. I want to be present when it is considered; that is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request submitted by the Senator from Oklahoma? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

TRANSFER OF DESTROYERS AND AIRPLANES

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, on yesterday the Senate listened to an extremely informative and illuminating discussion by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] upon the question of the disposition of the so-called flying fortresses by the United States Government. I desire to discuss briefly today the whole question involved in the transfer to any foreign power of weapons needed by the United States for its own defense, either with congressional consent or, more particularly, without congressional consent. I think this question, as presented by the Senator from Massachusetts on yesterday, is one of the most important questions that ever confronted the American people, because it is a question of the Government of the United States, with or without legislative authority, taking another step directly into the path of war, and calculated to denude the United States of its most vital defenses.

I purpose to refer somewhat today to the disposal of the 50 United States destroyers, not for the purpose of thrashing over old straw and not for the purpose of needlessly discussing something that cannot be undone. The President of the United States himself, at the time he sent to Congress the notification of what he had done I think used the expression that it was a fait accompli. If he did not himself use the expression, his newspaper apologists did. I prefer to use the description that it was a coup d'etat, because a coup d'etat means a transfer of fundamental governmental authority by revolutionary processes without proper governmental procedure.

Nevertheless, Mr. President, if that were the end of the matter—if this transfer of 50 destroyers were to be the end of the course—we might all regard it as something that has already been done, and we might abide our souls in such patience as possible, for the reason that nothing could actually be done about it because the destroyers—one-seventh of our Navy, the senior Senator from Massachusetts says—had already been transferred to a foreign power. But, Mr. President, we have been put upon public notice that this is not the end, that this is merely the beginning of the course to war which not only is calculated to take us into a conflict in which we have no direct concern but is calculated at the same time to denude us of our most vital and essential defenses before the new defense program, for which we all voted upon the recommendation of the President, can be fairly put under way. I say we have been put upon notice because we have been put upon notice from the same sources that originated the destroyer deal, that came down and overcame executive and legislative resistance to it, that overrode the opinion of the naval authorities of the United States, the Assistant Secretary of the Navy and the Chief of Naval Operations, expressed to the Naval Affairs Committee of this body not 2 months before the feat was accomplished. So I say that when we have notice from the same sources that they now propose to turn over to a foreign power our great flying fortresses, the most vital air defense of the United States, a force which might save the United States if unfortunately we were put into a war before the consummation or even the approximate consummation of the present defense program; when we are notified in advance in the newspapers that it is proposed to transfer that great fleet of flying fortresses; when we know that there will then be a demand that we transfer to a foreign power under such circumstances that it might fall into the hands of a prospective enemy, possibly the most vital military secret that the United States has ever had, the secret of the aerial bomb sight; when we know that there will then be a demand for the transfer of the so-called mosquito fleet now under construction, the beginning of it just beginning to come into commission, denominated by naval authorities as possibly the most vital possible force for the defense of American harbors in case of an invasion, I think it is well that we stop and look into this matter of the great propaganda engine which is trying to control this country and which has been very largely controlling it in its recent foreign policy.
